VOLUME XXVI, PART VII.

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD,

FIFTY-THIRD CONGRESS, SECOND SESSION.

Mr. PERKINS. I ask the Senator from Missouri if it is not now advisable to strike out paragraph 213*a*?

Mr. VEST. I am obliged to the Senator from California. I had intended to make the motion to strike out the present paragraph 213*a* and make the next paragraph 213*a*.

Mr. ALLISON. The effect of that will be simply to put currants under the general clause of 20 per cent.

Mr. WHITE. No; it will not.

Mr. PERKINS. No; it will make currants 1½ cents a pound.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator refers to the words "including Zante currants" in paragraph 217. I understand that currants are 20 per cent ad valorem in paragraph 213*a*, and Zante currants in paragraph 217 are a cent and a half a pound.

Mr. PERKINS. By striking out paragraph 213*a*, Zante currants will be left at a cent and a half a pound. Zante currant is the commercial name for almost all the currants which come from the Levant, from Turkey, and from Greece. I think the word "Zante" should be stricken out, and the word "dried" substituted therefor. That would embrace all varieties of currants.

Mr. ALLISON. I am not sure whether that would put them on the free list or in the basket clause at 20 per cent ad valorem, because the designation "Zante currants" only includes one kind of currants. I care nothing about it. I am willing to put them on the free list, or to make them all half a cent a pound.

Mr. PERKINS. Does the Senator desire to make them all half a cent a pound?

Mr. ALLISON. Whether green or dried.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the Senator from Missouri proposes to strike out clause 213*a*, I shall have something to say about it. If he leaves it as it is, after the vote just taken, I shall say no more about it. What is the question now pending?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri will please state his proposition.

Mr. VEST. I move to strike out paragraph 213*a*, lines 8 and 9, on page 48, and to make the next paragraph 213*a* instead of 213*b*.

Mr. SHERMAN. On that motion I desire to submit some remarks.

Mr. FRYE. Does the Senator from Missouri intend to place currants anywhere else in the bill?

Mr. VEST. Of course they will come under the basket clause. It does not change the duty.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, the vote taken when I was absent temporarily fixing a duty of 1½ cents a pound on Zante currants seems to me a gross injustice to a country with which we have considerable commerce, and with which we have an increasing commerce.

I have some facts, which I have received from the representatives of that Government in respect to Zante currants. If the statements are true—and I have no doubt they are, because they are verified from the market quotations in the city of New York—it is a grossly outrageous duty on what is commonly called the raisin of the poor. The statement I have shows conclusively that Zante currants are now quoted in the market of New York at about 1¼ cents a pound. This, therefore, would be a duty of 125 per cent upon Zante currants, which are imported in large quantities, and which are used mainly by the poor people in their puddings, etc., as a substitute for raisins. Large quantities of currants of that kind are imported. I shall read what is said here in a communication which I have before me:

CONSULATE-GENERAL OF GREECE,
33 SOUTH WILLIAM STREET,
New York, May 12, 1894.

SIR: In the tariff amendments just presented in the United States Senate (article 217), I notice that a duty of 1½ cents per pound is put on Zante currants, which are produced exclusively in Greece.

This enormous duty is equivalent to 125 per cent ad valorem, the average price of currants in Greece being about 1¼ cents per pound. They are selling now in New York from 1¼ to 1½ cents per pound.

Zante currants, now on the free list, are taxed 10 per cent ad valorem by the House bill. In the Senate bill the duty was increased to 20 per cent; then the Finance Committee increased it to 30 per cent, and now in the amended bill a specific duty of 1½ cents per pound is put thereon, equal to 125 per cent ad valorem,

And yet it is a fact that Zante currants do not come into competition with any product of this country. A small raisin produced in California has nothing whatever to do with the Zante currants of Greece.

We only demand justice. We do not compete with your products. We buy in the United States every gallon of petroleum that is consumed in Greece, as well as all our agricultural implements, and yet it is proposed to tax at the enormous rate of 125 per cent the only article that Greece sends to this country.

The whole tariff does not offer a second example like this, viz: Take an article from the free list and tax it 125 per cent. Is this not a great injustice done to a friendly country, and will it not affect the promising trade which was just being developed between the two countries?

Very respectfully,

D. N. BOTASSI,
Consul-General of Greece.

Hon. JOHN SHERMAN,
United States Senate.

It seems to me that this statement which is made, and I have no doubt truly, by a responsible party, the consul-general of Greece, shows that we ought not to make this discrimination against that important product of Greece, the only thing we import from that country.

As the vote has already been taken, I do not care to move to reconsider, because I hope Senators on the other side having the matter in charge will correct it.

There is no similitude in the use or cost of Zante currants and raisins. Raisins are worth 2, 3, 4, or 5 cents a pound; and the raisins of California are very beautiful, probably the best raisins in the world. I have seen specimens of those raisins which are equal to any produced in the world. To make such a change in the duty on this article, which does not really compete with the raisins of our own country, seems to me at least extortionate, and I think it ought to be corrected. I should have no objection, however, to putting a reasonable rate, an ordinary ad valorem rate, on raisins; but to apply a specific rate to these two articles, which differ so widely in value, raisins being worth at least four or five times as much as Zante currants, is not just to a friendly country, especially to a small country which has an increasing commerce with our own.

I hope Senators will take the matter under consideration so that it may be called up again when the bill is reported to the Senate. I call attention to it now, but shall not put the Senate to the trouble of taking a vote upon it.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, if the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] had been here when the subject was being discussed, he would have known that some of the statements he has made are not correct. The statement that there are no Zante currants raised in California and that this article does not come in direct competition is not true, whether it is made by a man from Greece or a man from anywhere else. This is a contest between California and Greece, upon which the great protectionist of the United States, the Senator from Ohio, is on the side of Greece. I have voted for a duty upon iron ore: I expect to vote for a small duty upon coal. I am sorry that I shall do so——

Several SENATORS. How about lumber?

Mr. WHITE. We shall see about that hereafter.

The Senator from Ohio is very glad to avail himself of the aid of such votes as may tend to give protection to the industries of his State; but when California, away over across the mountains, is interested and asks for a duty, which is less than at any time heretofore has been imposed upon this fruit, and which also, by the way, yielded a large revenue, we find the Senator here talking about the poor man. The Senator from Ohio, and those who are to-day talking as he is talking, have been, I suppose, solicitous for the interests of the poor man when they formulated a bill prescribing prohibitory tariff rates.

A cent and a half a pound upon all dried currants will be no prohibition, as the experience of the country has shown. The duty upon raisins, no matter at what you put it, affords but comparatively a small amount of revenue, and absolutely none of that protection, about which the Senator has so often talked, to the raisin industry of California.

I desire to say to my friend, the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER]—who spoke sometime ago, and whose remarks are so facetious, I understand, that he is unable to publish them in his own paper—when he states that in my canvass in California I ever said anything on this subject different from that which I state here, is also making a declaration which would not look well published in his newspaper, which I suppose, without a violent stretch of the imagination, may be called truthful.

Mr. FRYE. What is the question before the Senate?

Mr. WHITE. To strike out paragraph 213*a*.

Mr. SHERMAN. I had the pleasure of hearing most of what the Senator from California said in his previous speech, although I was called out during a portion of the time. I say there is no such duty in the McKinley law——

Mr. WHITE. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. SHERMAN. Let me get through.

Mr. WHITE. Very well.

Mr. SHERMAN. This rate of 125 per cent on an article which does not directly compete with the raisins of California does not seem necessary.

Mr. WHITE. That is an extraordinary statement.

Mr. SHERMAN. Under the McKinley act these currants were admitted free. Why? Because they did not come in competition with the raisins of this country. The raisin is quite a different article, an article consumed mainly by the rich. The Zante currant is consumed by the poor. Here is a discrimination, which is not made in any other article on this list. It is an outrageous tax upon a popular article of food; and I think there is nothing like it in any tariff act. That we should protect California raisins, which are cheerfully purchased at 3½ to 6 cents a pound, and put the same tax upon articles which are sold here in the market at 1½ cents a pound, is unjust and wrong,

I do not care who it is for, whether for the rich or the poor, or whether it is from Greece or my own country.

I feel bound, in representing the people of the United States, to do justice to every country and to deal with all foreign countries alike. The making of a discriminating duty of this kind against a comparatively poor nation like Greece, will not, I think, be approved by the American people, anywhere, whether rich or poor.

I think, therefore, a reasonable rate should be put upon this article, at least sufficient to furnish some revenue. Ten or twenty per cent would be a high rate. I had rather have a specific duty, and a small rate of duty, I think, one-fourth of a cent a pound would be ample; that would be 25 per cent on this article, but to carry the doctrine of protection to the extent the Senator from California does, I think, is an exaggeration. It is placing 125 per cent on a cheap article of food.

The people of California do not need such a protection. If they can raise Zante currants in competition with Greece, they will have to sell them in the market at one cent and a quarter. You can not compete with the Zante currant. It is only raised in Greece, and there is a difference, I am told, between the Zante currant and the small raisin produced in California. These gentlemen speak of that difference, and say the two articles do not compete with each other in any respect whatever.

Mr. WHITE. We raise the Zante currant itself in California.

Mr. SHERMAN. These gentleman deny that.

Mr. WHITE. Then they do not tell the truth, for I have some of them here, and have seen them growing.

Mr. SHERMAN. Perhaps the consul-general of Greece should know as much about that matter of fact as the Senator from California.

Mr. WHITE. I would ask the Senator how that can be, when the consul-general is in Greece and I have been in California, and consequently know that he does not tell the truth.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator has not compared the Zante currant of Greece with the Zante currant of California. The consul-general of Greece, who is here and has been living in this country, I think would probably know more about that than the Senator, notwithstanding his knowledge extends to a great multitude of things.

Mr. PERKINS. The Senator from Ohio is certainly mistaken when he says that the seedless raisin of California does not compete with the Zante currant, so called in commercial terms. We from California know whereof we speak, and the Muscatel, the Zinfadel, and the Thompson seedless raisin, and several other varieties, are the same variety which is grown in Greece under the name of the Zante currant. As I have endeavored to show, without quoting from the different lexicons, what may be called in the island of Zante, or in Greece, Zante currants, in California are called seedless raisins. They are used for the same purposes, for the purposes of cookery.

I think the Senator from Missouri will perhaps consent to change in paragraph 217 the word "Zante" to "dried," for the reason that the currants now come from the island of Cephalonia and Santa Maria and the island of Zante, also from the coast of Turkey and from the southern portions of Spain. "Zante currant" is a commercial term; but there is an ambiguity, perhaps, in the name, and if it is permitted to remain here as "Zante" it may confuse some of our appraisers. I hope the Senator from Missouri will change the word "Zante" to "dried." Then there can be no charge that we are discriminating against the island of Zante.

One word more in answer to the Senator from Ohio. We are producing seedless raisins, which grow in great clusters upon our vines, some of the vines producing over 100 pounds of the seedless raisins. In California we get them dried, but they are the pure fruit. There is no dirt amongst them, as there is in those which are brought from Italy and Greece in their commercial product, and yet we sell them in the market here as low as a cent and a half and 2 cents a pound—an article far superior to the Zante currant as known in commerce. Therefore I say to my friend from Ohio that California has an area sufficiently large, and we are setting out more vineyards now from week to week, and month and year to year, to furnish all the Zante currants and all the raisins that can be consumed in this country, giving the poor man fine raisins for his puddings, his pies, and his cakes.

Mr. HOAR. Before the Senator sits down I should like to ask him—the reason he stated is a good one—whether it would not be well to ask the Senate to change the rate instead of asking the Senator from Missouri to do it?

Mr. PERKINS. I stand corrected; but I think a recommendation from my friend from Missouri will have more influence, perhaps, than one would have coming from me. There is more reason——

Mr. HOAR. Influence is a good reason.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator's colleague is now arranging the matter with the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. ALDRICH. I shall be glad to know if the Senator from Missouri is going to accept the amendment.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, it seems to me we have been wasting a good deal of time over the currant business. There are at least 200,000 square miles of the United States adapted to the growth of these currants, which can be raised in Western Colorado, and in most parts of New Mexico, Arizona, and California, except in the high regions. If we protect anything, there is no reason why we should not protect this class of product. It seems to me, after we have passed upon and decided it, it is a considerable waste of time to have this discussion.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator from California on the other side of the Chamber [Mr. WHITE], with that kindness and courtesy and thoughtfulness which characterize him, informed me a short time ago that if I remained in the Chamber he should accuse me of being a prevaricator. I have been in a good deal of trepidation since that time. I have been called a Thersites and a theorist; and I do not know of those two accusations which is the more grave. To be called a prevaricator by the Senator from California set me thinking of what time I had, at this period of my life, sullied my soul by an untruth.

I could not think in advance of the Senator's remarks to what he referred, but it seems now that he says, if I desire to convey the impression to the Senate that he spoke differently in California on the stump from what he speaks now, I am incorrect. I understand that this charge, which frightened me so much, of being a prevaricator, is reduced to this, that if—and there is much virtue in "if," as we all know—if I charged the Senator with having spoken differently in California on the stump from what he speaks in this Chamber, then I am mistaken, then I am untruthful, then I am a prevaricator.

I understood long ago that the Senator from California, when he stumped the State in behalf of the Democratic party in the recent canvass, and before he was elected to the Senate, advocated free trade; that he made what were called free-trade speeches all over the State. That is all I said, except that I have said that he is now here advocating a duty on Zante currants raised in California. I am informed, Mr. President, that that was precisely the exception that he made on the stump. He preached free trade all over California, but when he struck a fruit country he said, "Of course these are my sentiments; but still a little duty once in a while on fruit will not be objectionable (laughter); and you understand that I shall put no obstacle in the way of an exception to this doctrine which I am preaching which will help your fruit a little in California; for of course California is destined to be the great fruit-growing State of the United States, if not of the world."

So I understand that the Senator talked there exactly as he talks now. He was in favor of free trade there upon everything except the fruit of California, and he is here now in favor of free trade upon everything except the fruit of California, except—and it is a very important exception, Mr. President—he votes as the Democratic caucus and the Democratic committee decide that he shall vote upon every question which comes up in the bill, for the Senator has boasted here that, contrary to his convictions, he voted for a duty on coal and iron. Why did the Senator do that? Does he wish us to understand that he did it because he is convinced that there ought to be a duty on coal and iron? By no means.

The Senator will admit that he voted for a duty on coal and iron because that is the policy of his party, just exactly as he has told me frequently that the reason he did not let his mellifluous voice resound through this Chamber in this debate was because it was the policy of his party not to have any debate on this bill. The Senator simply carried out the decision of his own party on coal and iron, and he stands here to-day—and I congratulate him on standing here to-day—as consistent here as he was in California for being in favor of free trade on everything except as to the products of his own State. [Laughter.]

Mr. WHITE. I desire to say to the Senator from New Hampshire that I can assure him positively that never, even in private, shall I accuse him of being a prevaricator, for it would merely result in a repetition of the offense, and my conscience will forbid anything of the kind in the future.

Mr. VEST. I simply want to correct a statement which I made to the Senator from Maine nearest me [Mr. FRYE], as I do not want to make any false impression. I did not do it knowingly. He asked me what would be the effect of striking out paragraph 213*a*—"Currants, 20 per cent ad valorem," and I told him it would have the effect to continue the duty under the basket clause. I overlooked the fact that there is a separate basket clause for the fruit schedule, paragraph 489, page 101, which says:

Fruits, green, ripe, or dried, not specially provided for in this act.

So the effect would be to put these currants on the free list. I do not want any misapprehension about it.

Mr. FRYE. Does the Senator mean that they shall be put upon the free list?

Mr. VEST. Yes.

Mr. WHITE. All except dried.

Mr. VEST. Of course. That does not affect the provision as to Zante currants or dried currants, but simply the currants which come in under the other paragraph.

Mr. ALLISON. I suggest to the Senator from Missouri that it places all dried currants, except Zante currants, on the free list as well.

Mr. VEST. Not if we change "Zante," in line 23, of paragraph 217, to read "including dried currants."

Mr. FRYE. But that has not been changed.

Mr. VEST. I propose to do that.

Mr. FRYE. That is all right.

Mr. DOLPH. If Zante currants are not currants, as contended by the Senator from California, they will not be on the dutiable list at all.

Mr. VEST. That is a question between the Grecian consul-general and the Senator from California [Mr. WHITE], and I am bound to take the view of the Senator from California, because he must know.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to suggest to the Senator from Missouri that Zante currants, if not currants, in the commerce of the world are known as "Zante currants," and have been for fifty years, I do not know but for one hundred years. I have known something on that subject for nearly fifty years. I think it is better to let it stand in the bill "Zante currants," which is a name understood in the trade commercially everywhere. If they are called "Zante currants," there will never be any mistake, and they will be taxed as Zante currants. If you call them "dried currants," you raise a new question, and it will lead to confusion.

Mr. PERKINS. It should be "Zante or dried currants."

Mr. TELLER. Yes.

Mr. PERKINS. Zante currants come from Turkey, from the Island of Cephalonia, Santa Maria, and Spain, and from the Island of Zante. The term is ambiguous, at least. If we add after the word "Zante," in line 23, "or other dried," that will cover it.

Mr. DOLPH. "And other."

Mr. PERKINS. I should say "and other."

Mr. TELLER. Only a small proportion of Zante currants come from the Island of Zante. They get the name because they came from there originally; but they now come from all parts of Asia Minor.

Mr. ALDRICH. As stated by the Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS], a great number of countries produce currants which are imported into the United States, all of them at a less price than Zante currants. The object which the Senator from Missouri, as well as the Senator from California, seems to have in view would be arrived at by inserting a clause which prevent the importation of any currants into the United States. That is what the effect seems to be, and what it seems it is desired to be effected.

Mr. VEST. So far as I am concerned, I shall content myself with moving to strike out paragraph 213*a*, and leaving the Treasury Department to construe what are "Zante currants."

Mr. ALLISON. The effect of that will be to put all dried currants on the free list, except Zante currants. If all currants, green and dried, are to be put on the free list, so be it.

Mr. VEST. I will tell the Senator very frankly that I should like to put them all there.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST].

Mr. DOLPH. Is the paragraph amendable before the question is put on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will entertain the Senator's amendment.

Mr. DOLPH. I move to amend the paragraph so as to read:

Dried currants, other than Zante currants, 20 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. VEST. To what paragraph is that proposed?

Mr. DOLPH. The one the Senator has moved to strike out.

Mr. PERKINS. I hope the Senator from Oregon will withdraw that amendment, and permit this to be stricken out, and then amend paragraph 217, line 23, after the word "Zante," by inserting "and other dried currants," the object being to leave the duty of 1½ cents a pound upon all currants, whether Zante currants from Turkey, from Spain, or any other country.

Mr. DOLPH. The Senator from California must have heard what the Senator from Missouri said, that he would confine his proposition to striking out paragraph 213*a*, and then leave the Treasury Department to determine what are Zante currants. I do not understand the Senator from Missouri proposes that paragraph 417 shall be amended as suggested by the Senator from California. I was only endeavoring to prevent dried currants, other than Zante currants, being placed on the free list by giving them a small ad valorem duty of 20 per cent. That was my proposition.

Mr. PERKINS. Then we have the same object in view.

Mr. DOLPH. We have the same object in view, except the Senator would like to give a cent and a half a pound duty, by placing it in paragraph 217, and I understand the Senator from Missouri has given notice that he does not propose to make that change, as coming from the other side of the Chamber at least.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. ALDRICH. What is the pending proposition, Mr. President?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out the following paragraph:

213*a*. Currants, 20 per cent ad valorem.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. I now desire to offer the amendment which I before attempted to offer.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair has recognized the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. PERKINS. I ask permission to dispose of the matter which has been under consideration; and I ask the Senator from Missouri if he will not consent now to amend paragraph 217, line 23, after the word "Zante," by inserting "and other dried."

Mr. LODGE. I think I am entitled to the floor.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state to the Senator from California that he has recognized the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. I desire to offer as paragraph 212, at the end of the fish schedule, as it comes more properly under that than any other, the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out paragraph 212, and insert:

212. Sea moss or Iceland moss, whether cured or uncured, 10 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, this moss is gathered from the rocks on our northern coast cheaply by fishermen. It grows below low-water mark; it is rarely exposed to the air; and its collection is difficult and hard labor. The product is used, as everyone is aware, in cooking and for medicinal purposes. The amendment that I offered covers only the moss from the hands of the fishermen. No capital is employed in this industry, except the boats which the men themselves own. There is no firm engaged in the work; it is entirely individual work by these fishermen upon the coast. They are very anxious that this article should be placed upon the dutiable list with a small duty, because they have suffered very much of late from outside competition.

The entire cost of the article is the labor cost—the labor of collecting it and of then drying it in the sun for the purpose of curing it before it is given to the manufacturer.

I desire to read in this connection a letter on the subject, the writer of which, I will state, at the time he wrote was the secretary of the Knights of Labor of the State of Massachusetts, and is now, I believe, one of the officers of the national order. He says:

BOSTON WEEKLY INDEX AND KNIGHTS OF LABOR JOURNAL,
595 Washington street, January 30, 1894.

DEAR SIR: In the consideration of a tariff, one of our local assemblies, 382, of Scituate, Mass., has a more than ordinary interest. The members of this organization control the industry of gathering and curing sea moss, and its value to them foots up about $70,000 annually.

Their only competitors are in Europe, and at present sea moss is on the free list. We therefore desire your influence and support for a measure which will place such a duty upon the imported article as will prevent it from unjustly crowding the native product to the wall.

Trusting that you will act upon this matter favorably and promptly,

Yours, respectfully,

M. J. BISHOP,
State Secretary-Treasurer.

Hon. HENRY CABOT LODGE,
Senator from Massachusetts.

That, Mr. President, is the whole case. It is the product of poor men. The entire cost is the labor cost. There is no capital involved in it. It is simply a protection to the wages of the men who are engaged in this industry. There is absolutely nothing else involved.

The Senate has just taken Zante currants from the free list, an article of general consumption, an article of food, and put upon it a high duty of more than 100 per cent. I ask for this article but 10 per cent duty. It is not an article of general, popular consumption, but is supplied by these men to manufacturers. Certainly there can be no better case for a direct protection to American wages than is presented here, and involving no outside question of capital or the profits of manufacturers.

The only distinction that I can see is that these men who are engaged in this industry along our coast have no Democratic Senator to represent them. Of course, if that is the deciding principle on which this bill is made up, I am aware that this amendment is foredoomed to defeat; but if the principle which has just been applied in the case of Zante currants has any economic soundness whatever, then it should apply tenfold to the labor of these poor fishermen upon our Northern coast.

I will add, Mr. President, that this is the precise duty which is placed upon Florida sponges, gathered in the same way by the same class of men. These simply are Northern fishermen, living along the Northern coast, engaged in the same industry, with no capital but their labor and their boats.

I ask for a vote on the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. VEST. Did I understand the Senator to say that $70,000 worth of this article was imported?

Mr. LODGE. I say the value of the product of these men is $70,000 annually. I did not say anything about what was imported. I simply stated the value of their product.

Mr. VEST. The question comes up suddenly, and without any presentation of facts; but I find by the Treasury reports that only $100 worth came in in 1893. I do not think anybody is suffering from that sort of competition.

Mr. LODGE. I will say to the Senator that I take the statement of the men engaged in the industry, that they are being pushed and pressed by outside European competition.

Mr. DOLPH. What is the present duty?

Mr. LODGE. There is none. It is on the free list as Zante currants are on the free list.

Mr. VEST. It has always been on the free list.

Of course, I do not propose to answer what the Senator says about no Democratic Senator being here to represent these people. Considering what we have done in regard to fish, I do not think that is a very just intimation, because the fish industry is represented by Republican Senators. I will let that go.

This question comes to us suddenly and without any facts, as I stated, except the Senator has stated what he believes; but, as a matter of course, under the circumstances, we can not agree to put this article upon the dutiable list. It has not been examined, and the Treasury statistics do not show any such values as the Senator states, and the article has always been on the free list.

Mr. LODGE. I stated no value, I will say to the Senator from Missouri, in regard to the importations. I simply stated the case of the men engaged in the industry.

Mr. VEST. The point is in regard to his argument as to the effect of the importation upon the labor of these people. If there was only $100 worth came into this country, as a matter of course, their labor could not have been depreciated or their product injured in value. There was not enough competition for that.

Mr. LODGE. During what year was the hundred dollars' worth imported?

Mr. VEST. Eighteen hundred and ninety-three.

Mr. LODGE. The fiscal year ending July 1?

Mr. VEST. The Treasury reports are, of course, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1893, and we have nothing later than that.

Mr. LODGE. I understand that; but I understand from the letter I read that there is an increasing competition, from which these people are suffering.

Mr. VEST. I only spoke from the official statistics.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

Mr. LODGE. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MILLS. Let the amendment be again stated.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In place of paragraph 212, it is proposed to insert:

Sea moss, or Iceland moss, whether cured or uncured, 10 per cent ad valorem.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll on the amendment.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CULLOM (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. GORDON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON].

Mr. LODGE (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. HILL]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. MORRILL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. QUAY (when his name was called). I inquire if the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] is recorded as voting?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Alabama is not recorded.

Mr. QUAY. Being paired with that Senator, I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BRICE. I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT] to the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. IRBY] and vote "nay."

Mr. CHANDLER. My pair with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. MURPHY] is transferred to the Senator from Washington [Mr. SQUIRE], so that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL] and I can vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. DANIEL. I vote "nay."

Mr. MCMILLAN (after having voted in the affirmative). I inquire if the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD] has voted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He has not voted.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Then I withdraw my vote, as I am paired with that Senator.

Mr. GORDON. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] to the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LINDSAY] and vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 21, nays 29; as follows:

YEAS—21.

Aldrich,	Dubois,	Patton,	Shoup,
Allison,	Frye,	Perkins,	Teller,
Carey,	Gallinger,	Pettigrew,	Washburn.
Chandler,	Hale,	Platt,
Dixon,	Hoar,	Power,
Dolph,	Manderson,	Sherman,

NAYS—29.

Allen,	Gibson,	Mills,	Turpie,
Berry,	Gordon,	Mitchell, Wis.	Vest,
Blackburn,	Harris,	Pasco,	Voorhees,

Cockrell,	Jarvis,	Pugh,	White.
Coke,	Jones, Ark.	Ransom,
Daniel,	Kyle,	Roach,
George.	Martin,	Smith,

NOT VOTING—35.

Bate,	Faulkner,	Lindsay,	Palmer,
Blanchard,	Gorman.	Lodge,	Proctor,
Butler,	Gray,	McLaurin,	Quay,
Caffery,	Hansbrough.	McMillan,	Squire,
Call.	Hawley,	McPherson,	Stewart,
Camden,	Higgins,	Mitchell, Oregon	Vilas,
Cameron,	Hill,	Morgan,	Wilson,
Cullom,	Irby,	Morrill,	Wolcott.
Davis,	Jones, Nev.	Murphy,

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. LODGE. I had not looked up the importations, and I should be very glad if the Senator from Missouri would point out to me where he finds that the importation of moss, sea moss, and Iceland moss is only $100. I supposed it had come in under this general head "Mosses, seaweed, and other vegetable substances," by which it appears that they were of the value of $22,725 in 1890, $41,461 in 1891, $45,557 in 1892, and $49,372 in 1893.

I did not know that sea or Iceland moss had been separated and separate amounts given. I should be glad if the Senator from Missouri would point it out, as I do not wish to be inaccurate.

Mr. VEST. I have the statement here, Mr. President, and shall turn to it.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Regular order, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The reading of the bill will be resumed.

The Secretary read as follows:

218. Comfits, sweetmeats, and fruits preserved in sugar, sirup, molasses, or spirits, not specially provided for in this act, and jellies of all kinds, 30 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. ALLEN. I was necessarily absent from the Chamber at the time that action was had on paragraph 199, attending to my duties as a member of the special investigating committee. I now ask the Senate to return to that part of the bill long enough to enable me to offer an amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. ALLISON. Let the amendment be reported.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert as paragraph 199½—

Hides and skins, raw or uncured, whether dry, salted, or pickled, except goat skins, 20 per cent ad valorem.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Nebraska that the amendment proposed by him may be now considered? The Chair hears none, and the question is on the amendment.

Mr. PLATT. Are not hides now on the free list?

Mr. ALLEN. They are on the free list. I desire to say, if the Senator will permit me, that we imported last year, exclusive of goat hides, $14,605,787 worth of hides. The ad valorem duty on hides has given us in fact $3,000,000 of revenue, and it occurs to me that we ought not to suffer this item of legitimate taxation to pass to the free list. It ought to bear a fair proportion of the taxes imposed by this bill.

I call for a yea-and-nay vote upon the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CAREY. I only desire to say a word concerning this amendment.

In the Rocky Mountain States and Territories, where hides are a very valuable product and where a great deal of money has been received from them, they are no longer worth the railroad tariffs it costs to transport them to the seaboard. In the Argentine Republic thousands of heads of cattle are killed each year for the hides alone, and the carcasses of the animals go to waste. In the Western country a very large amount of money that would be received each year for hides is lost because freight charges can not be paid on them. Hides are an agricultural product, and I can not see why a duty should not be imposed upon them so as to enable our people to continue that industry.

Mr. DOLPH. I should like to say a word on this amendment. I understand the effect of it is to put a duty on hides. The only doubt I have in my mind as to how I shall vote is whether it will affect our reciprocity treaties; but as the Senate has already determined to put a duty on sugar and abrogate those treaties, upon principle I think I shall vote for the amendment.

Mr. PLATT. I should vote for this amendment if I had any assurance that the tariff upon the articles which are manufactured from hides would be correspondingly increased. Boots and shoes, I understand, are now placed at 20 per cent ad valorem by this bill.

It is not fair to put the same duty upon hides which is put upon the article which is made from hides. I have no objection to a duty on hides, except that I should want to know if the duty on the manufactured article was going to be somewhat increased.

Mr. MANDERSON. My colleague [Mr. ALLEN] has stated the enormous importation of hides and skins to this country under the present provision. I do not think that anyone can estimate the enormous product of hides in the country west of Chicago, and why it should not be protected I can not imagine. I shall certainly vote for the amendment proposed by my colleague, and I am glad to have him present it, because I see in his mind, I think, a rising light, which will grow and spread until he is fully illumined with the protection idea.

Mr. ALLEN. I am induced to offer this amendment for the purpose of raising revenue. I had no thought of anything like protection in it. I believe hides to be a proper subject of taxation.

I think the Government ought not to let this item of revenue escape. I am induced, in addition to that, to offer the amendment because I know that it is a bait to our protective friends, and I expect to see every one of them swallow the hook.

Mr. HOAR. Let the amendment be stated.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The Secretary read the amendment proposed by Mr. ALLEN.

Mr. HOAR. I move to amend that amendment by adding:

And upon boots, shoes, and other manufactures of leather, 35 per cent ad valorem.

So that there will be an advanced duty upon the manufactured articles.

Mr. TELLER. I hope the Senator will do that later.

Mr. HOAR. I make the motion now, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts to the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add to the amendment—

And upon boots, shoes, and other manufactures of leather, 35 per cent ad valorem.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr ALLEN].

Mr. HOAR. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BRICE (when his name was called). I again transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT] to to the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. IRBY], and vote "nay."

Mr. CULLOM (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY], who has been called away from the Senate for the afternoon. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. GALLINGER (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS], who is absent, and withhold my vote. If he were present I should vote "nay."

Mr. GORDON (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] to the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LINDSAY], and vote "nay."

Mr. McMILLAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD]; otherwise I should vote "yea."

Mr. MORRILL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. QUAY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], and therefore withhold my vote. If he were present I should vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. LODGE. I desire to announce my pair with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. HILL]. I therefore withhold my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 17, nays 27; as follows:

YEAS—17.

Allen,	Dubois,	Perkins,	Teller,
Allison,	Kyle,	Pettigrew,	Washburn.
Carey,	Manderson,	Power,
Chandler,	Patton,	Sherman,
Dolph,	Peffer,	Shoup,

NAYS—27.

Aldrich,	Daniel,	Jarvis,	Roach,
Berry,	Frye,	Jones, Ark.	Smith,
Blackburn,	George,	McLaurin,	Vest,
Brice,	Gibson,	Mitchell, Wis.	Voorhees,
Camden,	Gordon,	Pasco,	Walsh,
Cockrell,	Harris,	Pugh,	White.
Coke,	Hoar,	Ransom,

NOT VOTING—41.

Bate,	Gorman,	Lodge,	Proctor,
Blanchard,	Gray,	McMillan,	Quay,
Butler,	Hale,	McPherson,	Squire,
Caffery,	Hansbrough,	Martin,	Stewart,
Call,	Hawley,	Mills,	Turpie,
Cameron,	Higgins,	Mitchell, Oregon	Vilas,
Cullom,	Hill,	Morgan,	Wilson,
Davis,	Hunton,	Morrill,	Wolcott.
Dixon,	Irby,	Murphy,
Faulkner,	Jones, Nev.	Palmer,
Gallinger,	Lindsay,	Platt,

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HOAR. I desire, in regard to the matter which has just been dealt with, to say that we are now having a considerable export trade of boots and shoes. Hides are upon the free list now. Now, if there were a duty upon hides, I suppose the managers and contrivers of the present tariff expect to retain the policy of having a drawback of 99 per cent of the duties paid on imported material, so that if there were a duty on hides the export trade would not be affected, except to the extent of 1 per cent, because the manufacturers would get their drawback so far as they use imported hides.

So, if the representatives of the cattle-raising portion of the Union believe a duty on hides is necessary for their interest and for that product, I shall be prepared to agree to a graduated duty which would give a similar advance in duty on the products of leather. My vote "nay" just cast was compelled by the refusal of the Senator who made this proposition to permit any corresponding advance of duty on the products, so that it would really amount to a blow to an important American industry. I do not understand that the Senators on this side of the Chamber would refuse to do so.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Regular order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The reading of the bill will be proceeded with.

The Secretary read as follows:

219. Fruits preserved in their own juices, 20 per cent ad valorem.

220. Orange peel and lemon peel, preserved or candied, 30 per cent ad valorem.

Nuts:

221. Almonds, not shelled, 3 cents per pound; clear almonds, shelled, 5 cents per pound.

The Committee on Finance reported an amendment to paragraph 221, line 10, before the word "shelled," to strike out

"not"; after the word "shelled" to strike out "3 cents per pound; clear almonds, shelled, 5 cents per pound," and insert, "or unshelled, 25 per cent ad valorem."

Mr. VEST. The amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I withdraw the committee amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment is withdrawn. The reading will proceed.

The Secretary read the next paragraph, as follows:

222. Filberts and walnuts of all kinds, not shelled, 2 cents per pound; shelled, 4 cents per pound.

The Committee on Finance reported an amendmentoin line 15, after the word "kinds," to strike out "not shelled, 2 cents per pound; shelled, 4 cents per pound," and insert "35 per cent ad valorem; cream or Brazil nuts, 20 per cent ad valorem."

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I withdraw the amendment.

The Secretary read the next paragraph, as follows:

223. Peanuts or ground beans, unshelled, 1 cent per pound; shelled, 1½ cents per pound.

The Committee on Finance reported an amendment to paragraph 223; in line 21, after the word "beans," to strike out "unshelled, 1 cent per pound; shelled, 1½ cents per pound," and insert "20 per cent ad valorem;" so as to read:

223. Peanuts or ground beans, 20 per cent ad valorem.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next paragraph, as follows:

224. Nuts of all kinds, shelled or unshelled, not specially provided for in this act, 1 cent per pound.

The Committee on Finance reported an amendment to paragraph 224, page 50, line 1, after the word "act," to strike out "one cent per pound" and insert "20 per cent ad valorem."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read as follows:

Meat products:

The Committee on Finance reported as an additional paragraph:

224½. Fresh beef, mutton, and pork, 25 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I move to amend the amendment by striking out "twenty-five" and inserting "twenty."

Mr. HOAR. I wish to ask the committee if they understand that they have made any special provision in the bill for lamb as distinguished from mutton?

Mr. VEST. No, sir; not that I know of.

Mr. HOAR. Does the Senator understand that the word "mutton" includes lamb?

Mr. VEST. I think so.

Mr. HOAR. Would it not be well to make that clear?

Mr. VEST. All meat of the sheep, I understand, is mutton.

Mr. ALLISON. It is the same as in the McKinley act.

Mr. FRYE. The word "lamb" never has been inserted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next paragraph, as follows:

225. Extract of meat, 20 per cent ad valorem.

Mr JONES of Arkansas. I move to strike out "twenty" and insert "fifteen."

Mr. MANDERSON. I hope that will not be done. It is true that we have been importing a large amount of meat extract into this country which is known as the Liebig beef extract, and for a number of years, because of the excellence of that article, it seemed to have a monopoly of the American market, but we have very lately outstripped Europe in the production of meat extracts, particularly extract of beef. The great packing houses of Chicago, Kansas City, and Omaha are producing to-day a far better article of meat extract, beef extract, than can be produced anywhere in the world. There was at one time the production of a beef extract in Richmond, Va., I think. It was most excellent, and rivaled somewhat Liebig's meat extract.

This industry is one worthy of maintenance. I hope the committee will not lower the ad valorem rate that was fixed by the other House. I took occasion within a few days to see one of the members of the committee in charge of the bill with reference to this item, and to know whether it certainly included both the solid and the fluid extract of meat, and was told there could be no doubt about that proposition. I am somewhat surprised at this proposition, coming from the committee without notice, to lower the ad valorem duty upon this extract. It is one that the West is particularly concerned in, and I hope that the blow will not be given it in this very unexpected fashion.

Mr. VEST. The Treasury reports show that in regard to these extracts, fluid meat extracts, under the McKinley act the rate of duty is 15 cents per pound or 18 per cent ad valorem. We have reported a duty of 20 per cent ad valorem which it is proposed to reduce to 15 per cent. There was imported, in 1893, $30,922 worth. All other extracts of beef, meaning the solid extracts, under the McKinley act, were 35 cents per pound or 17.93 per cent ad valorem. We made that duty 20 per cent, which would also be reduced to 15 per cent. The imports for 1893 were $292,270. After we had fixed it one of our Republican colleagues came to us with facts and representations that induced us to decrease the duty.

His statement was that we had made such advance in these meat extracts that we are able with reduced duty to compete successfully with all the balance of the world and sell the article cheaper to our own people. One of the largest packers in the United States told me not long since, while discussing the cattle question, that he was able now to send his meat extracts to Paris and sell them to the French manufacturers, and that they were then put under their brand. He said that he had obtained after six months' endeavor in Paris an analysis of the Liebig extract, and that he had submitted it to his chemist, to whom he paid a very large salary, I think he said $25,000 a year, and told him that he must make a better article than the Liebig. He said that after three months' work the man came to him with an extract which was now taking the market away even in Europe from the French manufacturers. I give the statement for what it is worth. If I were to mention the name it would be recognized as that of a man of national celebrity.

Mr. MANDERSON. The Senator from Missouri understands, I think, from my conversation had with him within a day or two, that this language would mean both the solid and the fluid extract of meat.

Mr. VEST. I think so. The way we have it here it includes all.

Mr. MANDERSON. I call his attention to the fact that the solid extract of meat has heretofore had an ad valorem rate of 20 per cent. There was imported in 1893 $140,773 worth of the fluid extract, which, as he says, has an ad valorem of 17.95 per cent, which is nearly 18 per cent. There was imported $294,174 worth, making close on to a half million dollars of these extracts.

Mr. VEST. The Senator has reversed the duties. On the fluid extract the ad valorem is 18 per cent.

Mr. MANDERSON. I say the fluid extract was 18 per cent.

Mr. VEST. And on the other it is 17.93.

Mr. MANDERSON. Seventeen and ninety-five one-hundreths.

Mr. VEST. Seventeen and ninety-three one-hundredths.

Mr. MANDERSON. On the solid extract it was 20 per cent.

Mr. VEST. No; 17.93 per cent.

Mr. MANDERSON. I turn to this authority——

Mr. ALLISON. To what year does the Senator refer?

Mr. MANDERSON. Eighteen hundred and ninety-three, page 613 of Imports and Exports.

Mr. VEST. What was the amount of imports for that year?

Mr. MANDERSON. The imports of solid extracts of meat for the year 1893 were $140,773, the duty being ad valorem 20 per cent. The importations of fluid extract of meat in 1893 were 150,872 pounds, worth $294,127, with an ad valorem rate of 17.95, or about 18 per cent. Now, with this immense importation, even at the rate of 18 and 20 per cent ad valorem, it certainly seems to me that the rate proposed by the other House and agreed to by the Committee on Finance should not be changed in this very sudden and unexpected fashion. It looks to me like an effort to protect Liebig and Liebig's agents in this country rather than those who produce these extracts in this country.

Mr. VEST. If the Senator will look at the Treasury reports of Imports and Exports, page 613, he will see he is mistaken about the ad valorem duty on fluid extract.

Mr. MANDERSON. I take it from that report.

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator from Missouri will look at page 614 he will see the ad valorem under the duty of 35 cents, which was fixed in the McKinley act, is 17.95, as stated by the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. MANDERSON. There is no doubt about it.

Mr. VEST. There is no doubt about it. But on the next page he will find fluid extracts 18.01.

Mr. ALLISON. I submit that this difference between 17.95 and 18.01 per cent is so small that we had better leave it at 20 per cent, and if our people can compete with the others there will be no harm done.

Mr. PLATT. I do not know about the statistics, but in the report which the Committee on Finance has given us the importations are divided into three parts.

Mr. ALLISON. That is under the old law.

Mr. PLATT. Extracts of meat, fluid, and extracts of meat all others, and the importations of fluid extract is as was stated by the Senator from Missouri, only $30,000 for 1893 in this statement.

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator will turn to the next page he will see——

Mr. PLATT. Those, I suppose, are solid extracts. The imports under "all others" were $294,127.88, but the imports of fluid extracts I think were only $30,000, according to this statement.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. MANDERSON. I ask for a division on the question.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CULLOM (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY], who is called out of the Chamber. If he were present I should vote "nay."

Mr. GALLINGER (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS]. If he were present I should vote "nay."

Mr. GORDON (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] to the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LINDSAY], and vote "yea."

Mr. MCMILLAN (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD].

Mr. MORRILL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL], and withhold my vote.

Mr. QUAY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. HIGGINS. I again announce my pair with the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON], and I shall not announce it for the rest of the day.

Mr. LODGE. I am paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL], and shall not announce it again during the day. It will stand for the afternoon.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I shall vote to make a quorum. I vote "nay."

Mr. QUAY. For the purpose of making a quorum I will take the liberty of voting. I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 24, nays 19; as follows:

YEAS—24.

Berry,	Gibson,	McLaurin,	Smith,
Blackburn,	Gordon,	Martin,	Turpie,
Camden,	Harris,	Pasco,	Vest,
Cockrell,	Hunton,	Pugh,	Voorhees,
Coke,	Jarvis,	Ransom,	Walsh,
George,	Jones, Ark.	Roach,	White.

NAYS—19.

Aldrich,	Dolph,	Manderson,	Quay,
Allison,	Dubois,	Patton,	Shoup,
Carey,	Frye,	Peffer,	Teller,
Chandler,	Hoar,	Perkins,	Washburn.
Dixon,	McMillan,	Pettigrew,

NOT VOTING—42.

Allen,	Faulkner,	Kyle,	Platt,
Bate,	Gallinger,	Lindsay,	Power,
Blanchard,	Gorman,	Lodge,	Proctor,
Brice,	Gray,	McPherson,	Sherman,
Butler,	Hale,	Mills,	Squire,

Cameron,	Higgins,	Morgan,	Wilson,
Cullom,	Hill,	Morrill,	Wolcott.
Daniel,	Irby,	Murphy,
Davis,	Jones, Nev.	Palmer,

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANDERSON. I wish to give notice that the last amendment is one of the numerous amendments adopted in Committee of the Whole, upon which a separate vote will be demanded in the Senate. I offer the following to come in as paragraph 225½:

225½. Blood albumen, 25 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. President, albumen was at one time not made in this country at all. Upon it for a number of years there was a duty of 25 per cent ad valorem. In 1871 there was imported, it having been placed upon the free list that year, $122,773 worth.

The next year, or that year perhaps, by a change in the law 25 per cent ad valorem was placed upon it, and the importation fell from $122,000 worth to $329 worth. So it was practically excluded from this country. The reason for it appears in a letter which I find, dated January 19, 1889, signed by Craven & Co., who did business at Jersey City, N. J. This was to Mr. Ketcham, a member of Congress:

JERSEY CITY, N. J., January 19, 1889.

DEAR SIR: In 1871 we began the manufacture of albumen at the stockyards in Jersey City from the blood of the animals slaughtered there. The enterprise was a new one, and was for a time moderately successful. We gave employment to some 250 men. At that time we were protected by a duty of 15 cents per pound on the imported article. We continued to conduct our business successfully until this duty was taken off, when we found that we were utterly unable to do so longer at a profit, and about a year ago we were compelled to abandon the business altogether, since which time our plant and the capital invested has been idle, and will be worthless unless we are enabled to resume.

The albumen of commerce is manufactured in France, Germany, and England, and is an article the chief cost of which is comprised in the labor entering into it. Owing to the higher rates at which labor is compensated in this country we are entirely unable, unaided by a protective duty, to compete with the cheap labor of the foreign manufacturer. A moderate duty, say 15 cents per pound, the rate at which the imported article was taxed when we began our business, would give us this protection, enable us to resume, reëmploy our labor, and look forward to a competition with the foreign manufacturer, under not altogether unfavorable conditions.

We respectfully request your attention to this matter, and that you properly bring it before Congress.

Very respectfully, yours,

CRAVEN & CO.

Hon. JOHN H. KETCHAM, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

This article being on the free list continued an article of extensive importation. In 1875 $650,000 worth was imported. It ranged differently in different years, and last year nearly $200,000 worth of this article was imported from France, Germany, and England. In the great stock yards of the West this is beginning to be one of their items of industry. No part of the steer which is conducted into these great slaughtering houses, it is said, is allowed to escape, except perhaps his bellow before his death. Among other items that they have gone into is the manufacture of blood albumen. I have here a letter from the Cudahy Packing Company, at South Omaha, Nebr., a very extensive institution, having works also, I think, at both Chicago and Kansas City. They say as to blood albumen—

Both the McKinley and the Wilson tariffs put albumen on the free list. The reason it was put on the free list under the McKinley tariff was undoubtedly from the fact that there was no American producer—

The only American producer, this one in Jersey City, having been squeezed out by placing blood albumen upon the free list—

we being the first to manufacture blood albumen successfully in this country. We are to-day turning out the finest albumen that is offered in the market, but are unable to get a price for it that will enable us to successfully continue its manufacture, as the writer told you a few days ago in Washington—

This letter being addressed to me—

he had just sold 2 tons that would not yield the cost of production. Under these circumstances we believe even your Democratic friends will see the justice of giving us an ad valorem duty of at least 25 per cent so that the industry can be continued and our factory kept running. We have a large capacity even now, and are contemplating an increase to produce about one-half of the present importations, and can do this if we have a moderate protection.

It seems to me that under this showing there certainly should be an ad valorem rate that is fair upon this industry, once destroyed, ready to be resurrected if fair protection is afforded.

Mr. VEST. I have simply to say that this article has been on the free list since 1871.

Mr. MANDERSON. Yes. It was not manufactured in this country.

Mr. VEST. Prior to that time it had upon it a duty of 35 per cent ad valorem. It was put upon the free list in the McKinley act, and we do not feel inclined to put a duty upon it now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BLACKBURN in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. MANDERSON. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GALLINGER (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. MCMILLAN (when his name was called). I announce my pair with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD].

Mr. QUAY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CAFFERY. I am paired with the Senator from Montana [Mr. POWER]. I transfer my pair to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. IRBY], and vote "nay."

Mr. CULLOM. I have a general pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY]. I transfer my pair to the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], and vote "yea."

Mr. PLATT. I am paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. HUNTON], who has been called from the Chamber, or I should vote "yea."

Mr. MCMILLAN. I am authorized to vote to make a quorum. I vote "yea."

Mr. GORDON. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] to the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LINDSAY], and vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 18, nays 27; as follows:

YEAS—18.

Allison,	Dubois,	Morrill,	Shoup,
Carey,	Frye,	Patton,	Teller,
Cullom,	Hoar,	Peffer,	Washburn.
Dixon,	McMillan,	Perkins.
Dolph,	Manderson,	Pettigrew,

NAYS—27.

Faulkner,	Irby,	Palmer,	Wolcott.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I move to insert as a new paragraph:

225½. Lard, 1 cent per pound.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I move to insert as a new paragraph:

225¾. Meats of all kinds, prepared or preserved, not specially provided for in this act, 20 per cent ad valorem.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next paragraph, as follows:

226. Poultry, 2 cents per pound; dressed, 3 cents per pound.

The Committee on Finance reported an amendment to paragraph 226, line 11, after the word "poultry," to strike out "2 cents per pound; dressed, 3 cents per pound," and insert, "dressed or undressed, 20 per cent ad valorem."

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The committee amendment is withdrawn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is withdrawn. The reading will proceed.

The Secretary read as follows:

Miscellaneous products:

227. Chicory root, burnt or roasted, ground or granulated, or in rolls, or otherwise prepared, and not specially provided for in this act, 2 cents per pound.

The Committee on Finance reported an amendment to paragraph 7, after the word "act," to strike out "2 cents per pound" and insert "30 per cent ad valorem."

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The amendment is withdrawn.

The Secretary read the next paragraph, as follows:

228. Chocolate, and sweetened chocolate, worth not exceeding 35 cents per pound, 2 cents per pound; chocolate confectionery, 25 per cent ad valorem.

The Committee on Finance reported an amendment to paragraph 228, before the word "not," in line 21, to strike out "worth" and insert "valued at;" and in line 22, after word "pound," to strike out "2 cents per pound" and insert "10 per cent ad valorem;" so as to read:

Chocolate, and sweetened chocolate, valued at not exceeding 35 cents per pound, 10 per cent ad valorem; chocolate confectionery, 25 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. This and the following paragraph I propose to have considered together, and I ask the Secretary to read the next paragraph before action is taken upon paragraph 228.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection the Secretary will read the succeeding paragraph.

The Secretary read the next paragraph, as follows:

229. Cocoa, prepared or manufactured, not specially provided for in this act, 2 cents per pound.

The Committee on Finance reported an amendment to paragraph 229, after the word "at," to strike out "2 cents per pound," and insert "5 per cent ad valorem."

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I move to strike out both of these paragraphs and insert in lieu of them:

229. Cocoa or chocolate, not sweetened or flavored, and sweetened or flavored, valued at 35 cents per pound or less, 2 cents per pound: valued at exceeding 35 cents per pound and chocolate confectionery, 35 per cent ad valorem.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next paragraph, as follows:

230. Cocoa butter or cocoa butterine, 3½ cents per pound.

The Committee on Finance reported an amendment in paragraph 230, line 9, after the word "butterine," to strike out "three and one-half cents per pound," and insert "fifteen per cent ad valorem."

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The amendment is withdrawn.

The Secretary read the next paragraph, as follows:

231. Dandelion root and acorns prepared, and other articles used as coffee, or as substitutes for coffee, not especially provided for in this act, 1½ cents per pound.

The Committee on Finance reported an amendment to paragraph 231, line 13, after the word "at," to strike out "1½ cents per pound" and insert "30 per cent ad valorem."

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The amendment is withdrawn.

The Secretary read the next paragraph, as follows:

232. Starch, including all preparations, from whatever substance produced, commonly used as starch, 1 cent per pound.

The Committee on Finance reported an amendment to paragraph 232, after the word "starch," in line 17, to strike out "1 cent per pound" and insert "30 per cent ad valorem."

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. FRYE. The amendment as it appears in the bill is "2 cents a pound," and before the Senator from Arkansas withdraws it and leaves the rate 1 cent per pound, I desire to be heard.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I have no doubt that the print as it appears here is a mistake of mine. I do not think the committee ever intended to change the rate as it is fixed in the bill as it came from the other House. I have no doubt that I gave it to the clerk, who prepared the amendment and had it printed, and I wish to take the responsibility of that mistake. I do not propose to offer the amendment. Of course the Senator from Maine can make his remarks.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, I desire to say a few words to the Senate in relation to this matter. It is a very important one. The northeastern county of the United States is a fine agricultural county, singularly enough, considering the cold climate. Not long ago it was a forest, but energetic, determined men went there, felled the trees, and converted the forest into farms. It is to-day as prosperous a county as there is in the State of Maine, and growing in population more rapidly than any other. Of course it can not raise wheat, because it can not compete with the West, though it has as good wheat lands as there are in the West.

It can not raise corn, because the climate is too cold. It can raise oats. The Senate has put oats on the free list. That county is hugged right in by Canada. It can raise buckwheat. The Senate has put buckwheat on the free list. It has immense stores of lumber. The Senate has placed lumber on the free list. Its hay crop is abundant, but the duty on that is reduced one-half. The pending bill threatens ruin to that county, as prosperous as it is. It raises enormous crops of potatoes. Judge Peters, formerly one of the members of the House of Representatives, declared that the potatoes of Aroostook County were the peach crop of Maine, and to the potato Aroostook County owes much of its prosperity.

Aroostook County up to a year ago could not reach the New York market by railroad without going through a foreign country. As a matter of course, only the selected potatoes could be sent to Boston or New York. The freight charges would absolutely prevent marketing the average product. In 1873 a bright Yankee started a starch mill in Aroostook, and to-day there are forty-five starch mills there, brought near to these farmers, within hauling distance. They consumed last year 2,500,000 bushels, yielding to the farmers 20 cents a bushel, giving to the county much of the prosperity it enjoys to-day.

The same is true of Northern Minnesota and Morthern New York, though not to an equal extent. It is true in one or two other portions of the North bordering on Canada, that they are using their potatoes for starch. These potatoes unless so used are utterly worthless. With a duty of 2 cents a pound those factories can pay 20 cents a bushel for potatoes and continue this prosperity in that section of the country. Now, no man has asked that the duty on starch shall be reduced. Under the act of 1883 the duty was 1 cent a pound and 20 per cent ad valorem; in the Mills bill 2 cents a pound. In 1890 it was made 2 cents a pound, and yet here it is proposed to reduce it 50 per cent, and drive the industry from the country.

Mr. President, let me show you something about the cost of starch. I will give the figures exactly, so that they will not be open to dispute. I will give the cost of a ton delivered in Providence, R. I., where it is very largely used; but no manufacturer from Providence, R. I., has been here demanding that this reduction be made. I will also give the actual cost a hundred pounds.

STARCH.

Cost of a ton delivered in Providence, R. I.:
Manufacturing and casks	$11.00
225 bushels potatoes, at 20 cents	45.00
Freight	6.50
Commission	2.10
At 3⅜ cents a pound	67.50
Profit, less insurance, taxes, and interest	2.90
It takes 12 bushels of potatoes to make 100 pounds of starch—20 cents	2.40
Cost of manufacturing	30
Commission and freight	40
Package	15
Total	3.25

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Maine has expired.

Mr. GEORGE. I ask that the Senator's time be extended.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Maine be allowed to proceed.

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Senator from Maine will proceed.

Mr. FRYE. Last year the price of starch was 4½ to 4⅝ cents. This year, from 3¼ to 3½. Starch can be imported from Germany for $1.85 per hundred pounds. Add the duty as proposed by the House of Representatives to the cost of starch from Germany, and it makes $2.40 as the cost of 100 pounds of starch. You may figure it as you please, at that cost you can not pay but 8 cents a bushel for potatoes.

Suppose you adopt the duty of 1 cent which the Senator from Arkansas proposes. Then you can not pay but 10 cents a bushel for potatoes, and it is simply a question whether this industry shall be destroyed. That is all it is. It involves its utter destruction. Now, why should this be done to these farmers up there? Do they deserve this treatment at our hands? They are splendid men, hard-working, intelligent, and patriotic, deserving from us good and not ill.

A few years ago all the glucose in the world was made from potato starch in Germany, and we imported it. To-day we make it from corn, and beat the world. That is what makes German starch so low. That is why they can send it here for $1.85. There are 135 potato-starch factories in this country; 45 in Maine, 20 in New Hampshire, 50 in New York, 10 in Minnesota, 4 or 5 in Wisconsin, 2 or 3 in North Dakota.

Mr. President, we have protected industries in other sections of this country. We have permitted them to live. I do not wish to make a sectional speech, nor to indulge in sectional talk, but if this commends itself to the Senators on the other side of the Chamber; if they believe that this industry in this country ought to be preserved, ought surely to vote their judgments in the matter, and not submit to caucus control. I supposed the matter was adjusted with the committee. I called their attention to it a long while ago. Filed a brief with them, and saw this result on the bill, of 2 cents a pound, and of course had a right to think it settled. Now, if they can not permit us to have 2 cents a pound, why can they not allow us 1½ cents a pound, the lowest duty ever had on starch? We can live, squeeze through, on one cent and a half.

Why can not the committee consent to a duty of 1½ cents, and let us live, instead of by this move of theirs made to-day utterly destroy us? I feel very much in earnest in this matter. We in Maine are being hurt tremendously by the bill, and especially in the northeastern part of the State.

Mr. GEORGE. I desire to ask the Senator from Maine a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. FRYE. With pleasure.

Mr. GEORGE. What other agricultural products have the people of that country on which to make a profit if the potato industry is destroyed?

Mr. FRYE. They have hay, oats, buckwheat, barley; but you have placed these on the free list, all but barley.

Mr. GEORGE. Does the Senator mean to say that if they are not allowed to have this tax upon potatoes and starch the whole agricultural industry of that country will be destroyed?

Mr. FRYE. I mean to say exactly this, that as we are left to-day, with buckwheat on the free list, oats on the free list, with an utter impossibility to raise wheat in competition with the great West, and a climate that will not permit them to raise one single hill of corn, potatoes are their main crop, and if they can not convert these potatoes into starch a serious blow has fallen upon Aroostook County so far as its agricultural industry is concerned.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair states to the Senator from Maine that his ten minutes have expired.

Mr. VEST. Our friend from Maine forgets, possibly in his enthusiasm he overlooks, the fact that we increased the duty upon potatoes 5 cents on the bushel.

Mr. ALLISON. From the bill as it came from the other House.

Mr. VEST. From the bill as it came from the other House. The House of Representatives sent the bill here with a duty of 10 cents, and we made it 15 cents. The statistics show that in 1891 there was exported 12,883,821 pounds of starch, worth $475,817. In 1892 the exports increased 8,000,000 pounds to 20,081,027, worth $612,531. In 1893 the increase continued to 21,938,456 pounds, worth $707,093. The imports were $89,249. So, speaking of the starch industry of the whole United States, it seems not only to have held its own, but to have gone out and taken possession of some of the foreign makets. I think, or rather I hope, because I have no local acquaintance that would justify in speaking as to that particular county, that the decrease of the duty will not cause the distress and ruin which my friend from Maine seems to imagine.

Mr. FRYE. I do not make any guess about it. I know just what it is, and I have given what the starch costs the people up there. Let me say right there that the increased duty on potatoes does not have any effect up in the northeastern part of the country. Nobody exports potatoes to Aroostook County, and the difficulty with Aroostook County farmers coming into Boston and New York with potatoes is that freights are so enormous that they can not do it at much of a profit. The only thing to do is to make the ordinary potatoes into starch.

Mr. VEST. But to show our Northern friends that we are not quite so black in this sectional matter as we are painted, I will move to make it 1½ cents per pound.

Mr. FRYE. I am greatly obliged to the Senator from Missouri. I think that will preserve to these people up there this, to them, valuable industry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In paragraph 232, line 18, after the words "one cent," insert "and one-half cents;" so as to read "1½ cents per pound."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read as follows:

233. Dextrine, burnt starch, gum substitute, or British gum, 1 cent per pound.

The Committee on Finance reported an amendment to paragraph 233, to strike out "1 cent per pound" in line 21 and insert "30 per cent ad valorem."

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I withdraw the amendment. I move to strike out "1 cent" and insert "1½ cents," so as to read:

Drextine, burnt starch, gum substitute, or British gum, 1½ cents per pound.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next paragraph, as follows:

234. Mustard, ground or preserved, in bottles or otherwise, 10 cents per pound.

The Committee on Finance reported an amendment to paragraph 234; in line 24, after the word "otherwise," to strike out "10 cents per pound" and insert "25 per cent ad valorem."

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The amendment is withdrawn.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was to insert as an additional paragraph:

234½. Orchids, lily of the valley, azaleas, palms, and other plants used for forcing under glass for cut flowers or decorative purposes, 10 per cent ad valorem.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next paragraph, as follows:

235. Spices, ground or powdered, not specially provided for in this act, 3 cents per pound; capsicum or red pepper, 2½ cents per pound, unground; sage, 1 cent per pound.

The Committee on Finance reported an amendment to paragraph 235; in line 5, after the word "powdered," to strike out "not specially provided for in this act, 3 cents per pound;" in line 8, after the word "pepper," to strike out "2½ cents per pound:" in line 9, after the word "sage," to strike out "1 cent per pound" and insert "30 per cent ad valorem;" so as to make the paragraph read:

235. Spices, ground or powdered; capsicum or red pepper, unground; sage, 30 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The amendment is withdrawn.

The Secretary read the next paragraph, as follows:

236. Vinegar, 7½ cents per gallon. The standard for vinegar shall be taken to be that strength which requires 35 grains of bicarbonate of potash to neutralize 1 ounce troy of vinegar.

The Committee on Finance reported an amendment to paragraph 236; in line 12, to strike out "7½ cents per gallon. The standard for vinegar shall be taken to be that strength which requires 35 grains of bicarbonate of potash to neutralize 1 ounce troy of vinegar.," and insert "20 per cent ad valorem;" so as to read:

Vinegar, 20 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The committee amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. CAREY. I propose two amendments to the pending bill, which I ask to have printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments will be printed, and lie on the table.

Mr. WASHBURN. I offered an amendment some days ago to come in at the end of this schedule. I should like to have it read.

The SECRETARY. At the end of Schedule G add the following proviso:

Provided, That if it shall at any time appear to the President of the United States that the government of any country producing and exporting the articles and products hereinafter enumerated imposes discriminating or prohibitory duties or other exactions upon grain or the products of grain, or upon other agricultural products of the United States, he shall have the power, and it is hereby made his duty, to certify to the Secretary of the Treasury the fact of the imposition by such government of discriminating or prohibitory duties or other exactions upon grain or the products of grain, or upon other agricultural products of the United States, and thereupon, and so long as such discriminating or prohibitory duties or exactions are maintained, the Secretary of the Treasury shall levy and collect additional and discriminating duties upon the articles and products, the product of or exported from such foreign country into the United States, equal to 50 per cent of the duties provided for in this act, as follows:

Silk, partially manufactured from cocoons or from waste silk, and not further advanced or manufactured than carded or combed silk, thrown silk, not more advanced than singles, tram, organzine, sewing silk, twist, floss, and silk thread or yarn of every description, except spun silk, spun silk in skeins, cops, warps, or on beams, velvets, plushes, chenilles, or other pile fabrics.

Webbings, gorings, suspenders, braces, beltings, bindings, braids, galloons, fringes, cords, and tassels, any of the foregoing which are elastic or nonelastic, buttons and ornaments made of silk, or of which silk is the component material of chief value.

Laces and articles made wholly or in part of lace, and embroideries, including articles or fabrics embroidered by hand or machinery, handkerchiefs, neck ruffings and ruchings, clothing ready made, and articles of wearing apparel of every description, including knit goods made up or manufactured wholly or in part by the tailor, seamstress, or manufacturer, composed of silk or of which silk is the component material of chief value, and beaded silk goods, not specially provided for in this act.

All manufactures of silk, of which silk is the component material of chief value, including those having India rubber as a component material, not specially provided for in this act.

Dice, draughts, chessmen, chess balls, and billiard, pool, and bagatelle balls of ivory, bone, or other materials.

Dolls, doll heads, toy marbles of whatever material composed, and all toys composed of rubber, china, porcelain, parian, bisque, earthen or stone ware.

Brandy and other spirits manufactured or distilled from grain or other materials, cordials, liqueurs, arrack, absinthe, kirschwasser, ratafia, and other spirituous beverages or bitters of all kinds containing spirits.

Champagne and all other sparkling wines.

Still wines, including ginger wine or ginger cordial, and vermuth.

If the government of such country shall cease to impose such discriminating or prohibitory duties or exactions on the said products of the United States, the President may communicate such fact to the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Secretary of the Treasury shall thereupon cease to collect the discriminating duties by this section imposed on the products of or exported from such country into the United States; but the discriminating duties in this section provided for may be reimposed whenever and as often as the President shall deem proper under the power hereby conferred.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WASHBURN.]

Mr. WASHBURN. Mr. President, the purpose of this amendment, as apparent, is a step in the direction of securing for the grain, and the products of grain of this country, some portion of the market of the continental countries of Europe.

As matters now stand it is, to a great extent, impossible to export the grain, or products of grain, to any of these countries on account of prohibitory duties. Such is the case, as I understand, with all the countries to which we could reasonably look for a market for our grain, but the worst feature is that while the duties on wheat, if you please, are very high, the duties on the manufactured product of wheat (flour) is absolutely prohibitory. Such is the case with Germany, France, Austro-Hungary, Italy, and perhaps some other of the continental countries.

The effect of this is especially unfavorable to the great milling interests of this country, as our millers are absolutely deprived of these markets for the purchase of their flour. For instance, Germany imposes a duty of 3 marks (72 cents) per hundred kilos (220 pounds) of wheat, while the duty on flour is 7 marks ($1.68) to 100 kilos. This is, as intended, a discriminating and in fact a prohibitory duty against the importation of flour. A duty of 4 marks would afford German millers relatively ample protection. Seven marks becomes absolutely prohibitory. Other continental countries either have, or their legislative bodies are now engaged in the adoption of, tariffs more hostile to American milling and American grain than even Germany.

It is only during the last winter that measures have been presented in the French Chamber of Deputies looking to a further increase in duties on all our grain and grain products, notwithstanding the liberal legislation proposed in the Wilson bill, so far as its effects on French importations to this country are concerned. There seems to me no good reason why the people of this country who are importing so enormously of the products of Continental Europe, especially in the way of luxuries and goods that we could well dispense with, why we should be absolutely shut out from sending to them some portion of our surplus breadstuffs.

Why, should we not be permitted to pay for our champagne and wines and brandies and silks and other luxuries or nonessentials, with our wheat and flour rather than in gold. This while it may not be free trade, it would certainly be fair trade. So far as our own people are concerned, by the adoption of this amendment, they would be deprived of none of the necessaries of life. It would at the most only increase the prices and curtail the consumption of articles of voluntary use and luxuries; but to the exporting country the loss would be irreparable.

I desire to suggest that this proposition involves nothing new in our legislative policy, whether from one party standpoint or the other. Legislation of the same character was enacted in the Fifty-first Congress on the bill introduced and championed by Senator VEST, in the act of Congress providing for an "Inspection of meats for exportation and prohibiting the importation of adulterated articles of food, and authorizing the President to make rules in certain cases, and for other purposes."

In this law to which I refer, section 5 provides:

SEC 5. That whenever the President shall be satisfied that unjust discriminations are made by or under the authority of any foreign state against the importation to or sale in such foreign state of any product of the United States, he may direct that such products of such foreign state so discriminating against any product of the United States as he may deem proper shall be excluded from importation to the United States; and in such case he shall make proclamation of his direction in the premises, and therein name the time when such direction against importation shall take effect, and after such date the importation of the articles named in such proclamation shall be unlawful. The President may at any time revoke, modify, terminate, or renew any such direction as in his opinion the public interest may require.

This has precisely the same effect on our meat exportations as I desire, so far as our grain and grain products.

This proposition is identical with that act, and it is only fair to say that no law passed in recent years has been more beneficial in results to our farmers than the so-called meat-inspection bill——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senator from Minnesota will be given another five minutes to conclude his observations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Senator from Minnesota will proceed.

Mr. WASHBURN. I desire to say to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] that in his whole legislative career he has never done anything that has attached him more to the farmers of the West than his championship of this measure.

The principle of reciprocal rates and duties underlies the whole system of international law. It has been recognized by our Government since its foundation. Those who were in the Fiftieth Congress will remember the message of President Cleveland, recommending legislation by Congress to prohibit the transmitting of Canadian goods over our border, on account of the treatment of our fishermen by that government.

The same principle is recognized in the pending tariff bill, in sections 14 and 17.

The propriety of leaving the ascertainment of the fact as to whether a duty shall be imposed or importation permitted by the executive branch of the Government is conceded in this bill, as in every preceding tariff bill, in section 17. It is believed that the articles chosen for the imposing of discriminating duties, if necessary, are most suitable and effective for that purpose. Being luxuries and articles of voluntary use, increased taxation would be borne by the rich with the least inconvenience to our people generally, and the exportation of articles of this class would prove the most effective in retaliation.

Germany supplies us with most of our toys and goods of that description, as well as the greater portion of bone and ivory named in this amendment, and the other schedule would apply especially to France and Germany.

The milling industry to-day is one of the most important as well as most extensive of the American industries. If an amendment of this character is not adopted the American miller will have to stand by and see his raw material (wheat) taken from him for manufacture into flour and sale in a market for which he is excluded by discriminating and prohibitory legislation, while we are taking from the same country millions of their products without which we could well get along.

I have obtained and would call attention to the Senate to some statistical data furnished by the Northwestern Miller, a paper published in my own State, which show at a glance the extent and importance of the milling industries of the United States.

The exportations of wheat flour from the United States in the last four years are as follows:

Year ending June 30—	Wheat in bushels.	Value of wheat.	Flour in barrels.	Value of flour.
1890	54,387,767	$45,275,906	12,231,711	$57,036,168
1891	55,131,948	51,420,272	11,344,304	54,705,616
1892	157,280,351	101,599,132	15,196,769	75,362,285
1893	117,121,109	93,534,970	16,620,339	75,494,347

The daily capacity of our mills in barrels is as follows:

State.	Daily capacity.
	Barrels.
Minnesota	100,000
North Dakota	7,000
South Dakota	10,000
Wisconsin	47,000
Michigan	51,000
Illinois	61,000
Iowa	5,000
Nebraska	7,000
Other States	262,000
Total	550,000

The amount of capital invested, estimated at $100 per barrel of daily capacity, which is conservative, reaches the enormous sum of $55,000,000.

The number of men employed is not less than 27,500, at wages averaging at least $2 per day.

The average yearly output of flour is not far from 75,000,000 barrels. Of this amount the exports average 13,700,000 and home consumption some 61,300,000.

I am assured by the authority referred to, however, that, owing to the dullness in the flour market, the entire demand for the current year (domestic and foreign) could be supplied in one hundred and thirteen days of operation by our whole milling capacity, leaving two hundred and one days for enforced idleness or partial work. This state of facts shows the desperate condition of the industry, and the propriety of Congress extending such aid as is practicable and legitimate.

These figures, which are believed to be absolutely authentic and more conservative than those of the Census Bureau, also emphasize the economic value to our people of our milling industry, viewed simply as an industrial factor. To illustrate: If we were not prevented by hostile regulations and discriminations in Europe from manufacturing our entire wheat export (as we have the capacity to do), the average annual export (125,000,000) If ground into flour (27,770,000 barrels), would leave our shores with an enhanced valuation.

For sacks, at 15 cents per barrel	$4,165,000
For cost of manufacturing, at 25 cents per barrel	6,942,000
Total	11,107,500

Increasing our credit and consumptive ability to that extent.

Besides, manufacturing the flour here would leave 833,100 tons of feed for domestic consumption, which, at an average valuation of $10 per ton, makes $8,331.

I have obtained and desire to incorporate as a part of my remarks a statement showing the duties on grain and the products of grain imposed by different countries, including Germany, France, Italy, and Austro-Hungary. It will be seen by the figures furnished that in almost every case the duty on the manufactured product is double that on the raw material, showing among other things, that France and Germany are prepared and determined to make use of protective and even prohibitory duties in the interests of their manufacturing industries:

Foreign import duties on corn and flour.

Mr. HOAR. I understand the Senator from Minnesota to say that President Cleveland proposed to exercise this power in regard to Canada in consequence of their treatment of our fishermen. My recollection is that President Cleveland never interposed or proposed any such exercise of power in regard to the fisheries, but it was by reason of their discriminating in favor of their own products in tolls on their canals that he made that proposition.

Mr. PEFFER. Mr. President, we have a very large milling industry in our State. At the city of Topeka we have five large flouring mills, with a daily capacity of from 2,000 to 2,500 barrels of flour. The proprietors of those mills and others in different portions of the State, at Kansas City, Kans., and at Kansas City, Mo., also, have corresponded with me frequently upon this subject. The Senator from Minnesota has very clearly and fully stated the objections which our people make to the discriminating duties against flour in France and Germany. I merely wish to say to the Senator that our millers, who do a very extensive business and who export a good deal of flour, labor under the same disadvantages that the millers in other portions of the country do, and that they are in full sympathy with the amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota. Having presented their view of the case, I have done all that I care to do.

Mr. HARRIS. I move to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. ALDRICH. I think we can get a vote on the amendment now.

Mr. HARRIS. If we can take a vote on the amendment I have no desire to interpose the motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WASHBURN].

Mr. WASHBURN. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CAFFERY (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Montana [Mr. POWER] to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. IRBY], and vote "nay."

Mr. GALLINGER (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS].

Mr. GORDON (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] to the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LINDSAY], and vote "nay."

Mr. HIGGINS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON]. I should be glad to transfer my pair if I can make an arrangement with someone on the other side of the Chamber.

Mr. PLATT (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. HUNTON].

Mr. QUAY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], who, I am informed, will be necessarily absent during the remainder of to-day's session on official business. I make this announcement and decline to vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CULLOM. I am paired generally with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY]. He was called away from the Senate this afternoon. I should vote "yea" if allowed to vote.

Mr. BRICE. I suggest to the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY] that he transfer his pair to the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT], and both he and I can vote.

Mr. QUAY. That arrangement is entirely satisfactory.

Mr. BRICE. I vote "nay."

Mr. QUAY. I vote "yea."

Mr. CALL. I announce my pair with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL].

Mr. HIGGINS. I suggest to the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] that he can transfer his pair to the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON], and we can both vote.

Mr. CALL. I will do so. I vote "nay."

Mr. HIGGINS. I vote "yea."

Mr. CAREY. I am paired with the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. MITCHELL]. I will transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] and vote. I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 18, nays 26; as follows:

So the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Secretary read as follows:

SCHEDULE H.—SPIRITS, WINES, AND OTHER BEVERAGES.

Spirits:

237. Brandy and other spirits manufactured or distilled from grain or other materials, and not specially provided for in this act, $1.80 per proof gallon.

The Committee on Finance reported to amend the paragraph by adding the following:

But when imported in bottles or jugs no separate or additional duty shall be assessed on the bottles or jugs.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The amendment of the Committee is withdrawn.

Mr. ALDRICH. I move to strike out $1.80 where it occurs in this paragraph and insert $2.50.

The aggregate reductions in this schedule upon brandy and other similar articles is $1,800,000 in round numbers. If any Senator sitting upon the other side of this aisle can tell me any reason why the rates upon these articles should be reduced I should be glad to hear it. I should be glad if the committee who have this matter in charge, or some other Senator familiar with the construction of this bill, would give a single reason why the rates upon these articles of luxury should be reduced.

We have brandies, gins, Scotch whiskies, beers, still wines, and other articles of that kind. We have been called upon to-day and on other days to increase very largely the duties upon necessaries of life, I suppose partly for the purpose of furnishing an excuse for the reduction of these duties upon French brandies, Scotch whiskies, cordials, and articles of that kind. I do not intend to take up the time of the Senate at any great length, but the party responsible for these reductions will certainly have to answer to the people for their action to-day.

Mr. VEST. We will take that responsibility. We did this deliberately, and I think we had the best reasons in the world for it. While these articles are articles of luxury and made everywhere among civilized nations the great source of revenue, yet it is very bad policy to put them so high as to make the duties prohibitory and to decrease revenue.

We came to the conclusion that there was no reason from any standpoint for making these duties higher than we have fixed them here. In the first place, we believe we will get more revenue by an import duty upon these spirits, considering the nature of the article; and, in the second place, it is no such interest in the United States as appeals to us to entirely exclude foreign competition and make money for the domestic manufacturer.

I would not use the tariff power of the Government in order to strike down this or any other industry while we are collecting taxes from it and recognizing it as legitimate. At the same time I make no concealment of the fact that there is nothing in the nature of the manufacture of alcoholic stimulants that appeals to me to protect it or encourage it. I would make it pay all the revenue possible to the Government. I would not foster it in any way. I believe that these duties from either standpoint, either that of revenue or, as our friends on the other side call it, of protection, are about right, and that is the reason they are so placed.

Mr. ALDRICH. I do not defend the existing law or seek to make this amendment on the ground that the duties are protective duties. It is simply and purely a question of revenue. All political economists have agreed that the articles included in this schedule are proper articles for revenue duties. There can be no question about that. The tariff of 1846, which every Senator on the other side of the Chamber always alludes to as an ideal tariff in these matters, imposed a duty of 100 per cent on the very articles included in this paragraph.

Now, it is proposed by a Democratic Congress, in the latter part of the nineteenth century, when we need revenue, according to their own statements, and when we are imposing high duties upon necessaries of life, to reduce the duty from 100 per cent to 65.98 upon these articles.

I think the common people of the country, whom the Senator from Missouri always speak for, are not greatly interested as to whether the duty upon French brandies is 65 per cent or 100 per cent. They do not use them, and they are willing that the people who do use them shall pay a high rate of duty.

Mr. HARRIS. Question.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, this is an important schedule certainly as relating to revenue. It is not a very lengthy schedule, and yet it is not probable that we can finish it this evening. I suggest to the Senator in charge of the bill that we adjourn now and take up this schedule Monday morning. I would be willing on Monday morning, certainly after 11 o'clock, to apply the five-minutes rule to the debate on this schedule.

Mr. HARRIS. I will say to the Senator from Iowa that the Senator from Rhode Island and myself thought some time ago we could probably get through with this schedule this evening. I should be exceedingly glad to do so. Of course I wish to oblige as far as possible the convenience and comfort of Senators on both sides of the Chamber. What reason is there why we can not go on and get through with this schedule?

Mr. ALLISON. I will say frankly to the Senator that the discussion of the amendment offered by the Senator from Minnesota has made some impression upon me as respects our relations with the French people concerning these duties. I think if we are to reduce duties as is proposed here we ought to make a distinction as between distilled spirits produced from grapes and distilled spirits distilled from grain. I suppose the object of those who are in charge of this bill is to make it easier——

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator allow me to suggest to him that the Senate has disposed of the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. ALLISON. I do not propose to renew the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota; but I notice in looking at the comparison of these paragraphs that there is a very large importation of spirits distilled from grain. The importation of spirits distilled from grain for the year 1893 was $1,639,224, a large increase over the importations of any prior year, at least so far as this schedule is concerned; I have not looked beyond. So the proposition to reduce the duty upon distilled spirits from grain I believe 65 cents and 70 cents a gallon is a great reduction when at the same time we are increasing the tax upon our own distilled spirits from 90 cents a gallon to $1.10.

It seems to me that in dealing with this subject, having so many relations and difficulties in its pathway, we should not now at the hour of 5 o'clock on Saturday night undertake to finish a schedule of this importance. It certainly will not take a great while on Monday to go through with this schedule. For myself, I should like to make some observations on the schedule at a later day; and I do not wish to do it to-day. I am perfectly willing as far as I am concerned that the five-minute rule may be applied to this schedule from the opening of the session on Monday morning.

Mr. HARRIS. If I can get a unanimous-consent agreement, upon this schedule and the cotton schedule, down to the schedule on wool and woolens, to limit the debate to five minutes to a Senator on any single amendment or on the paragraph—and when I say five minutes I mean five minutes, and no extension by striking out the last or any other word—if I can get such an agreement I shall concede to the request of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not like for myself to make at this time any suggestions respecting so important a schedule as the cotton schedule. It seems to me it would be wiser to take one of these schedules at a time; whilst this schedule is not a lengthy one, I think it ought to be debated a little more at large than we can debate it to-night. If the Senator from Tennessee will ask unanimous consent that on Monday this schedule shall be considered under Rule VIII, which is the five-minute rule, I for one will not object, and I do not believe that there will be any objection on this side of the Chamber.

Mr. HARRIS. What objection has the Senator to extending it to the cotton schedule as well?

Mr. ALLISON. I stated to the Senator that that is too important a schedule for me to make any suggestion about.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask that the five-minute rule as defined a moment since by myself be applied to this and the cotton schedule

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. HOAR. I desire to notify the Senate, as I did three days ago, that that agreement will not be acceded to while I am a member of the Senate in regard to any schedule whatever, I being present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made to the request of the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. HARRIS. If I understand the suggestion of the Senator from Massachusetts, it applies as well to this as to the cotton schedule?

Mr. CULLOM (to Mr. HOAR). State what you mean.

Mr. HOAR. I mean to say that I shall not beforehand agree to a rule which confines every Senator to five minutes' debate on any schedule.

Mr. HARRIS. Not on the schedule, but on the specific paragraph.

Mr. HOAR. On any specific amendment, on any specific topic. Under the rules of the Senate a whole appropriation bill might be introduced as an amendment; the largest and most important subject might come up; it might be discussed without being moved in terms, and it is an innovation; it is a thing never assented to. The five-minute rule, as defined on this side of the Chamber yesterday, is a well-known rule, which has its interpretation in the customs of the Senate. I do not object to any arrangement which the Republican members of the Finance Committee make in regard to adopting that rule. I propose to commit the conduct of the proceeding in general to them; but what the Senator from Tennessee asks for never will be agreed to in the Senate on any subject whatever while I am present and a member.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suggest to the Senator from Tennessee that we now agree to apply the ordinary five-minute rule to this schedule, and when we reach the cotton schedule I have no doubt we can secure a similar agreement in regard to it.

Mr. HARRIS. I understand from the declaration of the Senator from Massachusetts just made that the five-minute rule can not be applied to this or any other schedule.

Mr. ALDRICH. I did not understand the Senator from Massachusetts that way.

Mr. HOAR. I said directly the contrary.

Mr. VEST (to Mr. HARRIS). The Senator from Massachusetts did not say that.

Mr. HARRIS. Then I misunderstood the Senator. I am glad I did, or rather I am glad that he did not mean what I understood him to mean.

I do not intend to enter into any discussion with the Senator from Massachusetts as to what the five-minute rule is in the Senate. I have very well-defined opinions, though, as to what it is, and they do not agree at all with the views of the Senator from Massachusetts. But I do not intend to open that question or to debate it. If I can not get a five-minutes agreement for the cotton schedule as well, I will take it upon this schedule if I can get it.

Mr. ALLISON and others. All right.

Mr. HARRIS. In other words, I am going to do the best I can.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senator from Tennessee will ask unanimous consent that the five-minute rule may be applied to Schedule H, and that then he will consent that on this Saturday night at least we may adjourn.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask unanimous consent that the five-minute rule be applied to Schedule H until it is concluded as in Committee of the Whole.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. HOAR. I make no objection; but I suppose the Senator from Tennessee understands my interpretation of that rule by this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. HARRIS. The time may come when the Senator and I will debate the question as to the proper interpretation.

I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, June 11, 1894, at 10 o'clock a. m.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate June 9, 1894.

POSTMASTERS.

Henry Vanscoy, to be postmaster at Kingston, in the county of Luzerne and State of Pennsylvania, in the place of David S. Clark, whose commission expired April 16, 1894.

Ralph F. Krieger, to be postmaster at Weehawken, in the county of Hudson and State of New Jersey, in the place of Theodore Buttenbaum, whose commission expired May 2, 1894.

Albert H. Jones, to be postmaster at Granville, in the county of Licking and State of Ohio, in the place of John C. Malone, whose commission will expire June 14, 1894.

W. M. Dunklee, to be postmaster at Christiansburg, in the county of Montgomery and State of Virginia, in the place of George W. Wilson, whose commission will expire June 18, 1894.

ASSISTANT SURGEON IN NAVY.

Ammen Farenholt, a resident of Massachusetts, to be an assistant surgeon in the Navy, from the 29th of May, 1894, to fill a vacancy in that grade.

Infantry arm.

First Lieut. William P. Evans, Nineteenth Infantry, to be captain, June 7, 1894, vice Taylor, Nineteenth Infantry, retired from active service.

First Lieut. Robert J. C. Irvine, Eleventh Infantry, to be captain, June 8, 1894, vice Hoffman, Eleventh Infantry, retired from active service.

Second Lieut. Thomas G. Hanson, Nineteenth Infantry, to be first lieutenant, June 7, 1894, vice Evans, Nineteenth Infantry, promoted.

Second Lieut. Herman Hall, Fourth Infantry, to be first lieutenant, June 8, 1894, vice Irvine, Eleventh Infantry, promoted.

WITHDRAWAL.

The nomination of John J. McDonald, to be postmaster at Kingston, Luzerne County, Pa., which was sent to the Senate April 3, 1894.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate June 9, 1894.

MARSHAL.

Emery S. Harris, of Vermont, to be marshal of the United States for the district of Vermont.

POSTMASTER.

Tyler G. Kent, to be postmaster at Wytheville, in the county of Wythe and State of Virginia.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, June 9, 1894.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. B. BAGBY.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

A. J. DRUMWRIGHT.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a copy of the finding of the Court of Claims in the case of A. J. Drumwright vs. The United States; which was referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. ALDERSON, by unanimous consent, obtained indefinite leave of absence on account of sickness.

HOLMES & LEATHERS.

Mr. DAVEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 6698) for the relief of Holmes & Leathers.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana for the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. COOMBS. I think I shall have to object to it at this time, Mr. Speaker.

UNITED STATES COURTS, MINNESOTA.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 7293) to amend chapter 167 of the acts of the Fifty-first Congress, approved July 26, 1890.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That all criminal proceedings instituted for the trial of offenses against the laws of the United States arising in the district of Minnesota, shall be brought, had, and prosecuted in the division of said district in which one or more of the defendants resided at the time such offenses were committed.

SEC. 2. That this act shall take effect upon its passage.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. COOMBS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to hear an explanation of the bill.

Mr. POWERS. At the second session of the Fifty-first Congress an act was passed dividing the district of Minnesota into six divisions and providing for the holding of courts in those several divisions, and regulating the proceedings in civil causes. The act did not apply to criminal causes. In all the other districts in the country, so far as I am advised, criminal causes also are tried in the subdivisions of the district, as this bill proposes in this case.

Mr. COOMBS. Is the bill reported favorably by the committee?

Mr. POWERS. It is.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Vermont for the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. REED. What is the request?

Mr. CULBERSON. I will state to the gentleman from Maine that this bill was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary by the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. POWERS], and that there is absolutely no objection to it.

Mr. REED. That is all right. I thought it was another bill.

An amendment recommended by the committee, striking out in line 6, the words "one or more of the defendants resided at the time," was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. POWERS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The title of the bill was amended so as to read, "A bill regulating the procedure in criminal causes in the district of Minnesota."

HYPOLITE FILHIOL AND OTHERS.

Mr. BOATNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of a resolution reported in connection with the bill (H. R. 2380) for the relief of Hypolite Filhiol and others.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized and required to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $4,825, one-third thereof to Hypolite Filhiol, of Ouachita, Parish, Louisiana, and the other two-thirds to the legal representatives of Edwin L. Betin and Charles D. Betin, late of said parish, to be received and receipted for by them in full payment for property taken from them in said parish by and for the use of the Federal Army during the late war.

Mr. BOATNER. I ask that the report accompanying the bill be read—the resolution.

Mr. COOMBS. I shall have to object to this bill, Mr. Speaker I did not understand that it proposed an appropriation.

Mr. BOATNER. I hope the gentleman will withhold his objection for a moment.

Mr. COOMBS. Certainly.

Mr. BOATNER. This is merely a proposition to refer the claim to the Court of Claims, not to pay it. I ask that the resolution be read.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the bill (H. R. 2380) entitled "A bill for the relief of Hypolite Filhiol and others," now pending in the House of Representatives, together with all the accompanying papers be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims, in pursuance of the provisions of an act of March 3, 1883, and an act entitled "An act to provide for the bringing of suits against the United States," approved March 3, 1887, to find and report to the House of Representatives the facts bearing upon the merits of the claim, including the loyalty of the claimant, and all other facts contemplated by the provisions of said act.

Mr. COOMBS. Reserving the right to object, I shall be glad to hear the gentleman explain.

Mr. BOATNER. A bill of this character in favor of Hypolite Filhiol was introduced a number of years ago, and passed by Congress, referring the case to the Court of Claims. When it reached the court it was found that an interest in the claim was held by the heirs of Betin, who were, at the time the property was taken, minor children. The court, therefore, can not consider the matter under the resolution heretofore adopted, because an interest is held by parties over whom the court has not been invested with jurisdiction. This is merely to authorize the Court of Claims to ascertain and report to the House whether there is a debt, whether the parties were loyal, and the amount of the debt, if any exists, in order that Congress may deal with it accordingly. I think there can be no possible objection.

Mr. COGSWELL. There can not be any objection to that.

Mr. BURROWS. I shall have to object, Mr. Speaker.

FISH HATCHERY, PHILADELPHIA.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the resolution which I send to the desk.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the United States Fish Commissioner be, and is hereby, directed to report to the House of Representatives the desirability of the Government's establishing a fish hatchery in the grounds of the Zoölogical Society, Philadelphia, on the Schuykill River, in the city of Philadelphia, State of Pennsylvania.

Mr. BINGHAM. This carries no money, no appropriation, no expenditure whatever.

The resolution was adopted.

On motion of Mr. BINGHAM, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted was laid on the table.

CIRCUIT COURTS OF APPEALS.

Mr. TURNER of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the desk.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the seventh section of the act entitled "An act to establish circuit courts of appeals, and to define and regulate in certain cases the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1891, be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 7. That where, upon a hearing in equity in a district court or in an existing circuit court, an injunction shall be granted or continued or a receiver appointed, by an interlocutory order or decree, in a cause in which an appeal from a final decree may be taken under the provisions of this act to the circuit court of appeals, an appeal may be taken from such interlocutory order or decree granting or continuing such injunction or appointing such receiver to the circuit court of appeals: Provided, That the appeal must be taken within thirty days from the entry of such order or decree, and it shall take precedence in the appellate court; and the proceedings in other respects in the court below shall not be stayed, unless otherwise ordered by that court, during the pendency of such appeal."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request for the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. DINGLEY. Will the gentleman please explain what changes are proposed to be made by this bill?

Mr. TURNER of Georgia. The act of March 3, 1890, creating the circuit courts of appeals, provided that appeals might be had from interlocutory orders granting or continuing injunctions, but it did not provide for an appeal from orders appointing receivers without injunctions. This bill is intended to include such orders.

Mr. CULBERSON. This is the unanimous report of the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. LACEY. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee whether the bill provides also for appeals in cases of dissolution of injunctions.

Mr. CULBERSON. All interlocutory orders.

Mr. REED. I should like to understand something more about this.

Mr. TURNER of Georgia. On what point would the gentleman from Maine like to have an explanation?

Mr. CULBERSON rose.

Mr. TURNER of Georgia. I yield to the chairman of the committee that he may make an explanation.

Mr. CULBERSON. I will state——

Mr. REED. I think we had better have this matter come up in regular order.

Mr. TURNER of Georgia. I hope the gentleman from Maine will not factiously interpose. I know he would not if he understood this matter. The present law allows appeals on interlocutory orders granting, modifying, or continuing injunctions, but it does not allow appeals from interlocutory orders merely appointing receivers. The object of this bill is to place that class of cases under the same rules as injunctions.

Mr. REED. Certainly upon the gentleman's statement that seems to be desirable; but we would like to know what effect this may have as a practical matter of business?

Mr. TURNER of Georgia. I will explain. It seems that under a practice which has grown up, these courts have been granting orders appointing receivers and omitting to issue any injunction, so that there should be no appeal allowed. But the gentleman from Maine can see that the appointment of a receiver by whom a whole estate can be administered may be as important a subject of review as the granting of an injunction.

This is a mere omission, I assure the gentleman, in the original act; and I am sure that he as a lawyer will see that the propriety of allowing an appeal in this class of cases is greater than in the other.

Mr. REED. Were such matters the subject of an appeal before this court was created?

Mr. TURNER of Georgia. This matter grows out of the special jurisdiction conferred upon the court by the act of March 3, 1890. I think that writs of error or appeals are allowed in all the courts in all the States on interlocutory orders of the kind I describe.

Mr. REED. Prior to the creation of this court did this right of appeal exist in similar cases? The lower court, whatever it may have been, had, as I understand, the power of appointing receivers the same as now; was there in such cases a right of appeal to the higher court?

Mr. TURNER of Georgia. The gentleman knows that the privilege of taking appeals and writs of error in cases pending in the United States courts was, before the act of March 3, 1890, quite restricted. In the act to which I refer this privilege was granted as to injunctions because the granting of an injunction was regarded as a matter in which there ought to be the right of review for the guidance of the court below in the final determination of the cause. The gentleman can readily see that this privilege of appeal which this amendatory bill proposes to allow with respect to orders appointing receivers is just as important, in fact more so, than the privilege of appeal in the other cases which I have mentioned.

Mr. REED. Will this contemplated proceeding stay the appointment of a receiver?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Will it act as a supersedeas?

Mr. REED. Will it act as a supersedeas and stay the appointment of the receiver?

Mr. TURNER of Georgia. It will not operate as a supersedeas with respect to the matter pending for final decree in the court below; but pending the appeal with reference to the appointment of a receiver, the case in that respect will be of course suspended pending the appeal.

Mr. REED. I suggest to the gentleman from Georgia that he allow this matter to rest so that we may have opportunity to examine it. It seems that there may be some elements of danger about it. I do not desire to make any opposition, if further examination shall show the measure to be proper.

Mr. TURNER of Georgia. If the gentleman takes that position, of course I can not resist him.

Mr. REED. I prefer that the matter be allowed to go over so that we may know more about it.

Mr. TURNER of Georgia. Perhaps the gentleman will be willing to hear a statement of the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary [Mr. CULBERSON].

Mr. REED. It is rather difficult to dispose of a question like this upon this sort of interlocutory discussion.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] will be allowed to make a statement.

There was no objection.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. Speaker, I understand that every member of the Judiciary Committee, including both Democrats and Republicans, who has examined this matter has consented to a favorable report of this bill. It will be remembered that by the act of March 3, 1890, an appeal was for the first time given from an order of the circuit court, or the district judge sitting in the circuit court, granting an injunction in these receivership cases.

Now, in order to avoid an appeal, the judges grant the order for the appointment of a receiver without making an order for an injunction, the result being that the receiver may administer the whole estate, and no appeal or review can lie until the case is finally settled in the court below. Unless that court sees proper to issue an order for an injunction, no appeal lies; there is no opportunity for revision; and the receiver may go on and administer the estate. Those who might desire to complain must wait the final settlement of the estate in order to have the case reviewed.

Now, if the appeal is allowed on an injunction in one of these cases, I do not see why it should not be allowed in the case of the appointment of the receiver who takes charge of the entire estate and have the matter settled.

Mr. POWERS. Will the gentleman from Texas yield to me for a moment?

Mr. CULBERSON. Certainly.

Mr. POWERS. If I understand the purpose of this bill, which the gentleman from Georgia, I believe, introduced, it simply proposes to extend the ordinary rules of chancery proceedings, which prevents an appeal from any order except the final order to certain interlocutory motions or orders.

Mr. CULBERSON. That is the purpose exactly.

Mr. POWERS. The present law allows an appeal in cases where an injunction is asked. I recollect in connection with this case it was thought more important in many instances to grant an appeal in cases of the appointment of a receiver who has to take charge of the entire distribution of the property than to admit appeals in cases of injunction which are only temporary in their character; and the purpose of this bill was to allow appeals in such cases.

Mr. CULBERSON. That is the whole bill.

Mr. POWERS. Now, the question has been asked as to what would become of the property pending such an appeal. It is a well-known principle in equity jurisprudence that the court of equity always has power in all cases to preserve the subject-matter of litigation, so that there would be no difficulty in this case if this jurisdiction is extended to hear appeals in the cases proposed here. It simply enables the parties in interest to protect the property against an improper administration through a receiver by the interlocutory orders of a lower court. It can only be done by appropriate legislation of this character, and I believe this was recommended by the entire committee.

Mr. REED. I would like to ask if there is any pressing haste about this matter?

Mr. CULBERSON. Well, a practice has grown up in this country in order to avoid appeals, to refuse the granting of an injunction because no appeal could be taken.

Mr. McCALL. Let me ask the gentleman whether the appeal would affect the order for the appointment of the receiver?

Mr. CULBERSON. Oh, no.

Mr. McCALL. The receivership would still continue?

Mr. CULBERSON. Yes.

Mr. McCALL. And it would not affect the order of the court?

Mr. CULBERSON. Everything stands exactly in statu quo until the decision of the higher court is made known.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. REED. I shall have to ask that this matter go over. I want to look into it a little further.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. COOMBS. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of committees for reports.

The committees were called.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE CHATTAHOOCHEE RIVER.

Mr. WISE, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, reported back the bill (H. R. 6577) to authorize the construction of a wagon and foot bridge across the Chattahoochee River at or near the town of Columbia, Ala.; which was referred to the House Calendar.

ADMISSION TO AMERICAN REGISTRY OF FOREIGN SHIPS.

Mr. PERKINS, from the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, presented the views of the minority of the committee, under leave heretofore granted, to accompany the bill (H. R. 2655) providing for free admission to American registry of ships built in foreign countries.

The SPEAKER. The views of the minority will be printed to accompany the report of the committee heretofore made.

SHIP CANAL LAKE ERIE—OHIO RIVER.

Mr. RYAN, from the Committee on Railways and Canals, presented, in lieu of several House bills, a bill (H. R. 7402) providing for preliminary surveys of a route for a ship canal from Lake Erie to the Ohio River; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

The SPEAKER. In the absence of objection, the bills originally referred to the committee on the same subject will lie on the table.

There being no objection, the bills (H. R. 1922, 6768, 7068, and 7170) were ordered to lie on the table.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. PEARSON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled the bill (S. 1950) to authorize the Pennsylvania and New Jersey Railroad Companies or either of them to construct and maintain a bridge over the Delaware River between the States of New Jersey and Pennsylvania; when the Speaker signed the same.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of general appropriation bills.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. O'NEIL of Massachusetts in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of the Indian appropriation bill, and the Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Yesterday afternoon, just before the committee rose, we had proceeded, as I understand it, to the consideration of this bill by paragraphs.

The CHAIRMAN. That is correct.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. I am informed that it was the purpose of some gentlemen, who were on the Chairman's list, to make certain observations or remarks upon the bill; and they believed that they had been promised, or at least it was tacitly understood, that they were to have the floor for the purpose of addressing the committee before the general debate was closed. And I believe it is not the wish of the committee—speaking especially for myself—to deprive these gentlemen of that pleasure, and if they will indicate the time they desire——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman that the only name on the list is that of a gentleman who does not appear to be present.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. I see the gentleman is not at this moment present, and I will not make any further request at this time.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask the Clerk to proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

At the Cheyenne River Agency, South Dakota, $1,700,

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs [Mr. HOLMAN] to the fact that the name of the agency which has just been read appears in the estimate as the Forest City Agency. In the bill it is called the Cheyenne River Agency, but in the estimates it is stated that it is now called the Forest City Agency.

Mr. PICKLER. The Indian Bureau desire that it be changed back to the old name, which appears in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk, continuing the reading of the bill, read as follows:

At the Yankton Agency, South Dakota, $1,600.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 6, line 18, after the word "dollars," insert the following:

"Provided, That no Indian agent or other employé shall be appoin to any Indian agency from any State or Territory other than the State Territory in which said agency is located."

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on that.

Mr. BOWERS of California. I desire to reserve a point of order on that.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. If the point of order is reserved, inasmuch as we can probably discuss this amendment in twenty or thirty minutes, I wish to ask unanimous consent that thirty minutes be allowed for the discussion. According to the understanding made during the general debate, we were to be allowed opportunity for discussing various items as they were reached, and I ask that thirty minutes be allowed for the discussion of this amendment, one-half to be controlled by the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs and one-half by some gentleman to be designated by the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that thirty minutes be allowed for the discussion of this amendment, one-half to be controlled by the chairman of the committee [Mr. HOLMAN], and the other half to be controlled by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. WILSON]. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOLMAN. If my friend wishes to be heard, I will reserve the point of order until he has completed his remarks.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I have offered this amendment, not for any reason personal to myself, but in behalf of the Democratic party in my State and in other Western States and Territories of this country. It is a well-known fact that the Democratic party in their national convention at Chicago declared, in one of the paragraphs of their platform, for home rule, as follows:

We hold that the officials appointed to administer the government of any Territory, together with the District of Columbia and Alaska, should be bona fide residents of the Territory or district in which their duties are to be performed. The Democratic party believes in home rule and the control of their own affairs by the people of the vicinage.

It is a notorious fact that upon every occasion afforded them the Democratic party have violated that plank of their platform. In my own State a few days ago—and I am not criticising the gentleman who was appointed—they sent a distinguished gentleman from the State of Arkansas to be the agent at the Puyallup Indian Agency.

They sent another gentleman from the State of Georgia, who had come into our State temporarily, to be Indian agent at the Yakima Indian Agency. He came across the continent, and went clear back to Georgia in order to obtain a bond. They have appointed a United States attorney in my State who has not been a resident long enough to vote. They appointed a United States marshal who had been a resident only a short time, and no man in my locality who belongs to the Democratic party knew who he was. They have appointed farmers from the State of Wisconsin to the State of Washington. Two of the three Indian agents appointed for the State of Idaho are residents of States east of the Missouri River.

And so it has been all over the Western country, violated step by step, in order to satisfy the Southern contingent with patronage and send them out to our country in violation of your own declaration in your own platform. Ah, Mr. Speaker, they have gone further than that. They have come to the city of Washington, and this morning I find in that great Democratic paper, the New York Sun, the following:

ANGERED BY MR. CLEVELAND—A VIOLATION OF THE HOME-RULE PRINCIPLE STIRS WASHINGTON—HE PROCURES THE APPOINTMENT OF A BRITISH SUBJECT AS SUPERINTENDENT OF THE GIRLS' REFORM SCHOOL AGAINST THE PROTESTS OF THE WOMEN MEMBERS OF THE BOARD OF TRUSTEES AND THE DISTRICT COMMISSIONERS—MR. THURBER TELLS THE COMMISSIONERS THE APPOINTMENT MUST BE MADE AT ONCE—FOUR TRUSTEES OF THE SCHOOL RESIGN.

WASHINGTON, June 8.

The citizens of Washington have hardly had time to recover from their surprise and disappointment caused by President Cleveland's violation of the home-rule plank of the Democratic platform in the appointment of Charles H. J. Taylor, the colored man from Kansas, to be recorder of deeds for the District of Columbia, when they are brought face to face with another similar act, the appointment of a British subject to the most lucrative and responsible office held by a woman in the District. The indignant citizens, without regard to party, have begun to make protest, and last night the following preamble and resolutions were adopted by a largely attended meeting of the Twentieth Century Club, an organization which is to Washington about what the Sorosis Club is to New York:

"Whereas it has come to our knowledge that the recently elected superintendent of the Girls' Reform School of the District of Columbia is a subject of a foreign country, and that five years must elapse before she can become an American citizen; and

"Whereas said position is the most lucrative one within the gift of the Government in the District of Columbia, to which women are eligible; and

"Whereas there were a number of applicants for this position equally as competent in every way, of American birth and in full sympathy with American institutions; Therefore,

"Resolved, That we hereby express our hearty disapproval of said appointment, and call upon all loyal American women to urge upon their Representatives in Congress a thorough investigation of this 'foreign labor' question."

These resolutions were adopted after it had been made known that the following communication had been sent to Mr. Cleveland:

"To the PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES:

"MR. PRESIDENT: The undersigned members of the board of trustees of the Girls' Reform School desire respectfully to tender their resignations, being convinced that their usefulness is at an end. The recent appointment, in defiance of the protests of the minority—which includes every woman on the board—of a superintendent who is a foreigner, without knowledge of our customs and people, without experience in reformatory work, and without the special and most necessary qualifications for such work, seems to make the step imperative.

"Very respectfully,

"LAURA COMSTOCK BATES.
"LOUISE REED STOWELL.
"MARY HOWELL TOTTEN.
"THOMAS P. MORGAN."

The story of the appointment of the Canadian woman is an interesting one, and serves to show the persistence with which inmates of the White House, officials of the Administration, and those close to them, devote themselves to the cause of American citizenship and civil-service reform. Several weeks ago a vacancy occurred in the office of Superintendent of the Reform School for Girls by the removal of the incumbent as the result of a scandal. There were several candidates for the place, and the president of the board of trustees, Mr. W. C. Endicott, jr., pardon clerk of the Department of Justice, and at the time of his appointment to the board private secretary to the Attorney-General, warmly indorsed the application of Mrs. Aldrich. She had come to Washington with the family of Postmaster-General Bissell, who, when they were no longer in need of her services, secured a place for her as teacher in the institution. Four other members of the board also recommended Mrs. Aldrich's appointment, but a minority, consisting of three women and ex-Commissioner of the District Morgan, opposed it on the ground that Mrs. Aldrich was a subject of Great Britain, whose husband and six children reside in Canada, and because, moreover, they believed her to be totally disqualified to act as guardian and friend of young girls.

Mrs. Aldrich was selected by the rule of the majority, however, and the Commissioners of the District were called upon, as provided by law, to approve the selection. This for a long time they refused to do, contending that they could not consent to the appointment of a citizen of a foreign country to such an important place. Thereupon they were told that White House influence would be brought to bear which they would be unable to resist. This statement was made good, for shortly afterwards Private Secretary Thurber appeared before the District Commissioners with the information that Mrs. Aldrich's appointment was desired by those in authority, and must be made at once. The Commissioners are creatures of the President, and they took the hint, not without a show of protest, however.

Mr. Thurber had declared the point about Mrs. Aldrich not being an American citizen to be all nonsense, and said this could be avoided by having her make out an application for naturalization papers at once. When told that it would require five years to make her eligible for a certificate, Mr. Thurber, it is understood, replied: "Oh, pshaw! in my State it takes only two years." But without any naturalization papers at all, Mrs. Aldrich was appointed at Mr. Thurber's dictation, and the resolutions of the Twentieth Century Club and the resignation of four members of the board of trustees immediately followed.

Congress will now be asked to investigate the matter, and it may be ventilated when the bill that is now pending, appropriating $30,000 for a new building for the school, is taken up for consideration.

This is the only appointment in the city of Washington to which ladies are eligible, and the President of the United States has gone forward and secured a citizen of Canada, a citizen of the British Government, to come here and be put in charge of the Reform School in the city of Washington.

Ah, they go further than that. In the State of Washington, at the Yakima Reservation, there was an old soldier working as blacksmith at $840 a year. They turned him out, and in his place they appointed a soldier of the Confederacy; and when it was brought to the attention of the Indian Commissioner, he was frank enough and honest enough to rescind the order for the removal of the appointment of the Indian agent. But the Indian agent telegraphed to the Secretary of the Interior, and he revoked the order. He revoked the order and placed this man in as blacksmith at the Indian agency, alleging in this case that he left the agency. I have here the reason why he was removed:

NORTH YAKIMA, WASH., March 8, 1894.

Mr. W. H. EMBREE, Fort Simcoe, Wash.:

As we are arranging to send a representative Democrat to Washington to attend to some urgent legislation—

Urgent legislation! I do not know what it was. Perhaps it was the Wilson tariff bill that he was coming down here to urge, or some other measure; but he was going to send him here for urgent legislation—

We are compelled to ask the people in office to help us in this matter. I am calling on all the employés at the fort to help us. Now, of course you are a Republican, but nevertheless I will call upon you to help us in the matter just the same as Democrats, for if you were not there, there would be a Democrat in that place that would help us. As the judge (agent) sees fit to keep you there, we expect you to help us in this matter. Your portion—will be about $25 or $30. Please send me $30, if possible, and let me hear from you by return mail.

I am, very truly,

THOMAS F. MAHER,
Secretary Yakima County Democratic Committee.

NORTH YAKIMA, WASH., March 23, 1894.

Mr. WILLIAM H. EMBREE, Fort Simcoe, Wash.:

I received your letter of March 20, and in reply would say that I hardly agree with you that you have no kick coming, as you have been left there going on two years after the change of Administration. Of course it is only right and just that to the victor belongs the spoils, and as far as I am concerned I never said one word against you personally, but, on the contrary, I have said several in your behalf. Our county committee made a demand on Mr. Erwin to remove all Republicans, and as I am the secretary of the committee, I had to do it. There was not any put-up job on you or anyone else; and as for some people there not paying anything to the Democratic fund, allow me to say to you that everyone there will pay some or our committee will know the reason why.

With kindest regards, I am truly yours,

T. F. MAHER,
Secretary Democratic County Committee.

UNITED STATES INDIAN SERVICE,
Wallawalla, Wash., May 14, 1894.

MY DEAR SIR: Your favor of April 21 has just reached me; and I will say that I sincerely thank you for the interest you have taken in regard to my removal from the Indian service. I have been informed by good authority that the agent (Mr. Erwin) at Fort Simcoe, when notified to reinstate me, instead of so doing, telegraphed to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs charges against me which are absolutely untrue whatever they may be. I have served the Department honorably and faithfully, and do not wish to be dishonorably removed.

Mr. Erwin, when notifying me of the change, said that he had no fault to find with me, and that I had been very kind to him, and had done my duty. He also made the same remark to other employés in regard to myself. I wrote to the Department denying any charges that might be presented, and asked an investigation in such case. I will send you correct copies of letters in my possession, which will give you a correct idea of why I have been removed, no doubt. I realize that your time is limited, and I do not wish to take up more than is possible, but I would like to see justice done in all things.

Thanking you again for your kindness in this matter, and hoping I may be able to render you service in the future, I am,

Very truly, yours,

WM. H. EMBREE,
Wallawalla, Wash.

Hon. J. L. WILSON, Washington, D. C.

HEADQUARTERS A. LINCOLN POST, NO. 4,
GRAND ARMY OF THE REPUBLIC,
Wallawalla, Wash., April 3, 1894.

DEAR SIR: I inclose some papers just received from W. H. Embree, to which I desire to call your attention. Mr. Embree was agency blacksmith at the Yakima Agency, and, from his letter, has been ousted to give place to an ex-Confederate soldier.

Mr. Embree is a member in good standing of this G. A. R. Post, is a good Republican, a worthy man, and has a large family to support. Anything you may be able to do for him in this matter will be appreciated by him and also by the comrades of this post.

Yours, very truly,

E. W. ELIOT, Post Commander.

Hon. J. L. WILSON, M. C., Washington, D. C.

FORT SIMCOE, WASH., March 27, 1894.

DEAR SIR AND COMRADE: I have been notified by the agent at this place that my place here is to be filled by a man from North Yakima. I think he is an old Confederate. It has come about by and through the influence of some of the Democrats there, and I want to beat them if I can. There is no cause for my removal, only that I am a Republican. Now, comrade, I want to ask you, in behalf of the post and Grand Army of the Republic, to assist me, and see if they will remove an old Union soldier without cause and give his place to one undeserving.

I want to ask you to telegraph to Representative WILSON in behalf of the Grand Army of the Republic to see the Commissioner of Indian Affairs immediately, and ask him if it is the policy of their party to do so, especially a Union soldier, who is a poor man, who has a large family to support, and a man that is fully competent to fill his position. I will telegraph to the Commissioner also. There is only a living in this position for one, and that is a great deal to me these hard times. Again, these people here are a lot of Southerners and do not like the old soldier. What is done will have to be done with as little delay as possible. I will pay all expenses.

Yours, in F., C., and L.,

WM. H. EMBREE,
Fort Simcoe, Wash.

S. M. WHITE, M. D.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, April 16, 1894.

SIR: I have to inform you that formal notice of the discharge of William H. Embree, carpenter and wagon-maker, at Yakima Agency, Washington, and the appointment of R. I. Watson in his stead, has been received, and Agent L. T. Erwin has this day been advised both by telegram and letter that the said change is disapproved.

Respectfully,

D. M. BROWNING, Commissioner.

Hon. JOHN L. WILSON,
House of Representatives.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, D. C., May 3, 1894.

SIR: I am in receipt of your letter of 23d and telegram of 24th ultimo, and also a telegram signed by Henry J. Snively and others, in regard to the removal of William H. Embree from the position of carpenter and wagon-maker, and appointment of R. I. Watson in his stead, and urging that the change be approved.

In view of the additional information contained in your letter, to the effect that Mr. Embree was not removed for political reasons only, but that he has been negligent of late in the performance of his duties and has failed to carry out your instructions; that Mr. Watson is not, as was supposed, a non-resident, but has lived in Washington for the last five years; that Mr. Embree has left the reservation and gone to Wallawalla, and Mr. Watson has moved his family out to the Fort at great expense, etc., I am directed by the honorable Secretary of the Interior to approve the change permanently.

Respectfully,

D. M. BROWNING, Commissioner.

T. ERWIN,
United States Indian Agent, Yakima Agency, Wash.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, May 3, 1894.

SIR: I have to inform you that additional information having been furnished this office in the matter of the removal of William H. Embree from the position of carpenter and wagonmaker at Yakama Agency, Washington, and the appointment of R. I. Watson in his stead, which shows that Mr. Embree was not removed for political reasons only and that Mr. Watson has been a resident of Washington for five years, I have been directed by the honorable Secretary of the Interior to approve the change.

I inclose herewith, for your information, a copy of my letter to Agent Erwin on this subject.

Respectfully,

D. M. BROWNING, Commissioner.

Hon. JOHN L. WILSON,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

WALLA WALLA, WASH., May 5, 1894.

DEAR SIR: Your favor of April 22 regarding the reinstatement of Mr. Embree, at Yakima Indian Reservation, was received yesterday. The agent at Yakama has not complied with the orders of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs as yet, but as I learn from a reliable source, has sent to Washington charges against Mr. Embree, such as disobedience of orders and other charges, which Mr. Embree is prepared to prove are unfounded and not in accordance with facts.

Mr. Embree is a fine millwright and blacksmith, and was retained by the agent until he had completed work upon a mill, which the man who took his place could not do, then he kicked him out to make a place for an incapable ex-Confederate soldier.

Mr. Embree's home is here; he is a member in good standing of this post and is in every respect a good and worthy citizen, against whom that carpet-bag, ex-Confederate agent has trumped up false charges, and which if properly looked into, can but bring shame and dishonor upon their author. Mr. Embree informs me that he has written to the Commissioner concerning them.

We know that your time is fully occupied, still if you can give this matter a little more attention you will not only confer a favor upon a worthy soldier, but will also receive the thanks of comrades of this post, and the Grand Army of the Republic at large. I thank you for favors already received, and beg to assure you of our highest consideration.

Very truly yours,

E. W. ELIOT, Post Commander.

Hon. J. L. WILSON, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

SIMCOE, WASH., March 26, 1894.

Mr. H. A. GRIFFIN, North Yakima:

Will you please do me a favor to find out about this man, Mr. Watson, of Yakima, whom they have appointed in my place; whether he is from the South, also whether he is a Confederate soldier or not. Please find out what you can and let me know by mail or stage Wednesday. By so doing you will confer a great favor on me.

Yours truly,

WM. H. EMBREE.

NORTH YAKIMA, March 27, 1894.

Mr. W. H. EMBREE:

Mr. Watson was a Confederate soldier, and is from the South, same State as Judge Erwin, so I am reliably informed.

Very truly,

H. A. GRIFFIN.

Mr. Chairman, I have introduced all the correspondence in this case that has come to my hand. It seems to me a great injustice has been done this old soldier, and especially is this true in the demand made on him for money by the chairman of the Democratic county central committee of Yakima County.

Why, Mr. Speaker, Alaric and his Goths would have blushed with shame at demanding money from any old man, a Union soldier, out of his $840 per annum. [Applause on the Republican side.]

This is civil-service reform with a vengeance. And this agent, sent to our country to preside over the Indians, permitting the Democratic county committee to assess an old Union soldier, and when he fails to pay that assessment, they turn him out of his office and put in a Confederate. These are the facts. Do you wonder that I insist upon this plank of the platform?

Why, sir, prior to 1884 no national convention had adopted this plank. In 1884, when the Republican convention assembled at Chicago, by some good fortune the people of the Territory of Washington did honor me with a seat in that body. I drafted and submitted to the committee on resolutions the first plank for home rule. It was adopted by the Republican party in convention assembled; and so far as my knowledge goes, in the West it has never been violated. It was adopted by the Democratic convention that afterwards followed. It was adopted in 1892 and it is now being violated in the West, and in the city of Washington, and every place where it is possible to do so.

I think the amendment I have offered is in the interest of the service; I think it is in the interest of the Indians; I think it is in the interest of good government, and if we are not to have it adopted, why, let us send the last poor feeble plank of the Democratic party out to sea with the others that have gone before. [Loud applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time. I have some data covering this entire question, both from the Secretary's Office and from the Indian Office, which I will print in the RECORD if I am permitted to do so.

Mr. HOLMAN. I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. MADDOX].

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Chairman, I understood the point of order was made against this amendment.

Mr. BOWERS of California. I supposed that the gentleman was going to allow me some time.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. The point of order has been reserved, and we have thirty minutes, I will state to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. HOLMAN. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. BOWERS].

Mr. BOWERS of California. Mr. Chairman, the object of this amendment has not been given to the House. It is this. It changes existing law, and upon its adoption there can be no more army officers appointed Indian agents. That is the milk in the cocoanut. And I want to say to the committee that had the amendment remained as the House adopted it, before it was amended by the Senate, requiring that army officers should be detailed for Indian agents, the gentleman from Washington could have had no such complaint to have laid before this House.

That is the milk in the cocoanut. This amendment if adopted is to prevent the appointment by the President of any more military officers as Indian agents. Had the amendment been worded so as to apply to the appointment of civilian agents as now allowed by law, I would make no objection to it whatever, but I desire in the short time that I have, to read a part of a private letter received from an allotting agent, a gentleman whom I have known for twenty-five years and a good Democrat. He says:

UNITED STATES INDIAN SERVICE,
Covelo, Round Valley Agency, April 29, 1894.

We have here an illustration of the great good resulting from appointment of army officers as agents. We can easily see what has been, and what improvements have been, and are being made by Lieut. Connelly. This valley in winter is a bog, utterly impassable for wagons, but he has and is building good roads, so by fall that trouble will be in a great measure overcome. He gives his entire time to his work, trying to put the Indians in a self-sustaining position, and if allowed to remain here three or four years longer, all will be in as good condition as possible. He has induced the Indians to put in good fences and build better houses; they seem to be impressed with his good precepts and example.

It will take at least four years longer to get them fairly started, so that the whites will not be able to undo all the good that has been done. When he came he found the cattle of the whites running all over the reservation, and finding that he could not prevent it, he induced the Indians to fence. This has in a great measure put a stop to that trouble, but the whites do not like it very well, so that if he is removed before they fully appreciate the benefits of the work they will easily be induced to stop work and let the fences go. Strange to say, most of the whites speak in the highest terms of him; only those whose interests have been interfered with are unfriendly.

Mr. Chairman, there are now over 200 officers of the United States Army located at or contiguous to the Indian agencies scattered throughout the United States. That is about the only business, in time of peace, that the Army has to attend to—to look after the Indians. I do not care whether these officers desire to serve as agents or not. They are paid their salaries, and let them do the work. They are not hunting for the job, but they are supposed to obey orders. We have now 23 of these officers acting as Indian agents, saving to the Government over $45,000 in salaries and expenses, and we ought to have at every agency an army officer. At some of the agencies there are five or six officers to take care of the Indians.

Mr. HOLMAN. I yield the remainder of the time to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. MADDOX].

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Chairman, it is quite refreshing to see my colleague on the committee, Mr. WILSON of Washington, get upon the Democratic platform and insist that at least one plank of that platform shall be carried out; but it occurs to me, after the lectures which the Republican party, and especially the leader on that side, has seen fit to give this side of the House, that this reformation ought to have begun some time ago. As they claim to be the pioneers in everything that tends to the prosperity and preservation of the Government, I think they ought to have begun this reformation themselves, but as a matter of fact they did no such thing. Take the State of Washington; the record shows that there is one nonresident agent in that State now, and there was one nonresident Indian agent there under the Harrison Administration.

On yesterday this House was treated to a speech by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BROSIUS], in advocacy of what is known as the Indian Board of Commissioners. He told us how much good they had done for the Indians and for the country generally. Now, let us see what they say on this subject, so that we may ascertain whether the gentleman from Washington is on the right lines or not. Here is what the Indian Commissioners say:

We highly approve the announcement of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs that in selecting civil agents it is his policy "to recommend persons as a rule who do not reside in the vicinity of the reservations upon which their services are rendered." We have seen, in many instances, the evils resulting from the so-called "home-rule" policy, and as the Commissioner says, "Experience proves what theory would indicate, that agents who come to Indian agencies from a distance are more ready than those living near by to give their best efforts to promote the welfare of those whom they are employed to aid."

That is the view of this Board of Indian Commissioners on this subject of home rule in connection with Indian agencies. Now, if the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington should be adopted, it would prohibit the President from appointing army officers, and, from what I have learned since I have been a member of the committee, some of those officers have proved to be very acceptable agents, and as a matter of fact have performed services for the Indians that could hardly have been accomplished by civilians. I have no personal knowledge of the matter. I know only what I have heard in the committee.

But, recurring to the question of the appointment of nonresidents, I have here a full and complete list of the Indian agents under the Harrison Administration, and also of those under the present Administration, and, so far as the State of Washington is concerned, the record shows exactly the same condition of affairs under each Administration, that is, one nonresident agent. It is true, as the gentleman from Washington says, that an Indian agent has been appointed in his State from Georgia. I believe the gentleman charges him with having been there but six months before he was appointed, but in that I think he is mistaken. That gentleman had been in Washington about eighteen months when he was appointed. He went there before the change of Administration, before the country went Democratic, proposing to become a citizen of the gentleman's State. He was afterwards appointed an Indian agent. The gentleman from Washington seems to reflect upon him because he had to go back to Georgia to make a bond. Well, sir, I think that shows that he had a good standing at his former home, when he could go there and make a bond. I think that is rather complimentary to him.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Oh, no; I did not reflect on him on that account.

Mr. MADDOX. I will ask the Clerk to read this list.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. What is the date?

Mr. MADDOX. This is the list for 1893, with the changes that have been made.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. That statement is a year old. You will find that an Indian agent at the Lemhi Agency in Idaho has just been appointed from the South.

Mr. COX. That is a great crime, that he should have come from the South.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Oh, no; no crime at all.

Mr. MADDOX. I ask the Clerk to read this list. The names are in couples; the upper names are those of the men who served under the Harrison Administration, and the lower names are those of the agents appointed under the present Administration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. HOLMAN rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. WILSON] has five minutes remaining.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. If the chairman of the committee [Mr. HOLMAN] desires to make some observations, I will withhold mine for the present.

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, no; go on.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, in reply to my friend from Georgia [Mr. MADDOX], and also in reply to a remark made, perhaps inadvertently, on the other side that there is no crime in appointing these gentlemen from other localities, I wish to say that I do not myself think it is a crime; but I do say it is a violation of every principle of the platform of the Democratic party adopted at Chicago.

So far as concerns the report read at the desk in regard to the appointments of agents, I have not taken the time to make examination in regard to other appointments than those in my own locality. And, Mr. Chairman, I am not criticising the gentlemen who have received these appointments. So far as I know or have any information, they are all perfect gentlemen; if not, they ought to be; and if I knew a thousand things derogatory to them, I would not mention them on an occasion of this character.

I am fighting for a principle for which you gentleman on the other side have vociferated on this floor in season and out of season—the principle of "home rule." Yet, here you are to-day endeavoring to give us a different class of "home rule" from that which you desire for yourselves.

Mr. MADDOX rose.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. I have only a few minutes, and I can not yield to the gentleman; I am trying to get in what I want to say. If afterwards I have any time, I will yield to the gentleman with great pleasure.

Now let me refer to the appointments in my immediate locality under Mr. Harrison. The United States attorney was appointed from my State, as were also the collector of the port and all his subordinates, the United States district judge, and United States marshal. The Indian agents at the Colville Agency, the Yakima Agency, the Puyallup Agency, the Tulalip agency were all appointed from the State of Washington. What do we find now? At the Puyallup Indian Agency Mr. Cleveland has appointed a gentleman from Arkansas; at the Lemhi Agency the appointment was made from Texas.

As has been stated here, two farmers were sent to the Colville Indian Agency from Wisconsin. One applicant for that place was a friend of mine, a Democrat it is true, but nevertheless a friend of mine. He had been struggling for fifty years, and the tide had run hard against him. He was poor, and he wanted this little place. Yet the Democratic party sent a farmer from the State of Wisconsin to take that place, which this man might otherwise have had.

Our people, whether Democrats, or Republicans, or Populists, need these places. They belong to the State. You might as well take your collectors of your ports, or your registers and receivers of land offices from remote localities as take Indian agents. This system of appointment has prevailed all through the Western Territories. I rose here for the purpose of standing by this plank in the platform of the Democratic party. We have as good men there as you have in your States; there are as good Democrats in the State of Washington as elsewhere. They fought your fight; they helped elect your President, and they are entitled to some consideration at the hands of the Democratic party. Are you going to continue this system?

The gentleman says that these agents ought not to be appointed from the vicinity. Why, sir, in the Fifty-second Congress I got an amendment through this House appropriating $20,000 for the appointment of an Indian Commission at the Puyallup Indian Agency to take charge of that property and see whether something could not be done to dispose of it. I thought then that the honorable Secretary of the Interior might see proper to give to some citizen of my State one of those appointments. If he did not want to make an appointment from the vicinity, he could have gone over to the neighborhood of the Idaho line, 500 miles away. What did he do? He appointed one gentleman from Georgia, one from Illinois, and one from Ohio. They have been there since; and it requires a guide to enable them to get to the Indian Reservation; and they know nothing about it when they get there.

Mr. MADDOX. I would like to ask the gentleman from Washington a question.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Certainly; I will answer if I have the time.

Mr. MADDOX. Does the gentleman really believe in the principle he is advocating here?

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Certainly, I believe in it. The gentleman could not have heard my first remarks. I believed in this principle away back in 1884.

Now, I am going to state to the gentleman something which I have not already stated. I went into Washington Territory as a so-called "carpetbagger" myself. I ought to acknowledge that. I see what the gentleman has in his mind, and I anticipate his remark. I went there as a "carpetbagger;" and I say frankly that I never could have had money sufficient to get across the Rocky Mountains if I had not had in my carpet sack a commission of the Government. So much for that.

Subsequently I came to the Republican national convention from that Territory. I trust I may be pardoned this personal reference to myself. I wrote the first resolution in favor of home rule for insertion in that platform. I introduced it in the convention and had it considered by the committee upon resolutions. It was engrafted in the platform. You Democrats followed in the same line. You reasserted your belief in that principle in your convention in 1892. But you have violated it at every opportunity. That is the history of the matter.

I repeat, I went to Washington Territory as a "carpetbagger," because I never would have had money enough to get that far West if I had not gone in that way.

Mr. FLYNN. Mr. Chairman, there is probably no section of the United States which illustrates better than the Territory I have the honor to represent here the effects of the repudiation of the home-rule plank in the Democratic platform under the present Administration. Fifty-seven appointments of nonresidents of my Territory have been made in defiance of that plank and against the earnest protest of the honest Democrats of that Territory.

But I have not risen specially to find fault with that now. I desire to address myself to another point. What I do contend for is this: that when a man is sent there—appointed by the Government to an official position in that Territory—from Indiana, West Virginia, Texas, Tennessee or any other State, the Blue Book, the official record of this Government, which we are presumed to be informed by as authentic, should specify that fact, and no effort be made to cover up, hide, or falsify the record so as to attempt to show that such appointments were made of actual residents of the Territory. I hold in my hand the first copy of the Blue Book issued under the present Administration. I find the name of Edward G. Spillman appointed register of the land office at Kingfisher, Okla., and under the caption of "whence appointed," I find that he is charged to Oklahoma.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it is a well-known fact that for three weeks the appointment of this man was hung up in the Senate mainly on the ground that he was a carpet-bagger and a resident of West Virginia, and not of that Territory at all. In addition to that, and I appeal now to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN] who has succeeded in having Mr. Wilson M. Hammack from his State appointed as register in charge of the land office at Woodward in Oklahoma and yet I find on an appeal to this same Blue Book that he is credited as being a resident of that Territory.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him what statement he makes in connection with my colleague?

Mr. FLYNN. I can not yield to the gentleman now.

I next ask your attention to the name of a gentleman who sat here as a member of this body in the Fifty-second Congress, Mr. David H. Patton, who represented a certain district in Indiana in that Congress, and who was appointed to a receivership at Woodward, in my Territory, and was charged to Oklahoma. Neither of these three men, I desire to say now, ever set foot in that Territory, or perhaps knew where it was located, until appointed to these positions and had their commissions in their pockets.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I repeat that our public records should specify the truth in such matters. If we have carpet-baggers amongst us, appointed by the Government to fill official stations in the Territory, let us know at least where they come from, and do not try to throw dust in the eyes of the public by pretending that they are appointed as residents of the Territory when they never set foot in there until they were appointed.

Mr. COX. My colleague, Mr. McMILLIN, is not present, and inasmuch as the gentleman has referred to him, I ask him to repeat what he said.

Mr. FLYNN. What I said was that Mr. Wilson M. Hammack was appointed by the aid of the gentleman from Tennessee to be register of the land office at Woodward, in Oklahoma.

Mr. COX. Well, what of that? What objection is there?

Mr. FLYNN. The gentleman does not understand me. What I am objecting to is not to the appointment of any competent person to an office; but what I do complain of is that the record should show—this Blue Book, which is supposed to be official—that this man was appointed from the Territory of Oklahoma, when, as a matter of fact, he comes from Tennessee.

Mr. COX. Do you know where he resided and from where he was appointed?

Mr. FLYNN. I do.

Mr. COX. Do you know him?

Mr. FLYNN. I have not met him. Several of our people there know him now, I can tell the gentleman.

Mr. COX. How did you get there?

Mr. FLYNN. I went in on the railroad train just like any other honest citizen.

Mr. COX. Well, is it not likely that he went there in the same way?

Mr. FLYNN. Mr. Chairman, I am not finding fault with him for being a carpet-bagger at this time; but I am complaining of the official record, I repeat, for attempting to blind the public by stating that this man was appointed as a resident of that Territory, when, as a matter of fact, he was a resident of Tennessee when appointed.

Mr. COX. Is the gentleman able to say that he was not a resident of the Territory when he was appointed?

Mr. FLYNN. No, sir; he was not.

Mr. COX. What is the name?

Mr. FLYNN. Wilson M. Hammack.

Mr. COX. And where did he reside before he was appointed?

Mr. FLYNN. He was appointed from Tennessee; I believe from the district of Mr. MCMILLIN, because he made a very strong effort to secure his appointment.

Mr. COX. Well, we have a good many very excellent men in Mr. MCMILLIN'S district.

Mr. FLYNN. I am not complaining of that, but of what this Blue Book attempts to show.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MCRAE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say but a word only in explanation of what our party promised upon the Territorial home-rule question in 1892. So far as I am concerned, I admit that some Democrats, with the help of the opposition in this Congress, have violated some of the pledges made at Chicago. [Laughter].

Mr. REED. Oh, you do not mean it! Oh, no! [Laughter].

Mr. MCRAE. But I do not admit that this is one of them.

The Democratic platform made the following statement in reference to the Territories, and I ask your attention to it, because it does not appear to be understood by those who referred to it here:

We approve the action of the present House of Representatives in passing bills for admitting into the Union as States, the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona, and we favor the early admission of all the Territories having the necessary population and resources, to entitle them to statehood, and while they remain Territories we hold that the officers appointed to administer the government of any Territory, together with the District of Columbia and Alaska, should be bona fide residents of the Territory or District in which their duties are to be performed. The Democratic party believes in home rule and the control of their own affairs by the people of the vicinage.

Now, so far as the Territories are concerned, this plank of the Democratic platform has not been violated in the appointments of the officers appointed to administer the governments of the Territories so far as my information goes.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Will the gentleman pardon an interruption?

Mr. MCRAE. Certainly.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Do you think the collector in Alaska should be appointed from the State of New York?

Mr. SPRINGER. There is no reason why he should not.

Mr. MCRAE. I do not know that we have any great number of white residents of Alaska to elect from. I do not know anything about that.

The collector is not an officer appointed to administer the government of the people of the Territory. The language of this platform clearly meant executive officers and those concerned in the immediate government of the Territories, like the governor and secretary, and others directly connected with Territorial matters. Those officers appointed by the United States to discharge the business of the General Government, such as registers and collectors, might well be appointed from the outside so far as this platform is concerned, but it has not been done in but few cases.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. The governor of Alaska is appointed from outside the Territory. The secretary, the judges, the marshal, and the collector of the port in Alaska are all appointed from outside the Territory.

Mr. MCRAE. A gentleman sitting by my side knows the marshal, and says he has lived in Alaska for ten years. But I am speaking especially of the Territories of Arizona, New Mexico, and Oklahoma, and I have already stated that I know nothing of Alaskan appointments.

Mr. HOLMAN. All the commissioners, except one for the Territory of Alaska, are appointed from outside of Alaska.

Mr. MCRAE. I presume you will hardly find a man who will admit he is a resident of Alaska, because no man wants to have his residence in any part of the United States where he can not exercise the elective franchise. Men who go to Alaska retain their citizenship somewhere else, but that is not the case with the other Territories.

Now, the Indian agencies, under this and prior Administrations, Democratic and Republican alike, have not been treated as local patronage, and I do not believe they should be. The best of reasons have been given here to-day by the gentleman from Georgia why they should not be, and the question involved here is not whether this Administration has carried out the home-rule plank in the platform of the Democratic party, but whether Indian agents who perform duties upon reservations, where no white citizens can legally reside unless he is an officer, shall be appointed from the State or Territory in which the agency is located. The Indians are the only people who have the right to be there, and the strict construction insisted upon would bar all except the Indians. You could not select a competent Indian agent from the reservation, because white citizens have no rights there. The convention meant no such thing, and so in all fairness to this Administration, as well as to the last Administration, we ought not to undertake to apply the doctrine of home rule to Indian reservations It can not be done.

I believe as strongly as any man in the great fundamental doctrine of home rule and of giving every locality the right to select its officers, and in the Territories and the District of Columbia I think all appointive officers connected with the territorial or city governments should be selected from the citizens residing there; but that does not apply to Indian reservations. I know that when I have applied to this Administration for the appointment of friends from my State the reply has been almost invariably made to me that the intention of the Administration was to live up to the home-rule plank, and I believe there has been but little if any carpet-bagging in the Territories.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Is Gen. Govan from your district?

Mr. MCRAE. He is not; but I know him, and I can say that he is as gallant, chivalric, and able a gentleman as ever went to your State as an Indian agent, and if we will give him proper assistance and support, he will give the Government a capable, honest, and impartial administration.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time for debate on this amendment is exhausted, and the Chair will treat the formal amendment as withdrawn.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. WILSON of Washington. I move to strike out the last two words. If the gentleman from Illinois desires to address the committee, I will yield to him.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] is recognized.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Oklahoma has referred to the appointment of registers and receivers of the Land Office in that Territory, and has stated that the home-rule principle was violated in their appointment. I desire to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that those appointments to which he refers were in what is known as the Cherokee Outlet.

Mr. FLYNN. Is Kingfisher in the Cherokee Outlet?

Mr. SPRINGER. Kingfisher is not.

Mr. FLYNN. Mr. Spillman is appointed there.

Mr. SPRINGER. The register to which the gentleman referred——

Mr. FLYNN. There are three whom I mentioned in the charges that I made. The gentleman must have misunderstood me. The charge that I made was that the public record was falsified to show that these men were appointed from Oklahoma, when in fact they were not.

Mr. SPRINGER. Those in the Cherokee Outlet were appointed in a region of country where, before the time of their service, there were no persons living, either Indians or white men.

This was a new country purchased from the Cherokee Indians and opened to settlement; and it was opened under an act of Congress by which outsiders went in from all parts of the country and secured homes. There were no persons residing in that region at all, either Indians or white men, as I said before, and it was perfectly competent to appoint men from other regions who wanted to make their homes there.

Mr. FLYNN. Will the gentleman permit me?

Mr. SPRINGER. One moment. But if it were not so, the administration of the Land Office is no part of the government of the Territory, or anything of the sort; and there is no reason why persons appointed to administer Indian affairs and to administer the affairs of the Land Office, should be residents of that locality; because these are functions that belong to the entire United States, and every State of the Union is interested in the manner in which those functions are performed.

Mr. FLYNN. Does the gentleman approve of the statement made in the Blue Book—that they were residents of the Territory?

Mr. SPRINGER. I do not know what the Blue Book says.

Mr. FLYNN. Let us see.

Mr. SPRINGER. That is not the Blue Book. That is the RECORD.

Mr. FLYNN. It is not the RECORD, but a first copy of the Blue Book. I find on pages 728 and 729 that they state they were residents of the Territory.

Mr. SPRINGER. It is perfectly proper that these persons upon the Strip should state that they come from that country, because they go there for the purpose of making a home, where there was no one there before them.

Mr. FLYNN. But what about Spillman?

Mr. SPRINGER. Now, I will ask the gentleman a question. How long were you a resident of Oklahoma before you were appointed postmaster?

Mr. FLYNN. I was a resident about a week. [Great laughter on the Democratic side.] I was as old a resident as any at the time, except some "sooners."

Mr. SPRINGER. I know of no one more capable of arraigning "carpet-baggers" than the gentleman, who confesses himself the chief of them in the Indian Territory.

Mr. FLYNN. We all went in there together. I do not know whether the gentleman heard what I stated. I said I was as old a resident as anybody, except some of the friends of the gentleman from Illinois, who were "sooners."

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to prolong this debate, but I hope my venerable friend, the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, will pardon me. I desire simply to reply to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MCRAE], and to state that if anything I may have said was construed to be any reflection upon Gen. Govan, of the State of Arkansas, who was appointed agent at the Tulalip Agency, in the State of Washington, relieving Mr. Thornton, a bona fide resident of that State, nothing was further from my intention.

All my information is that Gen. Govan is an estimable gentleman, and he did as I or any other person would do, wanting a position of that character—he got it if he could. I am not attacking him; I am attacking the principle, contending that it is wrong, and that it has been gradually curtailed in this country since 1884.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] stated that we were not entitled in the Territories to the registers and receiverships in the various land offices. It is true that prior to the Republican convention of 1884 all registers and receivers were appointed from other States rather than from the Territories, but the system had been so much complained of that the home-rule principle finally became engrafted both on the Republican and Democratic platforms, and from day to day and year to year they have been gradually trimming it down and giving those positions to bona fide residents, until this Administration, and it is making the appointments from every direction.

In this connection, so that there will be no uncertain sound about it, I desire to put in the RECORD, because the various papers of the press of the country may desire to comment on them, resolutions of certain people gotten up relative to an appointment in the city of Washington:

Whereas it has come to our knowledge that the recently elected superintendent of the Girls' Reform School of the District of Columbia is a subject of a foreign country, and that five years must elapse before she can become an American citizen: and

Whereas said position is the most lucrative one within the gift of the Government in the District of Columbia, to which women are eligible: and

Whereas there were a number of applicants for this position equally as competent in every way, of American birth and in full sympathy with American institutions: Therefore,

Resolved, That we hereby express our hearty disapproval of said appointment, and call upon all loyal American women to urge upon their representatives in Congress a thorough investigation of this "foreign labor" question.

These resolutions were adopted after it had been made known that the following communication had been sent to Mr. Cleveland.

To the President of the United States:

Mr. PRESIDENT: The undersigned members of the board of trustees of the Girls' Reform School desire respectfully to tender their resignations, being convinced that their usefulness is at an end. The recent appointment, in defiance of the protests of the minority—which includes every woman on the board—of a superintendent who is a foreigner, without knowledge of our customs and people, without experience in reformatory work, and without the special and most necessary qualifications for such work, seems to make the step imperative.

Very respectfully,

LAURA COMSTOCK BATES.
LOUISE REED STOWELL.
MARY HOWELL TOTTEN.
THOMAS P. MORGAN.

This is from the New York Sun, dated June 9, 1894. I think these criticisms are enough to establish, Mr. Chairman, in the mind of anyone the fact that the platform enunciated in Chicago by the Democratic party has been continuously and continually violated by the President of the United States.

I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that the Chair rule upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair ruled upon the point of order some time ago.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. I beg pardon of the Chair. If my attention had been called to that fact I certainly would not have trespassed upon the well-known disposition of the Chair to hear members.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustained the point of order, and the gentleman moved to strike out the last word and then to strike the last two words, and debate followed.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. I know I have moved to strike out nearly everything in the amendment.

Mr. MORGAN. I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair agreed to recognize the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. NEILL].

Mr. NEILL. Mr. Chairman, from the somewhat excited, I might say electric, harangue we have had from the gentleman from the State of Washington, he seems to be somewhat exercised in his mind to-day because the President of the United States, exercising his constitutional right and privilege, has appointed a gentleman to an Indian agency in his State without consulting the distinguished gentleman from Washington.

The gentleman undertakes to quote from the Democratic platform. My friend, I do not think you could understand the Democratic platform if you were to study it for twenty years.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. No human being could. The gentleman does not understand it himself.

Mr. NEILL. Yes, but you can not; you are not built that way. [Laughter.] It seems that the gravamen of the charge of the gentleman is that an agent was appointed from the State of Arkansas to go out to his State and look after some poor devils of Indians there, and he reads from the Democratic platform about home rule. Why, sir, if he knew anything about that platform he would have noticed that that statement about home rule is in the first section and is a prelude to the denunciation of the Federal-elections law and of the carpet-bag régime, under which the Southern people bled and suffered for years.

Now, the gentleman need not be uneasy about Gen. Govan, of Arkansas. There was not the slightest scintilla of either the spirit or the letter of the Democratic platform violated in his appointment as an Indian agent in the State of Washington. The Indians are not governed by your State laws. They are the protegés, the wards, of the nation. But I want to relieve the gentleman's mind a little further. It is evident that Gen. Govan was resting upon his mind heavily. If the gentleman is uneasy to know who Gen. Govan is, let him write to Crocker's brigade in Iowa. They will tell him that Gen. Govan was a foeman worthy of their steel; they will tell him that they invited Gen. Govan several years ago to one of their reunions, and that he went up and was their honored guest—the guest of the men whom he had met on the battle-field, whose flag he had captured, which flag he carried back with him and returned to them at their reunion, when they presented him with a magnificent gold-headed cane, which I have had the pleasure of seeing and admiring. My friend need have no apprehension that poor Lo will not be fairly treated as long as Gen. Govan is an Indian agent in the gentleman's State.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I know that I am trespassing on the committee, but if the gentleman from Arkansas had read the Democratic platform with which he doubtless is familiar——

Mr. NEILL. I have it here.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Well, if he had read it he would have found that it did declare for home rule. I know that I am not "built" like the gentleman from Arkansas when it comes to a question of Democratic thought and Democratic principles, and that sort of thing. I am aware of that. But the gentleman seems to have entirely misunderstood me. Either he paid no attention to what I said——

Mr. NEILL. Yes: I did.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Then I failed to impress my idea upon the gentleman, because I said nothing whatever derogatory of Gen. Govan. I merely stated that he had been appointed an Indian agent in my State from the State of Arkansas. I stated also, that Mr. Andrews had been appointed from Texas. I stated that a gentleman had been appointed a farmer, from Wisconsin; I stated that a gentleman had been appointed from Tennessee; but said nothing derogatory of those gentlemen. I here and now reaffirm what I said about the platform, and I hope the gentleman will read the Democratic platform——

Mr. NEILL. I have read it.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. I am afraid not. If the gentleman will read the last plank of the platform he will see that it does declare for home rule. Now, if you are going to violate that principle in regard to Indian agents, you may as well violate it as to collectors of the ports. If you send us an Indian agent from the State of Arkansas, why not send us a collector of our port from Boston, Mass. One is just as fair and proper as the other. Now, I do not care anything about the personnel of these officials. As I said before, they may be gentlemen of good character; I am not acquainted with them; doubtless they are. I have no doubt, from what the gentleman from Arkansas has said, that Gen. Govan is a most estimable gentleman, and when I revisit my State I shall take the greatest pleasure in calling upon him and paying my respects to him at the agency.

Mr. NEILL. You will find him a thorough gentleman.

Mr. LYNCH. Mr. Chairman, is there any amendment pending?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the gentleman from Arkansas to move to strike out the last word.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I understand it is admitted that a citizen of Arkansas has been appointed to be Indian agent in the State of Washington, but I will ask the gentleman from Washington whether the excuse is not in the fact that in his

State at that time, in 1893 or 1894 when this appointment was made, there was not an honest and competent Democrat to be found for the place? [Laughter.]

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Well, Mr. Chairman, that might seem to be the logic of the situation; but I stand here to say that all over the State of Washington are great numbers of honest, industrious, law-abiding Democrats. I could not say otherwise if I would, and would not if I could.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read as follows:

After line 18, page 6, add, "at the Quapaw Agency, Indian Territory, $1,500."

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Chairman, I learned for the first time this morning——

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to reserve a point of order on this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order will be reserved.

Mr. MORGAN. I learned for the first time this morning that no provision is made in this bill for the continuation of the Quapaw Agency. I know no reason for this action on the part of the committee.

A MEMBER. Where is that agency located?

Mr. MORGAN. In the Indian Territory; on the Missouri line, opposite Seneca.

I have heard of no demand for this action on the part of the committee; and I would like to inquire whether it is recommended by the Department, and what is the supposed necessity for such action.

Reading the bill still further I find a provision to consolidate the Quapaw Agency with the Union Agency at Muscogee. I suppose that this is the reason that the committee has failed to make appropriation for the Quapaw Agency. I should like to know from the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs whether there does not exist the same necessity for the maintenance of the Quapaw Agency that has always existed.

It seems to me very extraordinary to attempt this sort of economy. To abolish this agency would be a great injury to the Indian tribes located here. I trust that the committee will give some explanation of their action; and in the absence of a sufficient explanation, the House must recognize this proposition as entirely wrong.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, the Quapaw Agency seems to be entirely unnecessary. The Quapaws are advanced Indians, on the same footing as the Five Civilized Tribes. This is a little reservation in the northeast corner of the Indian Territory, on lands which formerly belonged to the Cherokees; and these Indians practically constitute a portion of the Cherokees.

On this tract there are the Quapaws and some of the Delawares. I beg to call the attention of my friend from Missouri to the fact that these Indians have divided the lands up among themselves, and Congress has ratified the arrangements which they themselves have made. They are as far advanced in civilization as any one of the five civilized tribes.

Mr. MORGAN. May I ask whether the Department recommends the abolition of this agency?

Mr. HOLMAN. The Indian Committee ought to know as much about this matter——

Mr. MORGAN. But I ask that as a pertinent question.

Mr. HOLMAN. The Department does not recommend the abolition of this agency or other.

Mr. MORGAN. Why have you selected this agency for abolition rather than others?

Mr HOLMAN. Well, first, because these Indians naturally belong to the five civilized tribes; secondly, they have divided up their lands among themselves—by their own choice, not under the instigation of Congress. They are well advanced in civilization. They do not ask for the continuance of this agency.

Besides, the most intelligent report which has been made for a great many years in regard to Indian affairs—that of Hon. Thomas Donaldson, of Philadelphia, an expert in such matters, appointed to assist in taking the census of 1890—recommends the abolition of this agency, its absolute abolition, as unnecessary

These advanced Indians attend to their own affairs; an agent there has practically nothing to do. But as a matter of abundant caution, and for fear of any possible mistake (I call the attention of my friend from Missouri to this fact), we have inserted in a subsequent part of the bill a provision that the Quapaw Indian Agency be consolidated with the Union Agency at Muscogee.

Mr. MORGAN. I understand that.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman must see, it seems to me, that there is no possible excuse for continuing this agency. These Indians are really a part of the Cherokees. They were included in the Cherokee Agency when the Cherokee Agency was a part of the Union Agency.

Mr. MORGAN. According to my understanding, the gentleman is simply mistaken on that point. The Quapaw Agency has never been a part of the Union Agency.

Mr. HOLMAN. I agree to that statement; but I say it belongs to the same territory as that embraced in the Cherokee Reservation.

Mr. MORGAN. It is a part of the Indian Territory.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is a part of the same region; and at the time the Union Agency was established it embraced the territory now occupied by the Quapaws.

Mr. MORGAN. I deny that the Union Agency has ever embraced the territory of the Quapaw Agency.

Mr. HOLMAN. It embraced the lands of that agency.

Mr. MORGAN. No, I think not.

Mr. HOLMAN. It embraced the whole of the Cherokee lands.

Mr. MORGAN. The gentleman might just as well say that the Quapaw Agency embraced the same ground as the Union Agency.

Mr. HOLMAN. Apart from that, the most competent man who has investigated this subject in our time, Col. Donaldson, of Philadelphia, recommends simply that the agency be abolished as not at all necessary. He regards its continuance as without reason or excuse. Still, out of abundant caution, as I have already said, we have consolidated this agency with the Muscogee Agency, known as the Union Agency, the agency of the five civilized tribes.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana insist on his point of order?

Mr. HOLMAN. No; I will not insist upon it, but I must ask a vote on the amendment.

Mr. MORGAN. I do not know who Mr. Thomas Donaldson may be; undoubtedly he is an excellent man; but it seems to me that in the absence of any demand from this agency, in the absence of any recommendation by the Department, and in the absence of any intelligent explanation in favor of the action proposed by the committee, this agency ought not to be abolished.

Mr. HOLMAN. Why, my dear friend, can you say that that is not an intelligent explanation, and not a satisfactory one?

Mr. MORGAN. Let me get through. You might as well offer as an explanation that the abolition of the Union Agency would be justifiable, for the reason that it could be consolidated with some other agency.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if there is to be a consolidation of these agencies, why not consolidate the Union and the Quapaw Agency at the latter place. The Quapaw is the oldest, has existed the longest——

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, no.

Mr. MORGAN. I say it has existed the longest. It was in existence before the Union Agency was established, and I know it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think not.

Mr. MORGAN. Well, I know it. I can remember when it was established, and I am familiar with that country. The Quapaw Agency is directly on the line of my district.

There is no reason for this proposed action and no possible excuse for it. There is no necessity for it. It is an agency that has existed for fifty years. Evidently the only object of the gentleman from Indiana is to cut down the bill and save the $1,500 appropriated for the agency, and for no other reason.

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, it amounts to a good deal more than that.

Mr. MORGAN. And the gentleman may as well admit that that is what his purpose is.

Mr. HOLMAN. How many Quapaws are there?

Mr. MORGAN. Well, I have not the statistics here.

Mr. HOLMAN. A mere handful.

Mr. MORGAN. Very well. Now, you are the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, how many are there?

Mr. HOLMAN. Very few of them, the gentleman will find by examining.

Mr. FLYNN. There were sufficient of them to take 150,000 acres of land in severalty.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think not more than 50,000 acres.

Mr. FLYNN. One hundred and fifty thousand.

Mr. MORGAN. Now, if there is to be a consolidation of the two agencies I shall offer an amendment that the Union Agency shall be consolidated with the Quapaw.

Mr. HOLMAN. Very well; submit your amendment.

Mr. MORGAN. The Quapaw is on the line of the railway; it is more convenient, more accessible; can be more easily supplied, and is in many respects the superior location; but I hope for the good of the service the Quapaw Agency will be continued.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. HOLMAN. I shall not object to the amendment I think. I want to get rid of one of these agencies, but I think the plan proposed in the bill is the proper one, and I hope it will be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Missouri.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 18, page 6, add at the end of the line, "at the Quapaw Agency, Indian Territory, $1,500."

Mr. LYNCH. Why do you want to increase the amount? It was only $1,400 last year.

Mr. MORGAN. Very well; I will modify the amendment and make it $1,400.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment just read, as modified.

Mr. HOLMAN. Now, Mr. Chairman, I know something about this Quapaw Agency as well as the Union Agency. I know very well the condition there. I spent several weeks in that region, and have also read carefully the statement of the Hon. Thomas Donaldson on the subject. We are not acting blindly about the matter. I have no objection to the consolidation of the Union Agency with the Quapaw, though it seems to me it would be a singular thing for us to do. The Union Agency is the older one, covering practically the five civilized tribes. It is a well established agency, and well conducted. I suppose that these Quapaw Indians own land to the extent of some 50,000 acres.

Mr. FLYNN. About 300,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, but that embraces some of the Delawares.

Mr. FLYNN. Yes; they are all together.

Mr. HOLMAN. Nobody says that the Delawares need an agent. They occupy the same situation, under the shadow and influence of the five civilized tribes, with the Quapaws.

Mr. STOCKDALE. Why not abolish both of them?

Mr. HOLMAN. I am in favor of abolishing both. I think it might be done.

Mr. MORGAN. Why not abolish all of the agencies?

Mr. HOLMAN. I am in favor of abolishing all that are not needed.

But the question in this instance is which is the more competent? I understand that the man at the Union Agency is a very competent one. I do not know him, or in fact any of them. But my belief is that the Union agent is the more competent man, so far as I am able to ascertain; and therefore I would not like to make a change, and place the five tribes under the Quapaw agent, about whom I know nothing. I myself doubt very much really if any of these Indians want an agent.

Mr. MORGAN. The Quapaws?

Mr. HOLMAN. None of them; none of the five civilized tribes.

Mr. MORGAN. Have you anything of that kind from the Department to substantiate your belief?

Mr. HOLMAN. I think I could find amongst my papers some statements on this subject that would confirm that conviction.

Mr. MORGAN. Now, let me ask if you have referred this to the Department at all?

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, no——

Mr. MORGAN. Has it not been the usual thing to make an appropriation, and have they not maintained an agency there for years?

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, certainly.

Mr. MORGAN. And does not the same necessity exist to-day that existed ten years ago?

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, no necessity has existed for fifteen years past.

Mr. MORGAN. Then, it is merely a matter of economy, and you think you can strike out that agency?

Mr. HOLMAN. Without any trouble at all.

Mr. MORGAN. Well, I object to it, and I demand a vote on my amendment.

Mr. MADDOX. Do I understand that the amendment is to consolidate the Quapaw Agency with the Union Agency?

Mr. MORGAN. Oh, no.

Mr. MADDOX. I was going to say, if it was for that purpose you would be taking the mountain to the mouse.

Mr. MORGAN. No; it is to continue the Quapaw Agency. The committee proposed to strike it out.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. MORGAN].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. HOLMAN. Division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 37, noes 14.

Mr. HOLMAN. There is no quorum. I do not wish to stop the consideration of the bill on that account, though. But, with a clear, sensible recommendation upon this subject from a public officer that the office be abolished, it seems to me strange that the House should retain the office.

Mr. MORGAN. What public officer has advised that?

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman who took the census of those Indians.

Mr. MORGAN. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs has recommended nothing of the kind.

Mr. HOLMAN. No; the Commissioner of Indian Affairs has not.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman insist upon his point of no quorum?

Mr. HOLMAN. I believe I will not insist upon it, but I will ask a vote on it in the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The ayes have it, and the amendment is agreed to.

The Clerk, resuming the reading of the bill, read as follows:

Provided, That the foregoing appropriation shall not take effect nor become available in any case for or during the time in which any officer of the Army of the United States shall be engaged in performance of the duties of Indian agent at any of the agencies above named: Provided further, That the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, may devolve the duties of any Indian agency upon the superintendent of the Indian training school located at such agency, whenever in his judgment such superintendent can properly perform the duties of such agency. And the superintendent upon whom such duties devolve shall give bond as other Indian agents: Provided, That the Quapaw Indian Agency is hereby consolidated with the Union Agency at Muscogee; in all, $85,200; and all provisions of law fixing compensation for Indian agents in excess of that herein provided are hereby repealed, and all offices in the Indian service not herein provided for are hereby abolished.

Mr. LYNCH. In order to make that proviso conform to the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. MORGAN], just adopted, I move to strike out all from line 7 to line 13, inclusive, on page 7.

Mr. MORGAN. I have an amendment already prepared.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LYNCH] accept the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. MORGAN]?

Mr. MORGAN. My amendment is to strike out in lines 6, 7, and 8, on page 7, the words:

Provided, That the Quapaw Indian Agency is hereby consolidated with the Union Agency at Muscogee.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment just offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. MORGAN].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PICKLER. I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding after the word "named," in line 23, page 6, the following:

"Provided, That the President shall only detail an army officer to discharge the duties of Indian agent when he shall deem it for the best interest of the service to do so."

Mr. HOLMAN. I make the point of order on that, that it is a change of existing law.

Mr. BOWERS of California. I shall insist upon a quorum if that amendment is pressed.

Mr. PICKLER. The point of order is not good. There is nothing in the law providing for the detail of army officers, except a provision in the last annual appropriation bill. There is no provision for next year that I know of.

Mr. BOWERS of California. It is the law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be compelled to sustain the point of order. The Clerk will read.

Mr. LYNCH. Mr. Chairman, by reason of the adoption of the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. MORGAN] it will require another amendment, on page 7, and we will have to add $1,400.

The CHAIRMAN. So that it will be $86,600. If there be no objection, that amendment will be considered as agreed to.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. PICKLER. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, although the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs has seen proper to make the point of order, it is in my opinion not a proper or desirable thing to detail army officers as Indian agents. It is beyond my comprehension how the gentleman from California [Mr. BOWERS] who was the father of this matter, and how the Fifty-third Congress can stand by the gentleman from Indiana in his desire to save a few dollars in this matter for the sake of economy. It is beyond my comprehension how these gentleman can insist upon retaining this provision upon the statute.

The detail of army officers as Indian agents is against the judgment of every Secretary of the Interior; against the judgment of every Commissioner of Indian Affairs; it is against the judgment of every civil commission which has been appointed at any time and made any recommendation as to the government of Indians; it is against the recommendation of Gen. Sheridan and a board of army officers who were appointed some years ago to investigate that matter. It is against the judgment of every intelligent Indian chief, and of every Indian tribe; it is against the judgment of everybody who is interested in the cause of humanity, so far as Indians are concerned, except upon the poor, simple, pitiful plea of saving a few dollars.

There are several Indian agencies in my State, and I am very thankful that there is but one army officer occupying the position as agent. I have nothing to say against him. A short time ago a gentleman who had been candidate for governor on the Democratic ticket of my State was appointed to an agency, one of the most important in the State; and I am glad he was appointed. The logical result of the policy of the gentleman from Indiana would be that you had better take a lieutenant from West Point when he graduates and send him out there to have control over 3,000 Indians rather than one of our own citizens, a man who had been the candidate of the Democratic party for governor, and a man who stands high in the estimation of the people of the State.

I have no word to say against the army officers, but it is not their business to govern Indians. We are governing the Indians by education, and trying to civilize and Christianize them. Army officers are not men adapted for the performance of such a duty; and it is against the judgment of all the Indians to appoint them agents. In times past, when the Indians were warlike, it was thought to be a good idea to have army officers as agents. Those days have passed. The Sioux Indians, who comprise 20,000 of the manliest and grandest Indians in all this country, and the most warlike, so far as that is concerned, are no longer warlike; and we have no need for army officers there.

I am surprised that the majority in this House should permit this. You hear complaints about the violation of the home-rule plank, and I indorse the sentiment that we ought to appoint men from the States in which the offices are situated. During the last Administration I went to secure appointments to consulships, and I was informed the Administration was appointing the agencies and the officers of the land offices from the States, and was told: "You will get your quota in that way." In that way they kept us out of the competition for other offices in the United States.

Mr. PICKLER. I ask unanimous consent that I may have more time.

There was no objection.

Mr. PICKLER. The appointment of army officers, I say, is against the judgment of the Indians; it is against the judgment of all people who are interested in the Indian. It is against the judgment of the President of the United States at this very moment. It is against the judgment of the Secretary of the Interior at this very moment, and it is against the judgment of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. My friend from California [Mr. BOWERS], as I understand, from some local matter, I believe, in the Fifty-first Congress injected this practice. Now, I understand that the only reason that the gentleman from Indiana has for a continuance of this policy is that it saves money, when it is against the judgment of the Indians, and two Commissioners of Indian Affairs have told me, and shown me the figures to prove that the appointment of a military officer always makes the administration more costly than the appointment of a civilian.

Mr. CAMPBELL. It saves trouble anyhow.

Mr. PICKLER. When an army officer is appointed as an Indian agent there are a lot of subordinate officers to which he recommends the appointment of his friends. He takes his son, and the sons and daughters of army officers from other parts of the United States and has them appointed. I agree with my friend from Washington [Mr. WILSON] that the positions ought to be filled by residents of the States. I know we have Democrats in my State who are good enough to hold these offices, and I want to see them have them rather than that army officers from other parts of the United States shall be appointed, for it is against the judgment of everybody concerned with or who has an interest in the Indians.

There is no force in the argument of the gentleman from Indiana that it will save money. The army officer, you know, likes to live well, and he will do it. There is no one who has any acquaintance with the necessities in the Indian service who is in favor of the appointment of army officers, and I am surprised that the Congress of the United States will force those army officers where all who are interested in the Indian service say they should not go.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that the provision of the existing law bearing on this subject be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That from and after the passage of this act the President shall detail officers of the United States Army to act as Indian agents at all agencies where vacancies from any cause may hereafter occur, who, while acting as such agents, shall be under the orders and direction of the Secretary of the Interior, except at agencies where, in the opinion of the President, the public service would be better promoted by the appointment of a civilian.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, under that provision twenty-three army officers have been detailed for the Indian service.

Mr. PICKLER. I beg the gentleman's pardon; nearly all the Indian officers were appointed long before that provision took effect.

Mr. HOLMAN. Still, twenty-three army officers have been appointed under that provision, which has been substantially the law for forty years past. I visited most of these agencies a few years ago; and the best conducted agency which I found during a tour of four or five months was the Apache Agency, which was under the control of Capt. Green. It was the most efficiently administered; the Indians were better satisfied than at other agencies. There was a feeling all around there that the Indians were being justly treated. So far as I know, this provision has worked very well. Besides, it will be perceived that this matter is discretionary with the President. How can my friend on the other side say that the President does not approve it? It is his policy. Twenty-three Indian agents have been appointed from the Army.

Mr. BOWERS of California. In reply to the gentleman from South Dakota, I wish to read an expression of the judgment of a gentlemen who, I think all will admit, is quite familiar with this matter of Indians and Indian agencies—Gen. Nelson A. Miles, of the United States Army. I know of no man who has had more experience with the Indians than Gen. Miles, and no man who stands higher in the estimation of all who know him. In his report dated February 9, 1891, he says:

I have no hesitation in giving it as my belief that the same Indians (the Sioux and Cheyennes), under military control for a few years' time, could be made a peaceful, progressive, and law-abiding people.

My reason for asking the appointment of officers of the Army to be made agents and take charge of those agencies, was to secure officials in whom the Indians have confidence, and whose efficiency and integrity in the management of Indians have been tested and proven by years of service in this kind of duty. It is needless to point to the fact that, where officers have had charge of agencies, they have been eminently successful in managing even the wildest and most warlike. Officers of the Army have also inaugurated and conducted the most important Indian schools in this country.

As a law of Congress especially authorizes the Executive to make such appointments, I recommend that the Sioux and Cheyenne Indians remain entirely under the care and government of the military, and I base this entirely upon what I believe to be essential to the public good and to the welfare of the Indians, and the assurance of permanent peace for the people whose homes, property, and lives are dependent upon their successful management.

The military problem, so far as the Sioux and Cheyenne Indians are concerned, has been solved, with the results heretofore mentioned, and that part of the country has been restored to a condition of profound peace and tranquillity.

This, gentlemen, is the testimony of a man whom I think no one here will accuse of making any false statement or of not knowing what he is talking about. There is not a man here who does not know that Gen. Miles, in what I have read, tells the exact truth. Whatever may be your political aspirations or your political schemes, and whatever friendships you may have to serve, you know that this is the truth, the Government of the United States knows that it is the truth, and the people know it.

Mr. FLYNN. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out the last line. Mr. Chairman, I am in sympathy with the general policy of the committee. I believe that in many cases army officers are beyond doubt the best Indian agents. But we have at Anadarko, near Fort Sill, in our Territory, one of these army officers in charge of the Indians, who has busied himself here in Washington to defeat the ratification of certain pending treaties. In order that this matter may be fully understood, I wish to read a letter from one gentleman who was engaged at this agency:

OKLAHOMA CITY, April 21, 1894.

DEAR SIR: I am in receipt of an order from Frank C. Armstrong removing me from the position of additional farmer at the Kiowa Agency, to take effect immediately. No charges have been made. I have complied and obeyed every order that has been given me from the agent. I have punctiliously performed my duty. There is not a man on the agency but will corroborate this statement. I wrote you a letter advising you, or rather informing you how and what the agents were doing here to defeat the treaty made at Fort Sill.

Now, since the agent has found out that I reported the facts to you and that you read my letter to the Indian Committee, he has waged the war against me solely, and holds me responsible for the whole matter. I will repeat the charges so as you may be able to understand them.

Lieut. Nickols called the council of the Kiowas and Comanches and was in the council, and the delegates were appointed and an interpreter was appointed by the Indian council. The interpreter that was appointed by the Indian council was rejected by the agent, Lieut. Nickols, and he appointed another interpreter of his own liking. They had no money to go to Washington on, and the agent, Lieut. Nickols, went to the merchants and pledged himself as the agent of the Indians to pay them out of the grass money, and did place guards and sentinels at the door, and did collect from the Indians grass money to pay off the merchants who had advanced this money; and he did send the money that he had received from the merchants to Chickash by one Mr. E. Buck, and did give it over to one Lieut. Scott, all of which I am able to prove by a number of witnesses, all of which is contrary to orders and the regulations of the Indian Department.

Now, it looks hard that I am the only man to suffer for reporting the facts to you. I have worked hard with the Indians to get them not to fight the ratification of the Sill treaty.

Now, I want you to see J. WHEELER and get him to go with you to the Secretary of the Interior, H. Smith, and explain this matter to him and have me reinstated in my former position, that of additional farmer. Show

Gen. WHEELER the letter I wrote you and I know that he will aid you all he can. If you deem it necessary I will send you a dozen charges against the agent that I can sustain.

While I differ with you politically, I am the only man in the Kiowa Indian Agency that dared fight for the ratification of the treaty and the only employé of the Government from this Territory in the agency.

Please reply immediately at Anadarko, Okla.

Yours respectfully,

JAS. M. WARREN.

Hon. DENNIS FLYNN.

Now, before taking my seat, I desire to say that I called upon the Assistant Commissioner, Gen. Armstrong, and he stated that he was compelled to remove this man for reasons of his own. But that fact does not remove the charge made against this army officer, the Indian agent at that post, of putting guards at the doors of the Indian council, and making them agree to contribute a certain amount of money to send another army officer here to Washington to protest against the ratification of certain treaties that had been negotiated by such men as ex-Governor Jerome, of Michigan.

Mr. BOWERS of California. If there is anything in that charge, that officer should be tried by court-martial.

Mr. STOCKDALE. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 7, strike out lines 14, 15, 16, as follows:

"For the payment of necessary interpreters, to be distributed in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, $10,000."

Mr. STOCKDALE. I offer this amendment more for the purpose of making an inquiry than to discuss the merits of the question. I do not concur in the disposition manifested by gentlemen on both sides of the House; and I think that under the present circumstances the fact is to be deprecated that whenever a paragraph of this bill or an amendment proposed by the committee looks to economizing the expenses of the Government, the gentleman from Indiana is attacked and the policy of economy sneered at.

It does seem to me, in the present condition of the Treasury of the United States, that a member of this House who attacks the chairman of the committee, who is striving to economize the expenditures of the Government, is hardly discharging his honest duty; he may be to his constituents, but not to the Government and the balance of the people.

Now, if this can be done, why is it not done? I offered an amendment of this sort in the last Congress, and was informed by gentlemen from the West that there are men, and plenty of them, who can be employed who are themselves competent to act as interpreters. If that be true, why should we appoint an agent first and then appoint a man to tell the agent what the Indians say, and to tell the Indian what the agent says, when you can have both combined in the same person? If they can be combined in the same person it seems to me that it ought to be done, and I ask the chairman if it can not be done?

Mr. LYNCH. Not if you take them from other States or Territories.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think, of course, it could be done.

Mr. STOCKDALE. Then if it could be done it ought to done. Now, my friend from Wisconsin says, "Not if you take them from other States." I think that home rule is a good thing, and I am glad to see so many gentlemen on the other side of the House to-day coming up to the good old sound States' rights doctrine. I hope they will be like the old school Presbyterians and the Ironside Baptists, that they will be steadfast in their faith.

Mr. PICKLER. You are the one that is deserting it.

Mr. STOCKDALE. Oh, no; I was always opposed to carpet-baggers, and but for the fact that some gentlemen on the other side have announced themselves carpet-baggers during this debate—gentlemen for whom I have very high respect—I would be inclined at this time to occupy a part of my time in saying something about that class of the genus homo.

Mr. PICKLER. But you are in favor of importing army officers.

Mr. STOCKDALE. In response to that it is only necessary to say that they are public officers, and are not supposed to have any special location. Wherever you can save the Government anything by their appointment as agents, or in any other way, it seems entirely proper to do it when the appointment is within the scope of their duties. No man has ever spoken a word against the honesty, the integrity, or the ability of the army officers. They have their reputation at stake. They have a life position, and the gentleman knows that this Indian business, as a system in this country, has not always been free from suspicion

Mr. PICKLER. That I deny as having any foundation in fact during the last fifteen years.

Mr. STOCKDALE. Well, not to your knowledge.

Mr. PICKLER. No, sir; there is not a more honest service in connection with the Government than the Indian service.

Mr. STOCKDALE. Very well; if that is true, I am glad of it; I have no doubt it is true at this time.

Now, I repeat, army officers may be appointed anywhere and for any duty.

Mr. PICKLER. Then, why not take them for postmasters in your district?

Mr. STOCKDALE. That is no business for an army officer to engage in. And I do not think the gentleman himself is in earnest.

Mr. PICKLER. I do not see any difference in principle.

Mr. STOCKDALE. If the gentleman has no better argument than that against the army officers, they certainly ought to be appointed as agents.

Mr. PICKLER. There is no difference in principle.

Mr. STOCKDALE. Well, if the gentleman from South Dakota can not see the difference now, I have no time in five minutes to undertake to convince him. Now, the chairman says this can be done without injury to the service, and I think it ought to be done in the interest of economy.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. Chairman, before the vote is taken on this proposition, I desire to call the attention of the committee to the fact that this is the beginning of economy at the wrong end. There is no more important position connected with the Indian service than the interpreter. It is very important that there should be a correct and competent interpreter in dealing with them.

It has been my fortune in the last twelve or fifteen years to live beside the Indians. I have done business with them, and know the difficulties surrounding any man who attempts to do business with them without the aid of a competent and honest interpreter. To take a half-breed, as suggested, and make an interpreter of him, the chances are at least nineteen out of twenty that the white man will be dealt against every time in different transactions.

It is important, Mr. Chairman, that a competent and honest interpreter shall be maintained between the Government and the Indians, for as prone as the white man is to complain, as prone as he is to find fault, he is not a commencement with an Indian on ration day, because when the Indian comes to draw his rations, if he is not satisfied with what the Government is giving him his excuse is that he can not understand the interpreter.

Now, to abolish the interpreter, to take him away, to rely upon somebody not a responsible party, will inure to the damage of the Government as sure as the world exists. I trust the committee, then, will not strike out the section. I trust they will not do it, because it is important in point of peace, quietude, and contentment for the Indian himself, as well as to the material advantage of the Government, to maintain these interpreters.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, just one word. The only reduction made upon that item is $5,000. The estimate is $15,000, and that sum has been appropriated for some years. But my friend from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] will fully confirm my statement, because I was with him at most of the important agencies of the country some years ago, and there was no lack of persons competent to interpret. Of course, the number of persons competent to interpret has largely increased since then, because that was eight or nine years ago. Now, I have been told, year after year, that there were some Indians, the Blackfeet, and some other tribes north of the Upper Missouri, and in the northern portions of Idaho, Montana, and Washington, which we did not visit, where you would hardly ever find a person in Government employment who was competent to interpret.

But at the agencies we visited we fell in with Indians everywhere, and white men upon all sides who could interpret. It was the simplest thing in the world. Why, during this last winter, a lady by the name of Mrs. Lochren, a Pottawatomie Indian, who could not read or write, who had never been to school an hour, came here as an interpreter for some Pottawatomies and some other fragments of tribes remaining in Kansas. She spoke English just as well as any lady that I know, and interpreted for the four or five tribes that came here. There was no trouble about it at all. If you go to such an agency as the Apache Agency you will find any number of persons in Government employment who are perfectly competent to interpret.

Mr. LUCAS. It is an easy language to learn, but the trouble is to get honest interpreters.

Mr. HOLMAN. You will get the same class of people anyway.

Mr. LUCAS. Indeed you will not.

Mr. HOLMAN. But I wish to say that in the remote northern portions of the country, along the international boundary, across Minnesota, North Dakota, Montana, Idaho, and northern Washington, there are bodies of Indians somewhat remote from the civilized sections of the country, and it may be necessary that a small sum of money be made available for interpreters there. I think, however, that $10,000 is a very ample sum.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. PICKLER. I think under the amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. STOCKDALE] it would be utterly impossible to administer the Indian service. I do not know how you can do it, if you do not provide an interpreter. I do not understand how you could get along with them at all.

I beg to detain the committee for two or three minutes in regard to the quotations made by the gentleman from California [Mr. BOWERS] from Gen. Miles concerning Indian officers. This communication that the gentleman has read was made by Gen. Miles just after the fight at Wounded Knee, the most disgraceful butchery of Indians that has occurred in the last quarter of a century.

Mr. LUCAS. You are mistaken about that.

Mr. PICKLER. The most disgraceful butchery of Indians that has occurred in the last quarter of a century!

Mr. BOWERS of California. Do you call Gen. Miles a butcher?

Mr. PICKLER. I am not charging anybody; but I know from the civil agents out there—I know the agent of the Big Foot band that was attacked—and that gentleman told me that it was hunger and the aggressiveness of the military which brought on that engagement; and I believe, as he was governing 2,000 Indians, he could have governed this Big Foot band of a few Indians. It is conceded by everybody there that it was hunger and the aggressiveness of the Army, and mistakes made there, that resulted in that disgraceful butchery, in which some of our officers and 28 soldiers and over 100 Indians were killed, and which also resulted in the killing of Sitting Bull, an affair which the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] knows about so well.

Gen. Miles said at that time that all of our agencies in South Dakota should be put under military officers. They were not put under military officers, and we only have one so placed today, but we have had peace and quietude ever since that time. All we need is enough for the Indians to eat, and the civil agents will keep the peace. Army officers always sustain army officers of course, but I ask the gentleman, instead of quoting from Gen. Miles, to take the statement of any Indian. I have talked with Little-No-Heart and with White Swan of the Cheyenne River Indians; I have talked with John Eastman at Flandrau; I have talked with chiefs from different agencies in my State, and there is not a solitary one of them who is not opposed to the appointing of military officers as agents.

Mr. BOWERS of California. Will you allow me to ask you a question?

Mr. PICKLER. I have not the time. These Indians say the army officers' idea is to govern by force. They say that they want schools and education, and that they do not want bayonets and bullets. The language of Little-No-Heart to me was that the soldiers are the natural enemies of the Indians.

Mr. BOWERS of California. Did the soldiers starve them? Was it the army officers who denied them rations and brought on the war?

Mr. PICKLER. Was it the goose that flew over the barn or a duck?

Mr. BOWERS of California. The less you stir that matter the better it will appear.

Mr. PICKLER. I want to say that if you will take any humanitarian; if you will take any Indian rights commission; if you will take anybody interested in this business, and see what they say, and then say that they are in favor of the appointment of army officers, I will concede there may be some virtue in it. The gentleman talks about my attack on the gentleman from Indiana. I merely said the only reason he had for supporting this was as a matter of economy. It is not economy, as the Commissioner of Indian Affairs tells you here, to have these army officers as Indian agents. The army officer, like my friend from California, is a man who has blood in his eye, and who believes that the only good Indian is a dead Indian.

Mr. BOWERS of California. I should be sorry to be taken at the value the gentleman puts on me.

Mr. STOCKDALE. In view of the statement that this appropriation has already been reduced $5,000, I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I move to strike out "ten" and insert "fifteen;" so as to make it $15,000. I do that for the purpose of asking the gentleman from Indiana whether this reduction is recommended by the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. HOLMAN. No; it is not recommended by anybody——

Mr. EVERETT. Then why have it, if it is not recommended by anybody?

Mr. HOLMAN. Except by the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I want to say that I fear when you cut this appropriation of $5,000 from $15,000 to $10,000, as proposed by the committee, you injure the service. All told, I believe there are one hundred and thirty-nine reservations. How many agencies?

Mr. HOLMAN. Fifty-six agencies.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. And they regulate how many Indians?

Mr. HOLMAN. About 133,000.

Mr. LYNCH. That is, regular Indians.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. And the United States has control of all of them.

Mr. LYNCH. And there are about 100,000 mixed bloods.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Now, most of these Indians, as I understand, can not speak the language used at the respective agencies. You want interpreters in whose truth and fidelity you can rely; and when you get such interpreters, if you can find them, you ought to pay them a good compensation.

I can readily see how a dishonest or incompetent interpreter could make a great amount of trouble for the Government, and a great amount of trouble for the Indians. His knowledge, his honesty, and his good faith is stronger bond for peace than could otherwise be given by any other one man; and I must say I doubt the propriety of decreasing this appropriation. I am slow, I will say frankly, after the gentleman from Indiana has investigated a matter of this kind, to antagonize it; but I fear he is not wise, or his committee is not wise, in recommending this decrease.

Now, there are 133,000 Indians that the Government has charge of. The most of the Indians, as I understand it, can not speak English. In a matter of communication, a matter of business, a matter of rations, and every conceivable matter that they desire to present, whether there is sense in it, or whether it is a "kick" only or a proposition, it should come accurately to the ear of the man who has authority and control. Having said this much about it, I have said all I am inclined to say; and I believe that you ought to have $15,000 for interpreters, as we have had heretofore, and therefore I make the motion.

Mr. HOLMAN. Just a word. This $15,000 for interpreters has been appropriated for a great many years. During that time hundreds and thousands of Indians have been educated, East and West. Hundreds are in the Government employment at the agencies, all the laboring employments, such as herders and all that kind of employment, shall be given to Indians. It is a peremptory requirement, except these others where they could not be employed; but as to all other employments, such as teachers, Indians shall be preferred. There has been any number of delegations here from all the tribes.

I mention Mrs. Lockran, who has never been to school an hour. She spoke our language perfectly, and interpreted for three or four tribes. At Pine Ridge, where the gentleman was present, we met with Indians of all ages, nine years ago, who spoke both languages well. There is no trouble about it at all. I hope the House will adopt the policy that Indians shall be employed at the agencies exclusively so far as possible; and I think it can be done exclusively. Think of how many hundreds and thousands of Indians we have educated during the last even nine years from all sections of the country. Intelligent persons come here as delegates from every tribe, and there are always some men among them who speak our language well.

Mr. EVERETT. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HOLMAN. Just one moment. In addition to that, at every important agency you have your police force. They are generally intelligent men, people who speak our language. I venture to say if you go to Pine Ridge, or Rosebud, or Standing Rock you will find hundreds and hundreds of persons in all these Government employments who speak the two languages perfectly well. Now, I admit that fifty years ago this was all well enough, but when you commence a public expenditure of this kind for a proper object it becomes so fastened upon you that you can not get rid of it when it is no longer necessary.

Mr. RAY. I will ask the gentleman if he has any knowledge whether or not the educated Indians have been employed as interpreters?

Mr. HOLMAN. Sometimes. We now require that they shall be employed.

Mr. RAY. What I wanted to get at was whether they would make reliable interpreters as between the Government and the Indian tribes.

Mr. HOLMAN. Just as reliable as any that would be appointed. They are all the same class of people around there. I never heard of any trouble about interpreting.

Mr. RAY. The question would be one of policy with me. Of course, if they are honest and trustworthy and would discharge their duties honestly and faithfully, I should be in favor of their employment, and the only question that would arise in my mind would be whether these educated Indians would perform that duty honestly and faithfully as between the Government and the tribes.

Mr. HOLMAN. My friend is aware that at every one of these agencies there is an agency school, with a competent superintendent, who generally understands English very well, and also the Indian language, and who has a number of teachers under him who understand both languages. Gentlemen are talking about this matter as it might properly have been talked of, perhaps, fifty years ago, but we have been civilizing these Indians during all that time, and for thirty years past have been devoting special care to their education, and you can not go into any Indian community now where you will not find white men who are familiar with the Indian language as well as with English. I do not know what experience my friend from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] may have had, but I found no difficulty in communicating with the Indians anywhere. I always found persons competent to interpret.

Mr. RAY. The money that has been appropriated for this purpose heretofore has been all used, I suppose.

Mr. HOLMAN. No, sir; it has not been all used. I have sent to ascertain how that happened, but I know it has not all been used. This is a mere question of how much will you pay. If you pay a captain of the police force in the Indian Territory a hundred or two hundred dollars additional for this service, that will serve the purpose just as well as to employ another man and pay him $500 a year. At Pine Ridge alone there is a police force of forty-nine, composed of fairly intelligent men.

Mr. LUCAS. About twelve of them speak English. The balance do not.

Mr. RAY. I will ask the gentleman from Indiana whether, in his judgment, the time has come when we need a less number of interpreters than we have required heretofore?

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly. I think that no injury would occur to the Indian service if the proposition of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. STOCKDALE] were adopted, but still I think that $10,000 should be allowed for this purpose.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I desire to withdraw the amendment and then to renew it for the purpose of saying a word. I agree that there are more people upon the reservations now who can talk both languages than there were twenty-five years ago, or ten years ago, or five years ago; but I want to remind my friend from Indiana that there are 139 of these reservations, fifty and odd agencies, and 133,000 Indians under the charge of the United States. Now, I call his attention to the fact that outside of the Government employés, no white man can legally be upon those reservations. There are white men there, to be sure. Some of them go in there and get adopted into the tribes; some of them intermarry with the Indians; some are fugitives from justice who have gone in there in defiance of law; but no white man, not a Government employé, can be there lawfully——

Mr. STOCKDALE. Unless he is married.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Unless he intermarries with the Indians, and many of them who have intermarried went there at first in violation of law. Therefore, so far as these white people are concerned, they are not the most trustworthy persons in the world for interpreters. Now, so far as the Indian is concerned, he sees the Indian side of a question, and unless there is a special incentive, as a rule I do not think the Indians will make the most trustworthy interpreters.

It is true that we are educating them at Carlisle and at the Haskell Institute, and at other places, and that they go back to the tribes, and I am in complete harmony with the gentleman from Indiana in holding that all Indians who are thus educated should be given employment on the reservations, and that the preference should be given to them, because if the Government does not employ them, their condition will be worse than if they were not educated at all. But when you consider that there are 133,000 Indians, and that the white people who are on the reservations are there against the law, and some of them fugitives from justice, the bare statement of the number of Indians, the number of agencies, and the number of reservations would seem to be a sufficient argument for allowing at least $15,000 to be used by the Secretary of the Interior for the employment of interpreters.

If you have an interpreter at all, you must make his compensation sufficient to enable him to feel that he is not giving something for nothing. That, as we all know, is the rule among white people. If I employ a white man and put him in a position of responsibility, I would run my hand into the fire before I would have him feel that he was giving something for nothing. The rule of my life has always been to pay every cent that the service is worth, if not more, and then you can expect good service, because the man feels that it is to his interest as well as to his inclination to render such service.

Mr. LUCAS. One of the peculiar things about the Indian is that if he is paid by the Government—if he receives a compensation, however small, as its employé—he feels himself under an obligation to be faithful to its interests. This seems to be the only thing that will induce an Indian to desert his own people and be loyal to the Government as against them.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I think there is some force in that suggestion.

Mr. LUCAS. Any man familiar with the Indian character knows this to be true. Hence the importance of properly selecting interpreters. No doubt there are hundreds of men, and women too, who can interpret the Indian language. The white men around the agencies all have a smattering of that language, for it is easily learned; but if you wish to get an interpreter that the Government may rely on, he must be the paid servant of the Government. The truth is that the difficulty at Pine Ridge, when the Wounded Knee war came on, arose in the beginning from the treachery of an interpreter.

Mr. STOCKDALE. Mr. Chairman, I am not factious about this matter, but I want to get at the truth. I would like to know where the Government gets these interpreters. You take them, I presume, right around the agency.

Mr. LUCAS. We take them off the agency and pay them a salary.

Mr. STOCKDALE. And you can get an Indian agent who can also serve as an interpreter?

Mr. LUCAS. Not one time in a thousand.

Mr. STOCKDALE. There is this difficulty in dealing with the present question. Western gentlemen, in whom I have great confidence, and by whom I have frequently been influenced in my votes in reference to measures concerning Indians, take positions on this question which are hard to understand. When we talk about reducing the appropriations for the Indians or adopting any regulation in regard to their lands, almost the whole Western delegation will pronounce eulogiums upon the Indian; will tell us how great he is, how honest he is, how true he is; will tell us that he is highly civilized, equal to the white man.

Why, sir, the gentleman from South Dakota spoke awhile ago of "grand" Indians. On the other hand, whenever we talk about using the Indians as agents, everyone of those gentlemen comes up and says, "Oh, the Indian is treacherous."

Mr. LUCAS. We do not say that they are all treacherous; that is too broad a statement.

Mr. STOCKDALE. If we have been continuing for so long our efforts to civilize the Indians, and can not find now one that can be relied on as an Indian agent or interpreter, that goes very far to confirm what I have often been inclined to believe—that there is no full-blooded Indian who is civilized.

Mr. LUCAS. The Indian is a good deal like the white man.

Mr. STOCKDALE. Well, if he is "a good deal like the white man," why not treat him as such? You can not improve on the white man.

The talk about the Indian seems to me very much like some of the talk which we have had here, which amused me very much, in regard to locating the new Printing Office. Gentlemen tell us of the great importance of preserving the public reservations in this city. They say, "These are the great breathing-places, created that the citizens of Washington may have a health-giving atmosphere." But when we talk about putting a Public Printing Office on one of these reservations they at once say, "Oh, that location is malarious; we ought not to compel the employés of the Printing Office to breathe such air; nobody can maintain his health there."

So it would appear that so long as we want to fleece the Indians and make money out of them, they are the grandest people on the earth; but when we propose to use them for any purpose requiring intelligence and fidelity, at once we are told "They are treacherous." Under such circumstances, how are we to come to any conclusion intelligently?

Mr. LUCAS. Allow me to make this suggestion: You have been dealing with the colored man so long and not paying him anything, that now you do not want to pay the Indians.

Mr. STOCKDALE. The gentleman's assertion is not true. He makes a charge that no man can sustain.

Mr. LUCAS. I am speaking in general terms.

Mr. STOCKDALE. Well, those "general terms" do not truthfully apply. There are no people better fed and more surely paid (they are not paid so much as these Indian agents) as the negroes in the South. And I wish to say to the gentleman from South Dakota that in my opinion there is a great deal of sickly sentiment in regard to the negro. You have never appropriated a single dollar to the colored man.

Mr. LUCAS. He did not need it.

Mr. STOCKDALE. No; he does not need it because we support him; we tax ourselves to educate him. He does not pay 10 cents on the dollar of the money that educates his own children. Year after year the educational bill was heralded through this country, and we were told that the Government of the United States must appropriate money to educate the negro; but the moment that the Republican party come into possession of the Government in the Fifty-first Congress that measure died a natural death, and we have never heard of it since.

Mr. LUCAS. I thought you would bring politics into it before you got through.

Mr. STOCKDALE. Well, then, do not make such statements as that. You can not find a colored man in the whole country, anywhere in the Southern States, who will agree to the statement you have made.

Mr. LUCAS. Oh, I think I could.

Mr. STOCKDALE. I will give you a dollar apiece for every one of them.

Mr. LUCAS. I think I might make a good deal of money in that way.

Mr. STOCKDALE. I take it that no gentleman who has traveled in the Southern country will make that statement.

Mr. PICKLER. What has that to do with the question of the interpreters?

Mr. STOCKDALE. Well, the gentleman from South Dakota uses it as an argument as to why we should not say anything about paying the Indians. I was only replying to that.

Mr. LUCAS. I said we wanted to pay these men for their services.

Mr. STOCKDALE. The gentleman said if the Government paid the Indian he would be true to the Government.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. LYNCH. Mr. Chairman, there are so many reductions in this bill that we shall necessarily have to increase, that I am of the opinion that this one ought to stand rather than many of the others. From year to year the Indians are getting better and better able to do their own business with the agents, and without the aid of an interpreter, and I think we can stand a reduction of $5,000 without injury to the service. If I did not think so I would not hesitate to vote to increase the amount to the estimate made by the Commissioner. But this is one of those items that I think we can stand a reduction in, without detriment to the service, and hence I favor reducing the appropriation to the amount fixed here—$10,000. We will come across other items after a while where that condition may not apply.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the pay of five Indian inspectors, at $2,500 per annum each, $12,500.

Mr. McRAE. I wish to offer a substitute for that section.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out lines 17, 18, and 19, on page 7, and insert:
"For pay of five Indian inspectors, at $3,000 per annum each, $15,000."

Mr. BOWERS of California. I wish to offer an amendment to the substitute.

Mr. HOLMAN. I raise the question of order on the amendment.

Mr. McRAE. Do I understand the gentleman to say that we can not change an appropriation bill at all, even to make it conform to the existing law? I would like very much to hear what the point of order is.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is that these salaries are fixed by law.

Mr. McRAE. That is exactly what I am trying to have done, to make their salaries conform to the law. The idea that a point of order can be made against an amendment to a bill, when the bill itself seeks to change the law, is a most singular proposition to me. I ask the Clerk to read from the Revised Statutes——

Mr. HOLMAN. I understand the salary of these officers is fixed by law at $3,000.

Mr. McRAE. That is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana insist upon the point of order?

Mr. HOLMAN. No; I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. McRAE. Now, I ask the Clerk to read sections 2043, 2044, and 2045 of the Revised Statutes, as bearing directly upon this subject.

Before that I wish to state, however, that these officers, created by this statute, have salaries fixed at $3,000 each. They are required to be nominated by the President and confirmed by the Senate. Their duties are very responsible, perhaps the most responsible of any other officers connected with the Indian service lower in authority than the Commissioner himself. They ought to be men who are worth $3,000 a year, and I believe that those now on duty are worth it. None of them were appointed from my State.

I am not even acquainted with any one of the gentlemen occupying these positions, but I do know something of the responsible and important services rendered by them. It has always been the practice to pay them the full amount of the salary fixed since the passage of the statutes to which I refer. That ought to be continued until the law is changed.

I ask the Clerk to read now the sections of the statutes to which I have referred.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2043. There shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, a sufficient number of Indian inspectors, not exceeding five in number, to perform the duties required of such inspectors by the provisions of this title. Each inspector shall hold his office for four years, unless sooner removed by the President.

SEC. 2044. Each inspector shall receive an annual salary of $3,000 and his necessary traveling expenses, not exceeding 10 cents a mile for actual travel while in the discharge of his duty, a statement of which expenses as to each inspector shall accompany the annual report of the Secretary of the Interior.

SEC. 2045. Each Indian superintendency and agency shall be visited and examined as often as twice a year by one or more of the inspectors. Such examination shall extend to a full investigation of all matters pertaining to the business of the superintendency or agency, including an examination of accounts, the manner of expending money, the number of Indians provided for, contracts of all kinds connected with the business, the condition of the Indians, their advancement in civilization, the extent of the reservations, and what use is made of the lands set apart for that purpose, and, generally, all matters pertaining to the Indian service. For the purpose of making such investigations, each inspector shall have power to examine all books, papers, and vouchers, to administer oaths, and to examine on oath all officers and persons employed in the superintendency or agency, and all such other persons as he may deem necessary or proper.

The inspectors, or any of them, shall have power to suspend any superintendent or agent or employé, and to designate some person in his place temporarily, subject to the approval of the President, making immediate report of such suspension and designation; and upon the conclusion of each examination a report shall be forwarded to the President without delay. The inspectors, in the discharge of their duties, jointly and individually, shall have power, by proper legal proceedings, which it shall be the duty of the district attorney of the United States for the appropriate district duly to effectuate, to enforce the laws, and to prevent the violation of law in the administration of affairs in the several agencies and superintendencies. So far as practicable, the examinations of the agencies and superintendencies shall be made alternately by different inspectors, so that the same agency or superintendency may not be examined twice in succession by the same inspector or inspectors.

Mr. McRAE. From the reading of that law the committee can form some idea of the services performed by these inspectors. They are the confidential agents of the Secretary of the Interior, who is charged with the administration of all matters relating to Indian affairs, and who must look after the $7,000,000 carried by this bill. I am informed that all the men who occupy these positions are men of high character and well qualified, and are needed. I do not indorse the policy of taking away a part of a man's salary on an appropriation bill when that salary is fixed by general law, as in this case. The law will give it to him. They can sue for it in the courts, and will do so no doubt. I believe that inasmuch as these men have been appointed, made their bonds, and are now on duty, that they ought to be continued, if continued at all, at the salary fixed by law.

The preceding section allows the President of the United States to nominate a less number than five, if he sees fit, so that if the point is attempted to be made that we have more inspectors than are necessary, let that argument be addressed to the executive department. The law does not compel five to be appointed, but it says a number not exceeding five; and these men, of the character and special fitness required, should be paid the full compensation which the law gives them. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. COOMBS. I will ask the gentleman if up to this time they have been receiving $3,000?

Mr. McRAE. Yes; up to this time they have been paid $3,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. I did not expect my friend from Arkansas [Mr. McRAE] to rival my friend from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] in trying to prevent a moderate degree of retrenchment in the expenditures of our Government. Gentlemen, consider the matter for a moment. See how we have taken advantage of the benevolent spirit of the people of the United States in behalf of the Indians to fasten upon their appropriations an army of employés in the Indian service. This is rather a bill to appropriate money for the benefit of the hangers-on of the Indian service than for the benefit of the Indians, and the tendency is to increase the number and to increase salaries all along the line; and the misfortune of our system, gentlemen, is that whatever is valuable and good and necessary, whatever ought to receive the fostering care of the Government, is seized upon for the purposes of plunder.

Now, the idea of these inspectors getting $3,000 a year! What class of men are they? Respectable men, who could make perhaps a thousand or fifteen hundred dollars a year at home. Why, a few years ago one of these officers, a man from my own district, spent the entire winter here in Washington with nothing to do, and yet here are a long series of duties read from the statutes as though they were performed.

Mr. COOMBS. Do I understand the gentleman to state that these inspectors do not perform these duties?

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, there are scarcely any duties to be performed. You can visit all of these agencies in three months and investigate their accounts at any one point in a few days. My friend must understand that we have got ten of these men, of this same class exactly, five for the Secretary of the Interior, who are called inspectors, and five for the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, who are called special agents. They are exactly the same kind of men. I have known many of them for years and years. Some have been from my section of the country, but they are the same class of men, those of the one class receiving $2,000 a year and the others $3,000 a year, but performing the same general duties. There are ten of these men, and yet any intelligent member of this House could visit all of these agencies and look after all of these matters in the course of a year without the least embarrassment or trouble. I speak from some slight experience—not much, I admit, but some experience.

This system was gotten up when the whole Western country had to be traversed with ambulances and on horseback, when there were no railroads.

Mr. HUNTER. The expenses of these men are all paid?

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, certainly. I think that twenty years ago, when this system was inaugurated, when the Indians were widely scattered and almost inaccessible, ten of these agents were well enough; and considering the hardships that men had to encounter in those days, the salaries were not excessive; but everything is changed. There are but five or ten of these agencies beyond the reach of railroads, and they are mostly along the international line, north of the Missouri and on westward.

These agencies are very accessible. I have visited nearly every one of them in a period of less than four months. And yet you have got ten men employed. At the last session of Congress I moved to reduce the number to three inspectors and three special agents. The committee did not think proper to adopt that view, and yet I think it could be done with absolute safety. When I saw a gentleman spending the entire winter here, and receiving his pay with nothing to do, I felt then that some reduction should be made.

This proposition now approximates a degree of fairness; that is to say, this bill provides for five inspectors at $2,500 each per year, with traveling expenses to the amount of $7,000.

That is a substantial addition to their salaries. Then we provide for five special agents, performing the same general duty, at a pay of $2,000 a year and traveling expenses. Here we have five men, traveling all over the country; and that is not all. In addition to that, you have in your employ four superintendents of schools traveling at your expense. There are fourteen. Then there is the superintendent of education traveling at your expense, at $1,500 a year, making fifteen persons traveling all over the country, when any one of you gentlemen could visit those places twice in one year.

Mr. BOWERS of California. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment I wish to offer to the amendment, or as a substitute for the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. McMILLIN). The Chair will state to the gentleman that the proposition pending is a substitute, and his amendment can only be offered as an amendment to the substitute.

Mr. BOWERS of California. Then I offer it as an amendment to the substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 17, page 7, amend by striking out the word "five" and inserting the word "three," and in line 18 of the same paragraph by; striking out the word "twelve" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "seven."

Mr. BOWERS of California. Mr. Chairman, these paragraphs, the six lines, lines 17, 18, and 19, and the next three lines, provide for an expenditure of $19,500 for five inspectors—$20,000 in round numbers. On the next page provision is made for the appointment of five more special agents and their expenses. Their expenses are not specifically named, except in a lump sum. They will undoubtedly be as large as the others.

We may therefore safely calculate that $39,000 are appropriated in just these two places, saying nothing about their contingent expenses, for general traveling expenses, and sleeping-car fare, and all that sort of thing, for the inspectors of this district. There are fifty-six agencies. You have appointed ten of them here. It does seem to me that this "honest Bureau" requires an immense amount of inspection. In any other branch of the service, in the Light-House Board for instance, one man does more than all these inspectors and special agents do. They could do all they have to do, and do it far better; and you could reduce their number.

I had some experience with these inspectors in my district. I remember now that two special agents, one an Indian agent and one an inspector, arrived in my city by train at 9 o'clock at night and went into a first-class hotel there. They sent word in the morning that they wanted to see me. They had learned that I had been elected to Congress and they wanted to interview me. There are three or four, or about half a dozen, reservations in my county. These gentlemen left the city and the county that afternoon by train at 2 o'clock. They had a good time, were on a fine junket, and they did not go within 40 miles of any Indian reservation, or anything of that kind, and did nothing in the world; and I just give this as a specimen of these inspections.

Mr. HOLMAN. Just let me state my experience. I went to visit one of the agencies, and I will not mention it, because otherwise the name of the gentleman might appear. The railroad was about 3 miles from the agency, and he took a carriage and went over there and had a splendid time for two or three days afterwards, and then the gentleman retired. That does not look like investigating matters seriously.

Mr. BOWERS of California. Now, Mr. Chairman, these are facts. You know, and we all know it, that the Indian Bureau has been asylum, a refuge to hide in; places to which the Democratic Administration has had the key and kept open doors, and they have placed in them these gentlemen that have been useful and for whom they had no other place. You know it, and know I am stating the truth about it. Take the sentimentality out of this careful system and bring it down to business principles and there is no other business which requires such an expense to inspect.

Mr. Chairman, it is absurd; it is a fraud; it is unnecessary, and every man here who knows anything about business knows that it is unnecessary and that three men could do all the work that is done by these men.

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a few words in reply on this subject. This is a question which was much discussed in committee, and I visited the Secretary of the Interior to find out whether these five inspectors were actually necessary or not. He thinks, and so stated, that they were absolutely necessary. And for the same reasons and the very reasons that the gentleman has just given, that the inspectors had simply failed to discharge their duties and report the facts to the Government. He had to have an investigation made of facts which the Department ought to know. In addition to that the gentleman does not seem to know the duties of these inspectors. We have added to the duty already imposed on these inspectors other duties which they have not hitherto been required to perform.

Mr. BOWERS of California. To inspect the agencies.

Mr. MADDOX. I am not talking about inspecting the agencies, but allotting and appraising the public lands.

Mr. BOWERS of California. That is all right. I am not talking about that.

Mr. MADDOX. That is an additional duty that this committee has imposed on these inspectors. Now, the gentleman talks as if there were no precedents for this. In the Internal Revenue Department there are special agents; in the Post-Office Department there are special agents, and in the Pension Office there are special agents, who are the very eyes and arms of the Departments.

Mr. BOWERS of California. I could give you some interesting history about those special agents.

Mr. MADDOX. I have no doubt of it; and all that the gentleman says in that line only shows the necessity of finding out the true condition of affairs.

Mr. Chairman, the Secretary of the Interior says it is absolutely necessary that he should have these agents; and he went so far as to say that if he be allowed to keep them until this Congress meets again he will be able to make a report to this body which will be of benefit to the country.

In reply to the statement of our distinguished chairman, the gentleman from Indiana, that one of these gentlemen had stayed here the whole winter drawing his salary and rendering no public service, the Secretary of the Interior has authorized me to say that no agent of his will spend his winter in this city or anywhere else drawing salary without rendering service; that the very moment there is any agent who has not some public duty to perform he will be dispensed with.

In view of the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior, that these five inspectors are absolutely needed; in view of the fact that he regards them as necessary to represent him in different parts of the country—they being, as it were his eyes and arms—in view of the importance of these officers in transacting the business of the Indian agencies on reservation—in the allotment of lands, etc.—I think that this amendment ought to be voted down, and this statute, which has been so long on the statute book, continued.

Mr. RAY. Mr. Chairman, at an appropriate time I think I shall move to strike out the enacting clause of this bill, because after listening to the arguments and explanations and statements of gentlemen here who are acquainted with the Indians and supposed to know their condition, I am almost though not quite satisfied that they need no more care or looking after than the average white man.

The gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. PICKLER] tells us in all seeming sincerity and with great earnestness that all Indians, especially the Sioux Indians, known to have been heretofore the most warlike and ungovernable, have become good men, noble Indians; that they are now an educated, intelligent, Christian, and law-abiding people. If this is true, we need appropriate no money for them; we need send no men to take care of them or look after them.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. The gentleman might add that wherever the Indians have received allotments of lands, they have become citizens of the United States, and voted.

Mr. RAY. So much the better. Why not give land to all of them? Now, the gentleman from California [Mr. BOWERS] tells us that the gentlemen appointed as inspectors to look after the Indians in California and on the Pacific coast pay no attention whatever to the Indians; yet we have had no outbreaks there. He tells us that these inspectors stop at a hotel 40 miles away from the Indians, and call upon him to entertain them, which he does so charmingly and effectively that they take the train and depart without visiting the Indians at all, and we infer the Indians are the better for it.

The gentleman from Indiana, the distinguished chairman of the committee having charge of this bill and which recommends the expenditure of thousands of dollars of the public money for the Indians, tells us that we do not need to employ interpreters to communicate between the Government and the Indians, for the reason that the Indians are so civilized, so honest, so well educated, so reliable that the service of interpreters is substantially unnecessary. Now, if all these statements are true (and they ought to be true, for they fall from the lips of representatives of the people who live among the Indians and are acquainted with their condition), we should at once abolish the Indian Department; we should abolish these various offices and stop this expenditure of money.

Are these gentlemen quite honest in making these statements? Are they telling the whole truth in regard to the Indians and their condition? Are they picturing the situation as it actually is? If so, they can not justify their action in recommending these appropriations and these expenditures of money. I had always supposed, and I have a lingering belief still, that the Indian tribes are uneducated, uncivilized, treacherous, naturally vicious, disposed to break away from the reservations, and commit depredations upon the white men.

Mr. BOWERS of California. That is not true.

Mr. RAY. Well, I am glad to hear it. I am glad to have my ideas of the Indian character and disposition entirely changed. I have read in history of Indian treachery, of Indian massacres, of tortures inflicted upon the whites by the Indians in various parts of this land. No longer do I believe it! The ideas gathered from my reading of history are all changed! I simply say, that taking the statements of these gentlemen as true, the time has come to abolish the Indian Bureau, and stop these appropriations of money as a piece of wasteful extravagance.

All Indians should be made citizens of the United States at once, and in two, four, or six years we may hope to see an improvement in Congress, because we shall have here a better representation than we have now—we will have Indian Congressmen. As pictured by the gentleman from South Dakota, the average Sioux Indian is better, far better, than the average Republican or the average Democrat. Nothing can equal these Sioux unless it be the Populist or the commonwealer. What a change in the Indian race! No more Indian wars shall vex this people! The noble red man is here.

I have read of the raids made by hordes of the Western savages; of ranches burned, murders committed, and of women carried into a captivity worse than death, and had supposed that the perpetrators of all these cruelties were inhuman, brutal, and unpitying. But after the speeches of the gentlemen from South Dakota [Mr. PICKLER], Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], and California [Mr. BOWERS], I am almost forced to the conclusion that all the tales of Indian ferocity are mere fables, possibly invented by speculators for the purpose of keeping immigrants from the fertile fields of the great West, or it may be to excite hatred against these red men and bring on a war of extermination.

I almost expect to see the magnificent Gen. Custer walk into this Chamber attended by his three hundred cavalrymen, denounce the story of his massacre among the Black Hills as a base slander upon the noble red men, and a malicious fabrication.

No more shall we hear men on this floor announcing that an educated Indian boy will relapse into barbarism if permitted to return to his tribe, for the tribes are civilized, educated, peaceable, religious, honest.

These are the legitimate conclusions that might be drawn from much of the declamation to which we have listened this afternoon. But, Mr. Chairman, I do not concur in those statements. I adhere to my preconceived opinions that the Indians, especially the Sioux and the Apaches, are uncivilized, barbarous, ignorant, cruel, and vindictive, and that they are restrained from outbreaks and deeds of violence by a wholesome fear of visits from Government troops and the swift vengeance of an offended Government. The Indian is not all bad, but it will take a century of active missionary work and the succession of many generations under Christian influences before we shall see a race of hard-working, intelligent, law-abiding, and self-supporting Indians.

I do not think that the children and descendants of the red-handed screeching devils, who for unknown centuries hunted human life by stealth, burned captives at the stake, and wore human scalps at their girdles, can be trusted or relied upon or made self-supporting for generations to come. Cooper has told us that old Chingachook, Indian John, the very last and noblest of the noblest tribe of the American Indians, fell away from the Christian faith when death began to seal his eyes, and that he chanted his death song, recited his deeds of massacre, and saw only visions of happy hunting grounds, tenanted by valiant warriors, as as he took his departure for the unknown country.

Cooper understood Indian character as no living man does; and when we read of the cruel and bloodthirsty Mingoes of 1756 and realize that they were better than the Sioux of 1876, we deceive ourselves in assuming that the tribes of 1894, as tribes, are anything but barbarous savages restrained by the wholesome fear of a powerful army. There are individual exceptions, and we may except some of the remnants of tribes that have been surrounded by elevating and civilizing influences for nearly a century.

I do not forget or belittle the wrongs of the red men; I think that much of their wrongdoing in recent years has been by way of retaliation. I am simply contending that the nature of the tribes on our frontiers is not greatly changed, and that, as a matter of fact, we should increase our efforts for the care, elevation, and protection of these Indians, while at the same time we should be sleeplessly vigilant lest an Indian war or outbreak scandalize our nation, strew the borders with murdered men, women, and children, and shock the civilized world.

I want more care taken of the Indians, not less; more money expended, not less; more Indian schools, teachers, interpreters, farms, schoolhouses, and more of all the work necessary to restrain, elevate, and ennoble, so far as possible and as rapidly as possible, these red men who are as they are, and are not at all blamable for their condition. But I do not think we shall be the gainers if we deceive ourselves as to the true character and condition of our Indian tribes. I do not think we shall gain a penny in the end by making small or inadequate appropriations for the care of these wards of the nation.

Mr. MCRAE. Mr. Chairman, I go as far as anyone in supporting the rights of the Indians. While I have decided convictions upon the policy that should be adopted as to them, I have not time now to discuss the question. I wish now only to say that the Indian policy of the Government for the last twenty or twenty-five years has not been discreditable to the Government. Under it the Indians have advanced and are advancing in civilization and are nearly ready for American citizenship and their lands in severalty. The five tribes are ready.

When the gentleman from Indiana tells you that this is an old statute passed forty years ago, when the Indian agencies were all off of the lines of transportation, he is mistaken. The first section of the statute read was passed in 1873, and the second in 1875, following the outrageous scandals and frauds connected with the Indian service prior to that time—scandals which ruined the character of so many white men around these agencies. I will not do more than to refer to them.

Since the passage of this law giving the executive department power to put into the service such men as we have now we have had no such scandals and frauds. Without this law the Department is without any adequate protection in many cases. Without these men, who represent the Indian and the Government as well—without the honest official who stands between the uneducated, helpless Indian and the shrewd, unscrupulous agent who happens to be in favor with his party—there is no protection either to the Department or the Indian. You owe it to the Secretary to give such help as is necessary to see that this money is honestly expended.

Mr. HOLMAN. The special act which the gentleman refers to was passed in 1873; but this original policy was inaugurated away back.

Mr. MCRAE. I do not know what you find running away back; but this, I tell the gentleman, was the beginning of the system of inspectors as now used.

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, no; not at all. I think you will find you are entirely mistaken.

Mr. McRAE. And when the gentleman says that there is no agency to inspect, I beg to ask why is this bill here, then?

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, I did not say that. You misunderstood me entirely.

Mr. McRAE. I stand corrected if I misunderstood you. Then, if these gentlemen have nothing whatever to do, as the gentleman has suggested, why are they appointed at all? I leave the Department to determine that. The law vests discretion in the President of the United States to appoint not to exceed five Indian inspectors. Now, he need not appoint any of them, or he may appoint a less number than five. The charge the gentleman from Indiana makes, when reduced to its final analysis, implies a reflection upon the President of the United States—the choice of his own party, an honest man—because he has selected these inspectors and thereby said that he thought they could render efficient service to the Government and to the Indians. I hope, Mr. Chairman, that as long as this statute stands, whatever may be the judgment of the committee as to the propriety of continuing it in the future, we will pay the inspectors what the law gives them, $3,000 a year, and not undertake to starve them out by cutting off their pay $500 at a time. The law fixes it, and they ought to have it.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is my friend opposed to the reduction of any salary?

Mr. McRAE. No; I am in favor of reducing salaries wherever it can be done fairly and justly.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is not this a good salary fixed by the bill?

Mr. McRAE. If you seek to change the law, why do you not do it in a legitimate way? You only seek to do it here for the ensuing year, and you discriminate against the best class of officers you have.

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, not all.

Mr. McRAE. I will go with you on a bill to reduce all salaries; but these inspectors are absolutely important in the Indian service and should not be singled out by you on an appropriation bill. This system of inspection has been adopted by the Government in regard to nearly all its important affairs. It is the method used for protection of depositors in the national banks.

The Post-Office Department uses inspectors in its business with postmasters, as does the Treasury. You have your internal-revenue inspectors, your customs inspectors, sugar inspectors, and timber inspectors. They are appointed to look into these matters in which the Government is interested, and prevent frauds in the public business. The fact that they can be used prevents fraud. It is not so much what is detected as what is prevented by them.

Now, will you deprive this great Bureau, for which the Secretary of the Interior is directly responsible, of the services of a sufficient number of inspectors to serve him and keep him informed as to the operations of the agents and army officers who have to expend the $7,000,000 you give the Indians?

Mr. HOLMAN. Will my friend allow another question? These salaries, admitting the fact that they were established in 1872——

Mr. McRAE. In 1873.

Mr. HOLMAN. Well, whenever the law was enacted, but when everything was on a high key——

Mr. McRAE. Yes, during the panic of 1873.

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, no; this was passed before that, the gentleman will find by examination.

Mr. McRAE. I gave you the date of the law.

Mr. HOLMAN. Well, at that time everything, I repeat, was on a high key. Now that everything is reduced, the cost of living is reduced, and when we pay all the travelling expenses to the last cent which these men incur, adding at least $700 to their respective salaries, I ask if $2,500 a year is not a fair salary, when the gentleman knows the condition of the people of this country to-day as well as I do?

Mr. McRAE. These men were appointed with the understanding that they were to have $3,000. We should not pass a bill reducing it for the current year. If you are going to change the law, change it in the proper way. You should not change it indirectly, and I hope the amendment will be adopted which only gives the sum allowed by law.

Mr. LYNCH. Mr. Chairman, a strong effort was made in the committee, first, to dispense entirely with these inspectors, and next, to appoint three only, instead of five. That required of the committee an investigation and inquiry at the Indian Office and Interior Department as to the necessity of still retaining five. In that way we became possessed of information that led us unanimously to recommend the retention of the five inspectors.

Mr. RAY. How many are there now?

Mr. LYNCH. Five.

Mr. HOLMAN. Five inspectors and five special agents, ten in all.

Mr. LYNCH. These inspectors are the private detectives of the Secretary of the Interior. They are exclusively under his control, and they work for him solely and report to him solely. He sends them out wherever he thinks an agency or an agent should be investigated. They drop in on an agent just like the post-office inspectors, without notice or warning, and demand his books, accounts, and cash. They go through them carefully to see whether he has been honest in his accounts, whether he has made payments he should have made, and how he has transacted his business. And in addition to that, the Secretary of the Interior within the last year has imposed upon them a new and important duty. He now uses them, instead of commissioners usually appointed for that purpose, to negotiate treaties in certain cases.

We have, I think, three treaties negotiated by them without any additional expense to the Government. In that way they have saved the expense of a commission costing about $35 a day, for one or two months, and they are now engaged in investigating and making a special report on each agency, which will appear in the next report of the Secretary of the Interior, and from which some very important recommendations will be made to the next Congress.

So the only question remaining is whether they shall be paid $3,000 or $2,500 a year. There are also five special agents who are under the charge of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and entirely under his direction, to perform such duties as he may require. They practically perform the same duties, these two classes of officials.

The special agents only get $2,000 a year and their expenses, and there seemed to the committee no special reason why five men, performing practically the same line of duty under the Secretary of the Interior, should receive a thousand dollars a year more than five other men equally competent, faithful, and honest, performing practically the same duties under the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

Mr. LUCAS. Is it not a fact that the five inspectors are supposed to be expert bookkeepers, that they may check up these accounts, whereas the five special agents of the Indian Department inspect the quality of goods, etc.?

Mr. LYNCH. Oh, no.

Mr. LUCAS. But they inspect the goods delivered at the agency, and the general management of affairs?

Mr. LYNCH. They are expected to be experts in bookkeeping also, and to examine the accounts.

Mr. LUCAS. Are you sure of that?

Mr. LYNCH. Yes; when one agent supplants another, one of these agents is sent to check up the accounts and turn over the office to his successor.

Mr. HERMANN. I wish to ask whether, in addition to the other qualifications which have been enumerated, they are not also required to investigate quarrels and matters affecting integrity in the Indian training schools and matters referring to the educational work of the Bureau?

Mr. LYNCH. They are supposed to investigate all disturbances.

Mr. HERMANN. And therefore it is necessary to have men of very high qualifications?

Mr. LYNCH. Necessarily so.

Mr. LUCAS. That is what I was getting at. No common man can do the work. A man must be well qualified.

Mr. LYNCH. Now, the only question is, should these inspectors, performing practically the same duty, receive a thousand dollars a year more than the five special agents?

Mr. McRAE. The per diem allowance of $3 a day is perhaps not allowed to the Indian inspectors. I think that they are allowed actual traveling expenses, while the special agents are allowed not exceeding the sum of $3 per day when on duty in the field, out of which they sometimes save something that the inspectors do not.

Mr. HOLMAN. The same rule applies to both.

Mr. McRAE. I think not, from the reading of your bill.

Mr. LYNCH. The rule of the Department is, that whenever they are not on duty their expenses cease.

Mr. McRAE. But if when on duty the inspectors only get their traveling expenses, and the special agents get an allowance of $3 per day, out of which at times they can save something, there would be less difference than the salary would indicate.

Mr. LYNCH. They are not allowed any expenses except when they are in the field.

Mr. McRAE. But when they are on duty they are allowed $3 a day.

Mr. HOLMAN. They are both allowed the same.

Mr. McRAE. I think not, but I am not certain about it.

Mr. HOLMAN. Practically the same.

Mr. McRAE. No; not practically the same, because one class get their actual traveling expenses and the others receive $3 a day, from the language of your bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. The $7,000 covers the whole.

Mr. LYNCH. The only question is: Should there be a difference of a thousand dollars a year between men performing practically the same duties? The bill allows a difference of $500 a year, and we thought that was enough. The salaries of several of the agents have been cut down. Three of them have been cut from $2,200 to $1,800 a year. Seven of them have been cut from $2,000 to $1,800 a year. They devote all their time to the service and they only get that salary, and support themselves, while these men get a fixed salary with all expenses.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I wish to say just a word before this vote is taken. The expenditure of money in the Indian Service is large, and it is expended in a great many different channels. You hold the Secretary of the Interior responsible. Of course, so far as it is possible he holds the Commissioner of Indian Affairs responsible. The contracts are let in New York and Chicago, and formerly much of fraud crept in in the delivery of the goods to comply with the contracts.

Mr. PICKLER. They would sell the same cattle three or four times, and drive them around the hill?

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. As settlements increase throughout the country, there is all the while friction between the settlers and the Indians. That is peculiarly so where there is a continual disposition to trench upon reservations. I am not complaining about this disposition. I do not believe in reservations. I hope the time will soon come when the Indians may have their allotments in severalty, and when there may be half a dozen white families to every Indian family, with the white civilization all about them; and I wish they were scattered a hundred times more than they are.

But we have got to take the condition as it is. With this service, scattered as it is in twenty odd different States and Territories, and involving as many things to look after, it seems to me, when you make the Secretary of the Interior responsible, that he should have at least five men who should be well paid, paid well enough to command first-class men.

Mr. HOLMAN. What difference is there that they should be paid better than the others?

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. The agents ought to be good men and do their work well; but these are under the Secretary of the Interior, and have, in my judgment, in former years been the best class of employés in the Indian service, of a high grade of intelligence, and of a high grade of honesty and of vigilance.

Now, in the Indian service and in the allotments that are being made, notwithstanding you gentlemen upon that side have the Administration, and some of your friends, Democrats not Republicans, hold these places, I am satisfied that there are good Democrats you can get. Maybe you have got them. Anyhow, I would give the Secretary of the Interior this appropriation, and hold him responsible for the just and proper Indian service. So that I am not in harmony with this proposition to decrease the salaries of these five Indian inspectors.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California to the substitute offered by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McRAE].

Mr. HUNTER. I ask that they both be read.

The substitute offered by Mr. McRAE and the amendment of Mr. BOWERS of California to the substitute were again read.

The CHAIRMAN. The vote will first be taken on the amendment to the substitute.

Mr. McRAE. This amendment is an amendment to the original text of the bill.

Mr. HUNTER. It seems to me we ought to have a division of that amendment to the substitute and have the propositions voted upon separately.

Mr. BOWERS of California. It does not change the salary. It simply changes the number from five to three, and then changes the amount in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from California, to strike out "five" and insert "three," and then to change the amount to make the bill conform to it, if adopted.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. BOWERS of California. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 4, noes 60.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the substitute offered by the genteman from Arkansas.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. McRAE. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 19, noes 29.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I ask to have a quorum. I hope the gentleman from Indiana, as it is Saturday evening and half-past 3, will assent to move that the Committee rise and let us have a full House on that.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask as a favor that we may go on for half an hour longer.

Mr. REED. It is late enough for Saturday evening.

Mr. HOLMAN. We will reach an important amendment pretty soon.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. This is an important amendment, and I think we had better have a full House.

Mr. DINGLEY. It is Saturday afternoon and near 4 o'clock.

Mr. REED. It is Saturday afternoon, and we have nearly succeeded in adjourning.

Mr. DINGLEY. It is now after half-past 3, and some of us were here late last night.

Mr. LYNCH. About half an hour will dispose of the miscellaneous items, and then there will be the treaty stipulations.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. You have several hours' fight before you reach that,

Mr. HOLMAN. Does the gentleman intend to insist on a quorum?

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I shall have to do so in this matter.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. O'NEILL of Massachusetts, chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 6913) had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

And accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 37 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday, June 11.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills and resolutions of the following titles were introduced, and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. DAVIS: A bill (H. R. 7403) to authorize the Secretary of War to convey to the city of Junction City, Kans., for park purposes, a tract of land near said city—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. MAGUIRE: A joint resolution (H. Res. 191) relating to Pacific railroad grant lands—to the Committee on the Pacific Railroads.

PRIVATE BILLS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills of the following titles were presented and referred as follows:

By Mr. CLARK of Missouri: A bill (H. R. 7404) for the relief of Hannibal Griffith—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. COCKRELL: A bill (H. R. 7405) for the relief of Juan S. Hart, administrator of Simeon Hart, deceased—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. MEREDITH: A bill (H. R. 7406) for the relief of Mrs. Elvira Moore, executrix of J. L. Moore—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. OATES: A bill (H. R. 7407) for the relief of S. E. Hallford, of Alabama—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, the following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. BLAND: Petition of citizens of Calloway County, Mo., for free leaf tobacco—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. COGSWELL: Petition of H. T. Balch and others, asking that certain beneficiary societies may be exempted from an income tax—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. DALZELL: Petition of sundry citizens of Wilmerding, Pa., against an income tax affecting beneficiary societies—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. DE FOREST: Petition of labor organizations, in aid of legislation to regulate convict labor—to the Committee on Labor.

By Mr. DINGLEY: Two petitions of citizens of Calais and Hodgton, Me., for legislation to abolish lotteries—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. DRAPER: Two petitions of many citizens of Marquette and other portions of the State of Michigan; 21 citizens of Newark, Ohio; 26 of Pittsburg, Pa., and 21 more citizens of Michigan City, Ind., for the passage of House bill 5804, an act to promote the safety of railroad employés—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, petition of L. H. Whipple and other citizens of Needham, Mass., praying that the income-tax provision of the Wilson bill may be amended so as to exempt beneficiary orders, etc., from taxation—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. LAYTON: Resolution of the Young Men's Christian Association and Young Woman's Christian Association of Normal University of Lebanon, Ohio, for the speedy passage of antilottery laws—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. McGANN: Petition of Chicago Stamping Company, relating to House bill 4897—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. PATTERSON: Papers to accompany H. Res. 190, for the printing of the digest of the laws and decisions relating to the appointment, salary, and compensation of officials of the United States courts—to the Committee on Printing.

By Mr. PHILLIPS: Two petitions of 109 citizens of Beaver Falls, Pa., protesting against an income tax being levied on fraternal and beneficiary orders composing the National Fraternal Congress, having a combined membership of over 2,000,000 holding benefit certificates—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, resolution of the Economic Literary Club, of Beaver Falls, Pa., urging the passage of the two Coxey bills—to the Committee on Labor.

By Mr. REYBURN: Petition of citizens of Pennsylvania, praying that the beneficiary societies be exempted from the income tax—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. STORER: Petition of Ed. Bratfish and 14 other citizens of Hamilton County, Ohio, against sectarian appropriations—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. WALKER: Petition of Good Citizenship Club, of Dudley, Mass., urging the passage of the Hoar antilottery bill—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. WEADOCK: Papers to accompany House bill 7400—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

SENATE.

MONDAY, June 11, 1894.

The Senate met at 10 o'clock a. m.

Prayer by Rev. T. BOWMAN STEPHENSON, LL. D., of London, England.

On motion of Mr. MORRILL, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last was dispensed with.

UNITED STATES NAVAL OBSERVATORY.

Mr. MORRILL. MR. Speaker, I wish to ask as a personal favor the privilege of making remarks about ten minutes long in relation to an amendment proposed by me to the naval appropriation bill on Saturday.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Senator from Vermont will proceed.

Mr. MORRILL. I will not ask for the reading of the amendment, but will insert it at the head of my remarks.

The amendment (submitted by Mr. MORRILL on the 9th instant) was to insert the following:

That from and after the passage of this act the Superintendent of the United States Naval Observatory shall be a person selected from civil life, learned in the science of astronomy, to be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and shall receive an annual salary of $5,000; he may also occupy the dwelling house near the observatory free of rent. The superintendent aforesaid is hereby authorized and directed, with the approval of the Secretary of the Navy, to reorganize said observatory establishment and to make such regulations as may be expedient in relation to the observatory and its subordinate officers, professors, and other employés: Provided, That after January 1, 1895, the total salaries and annual expenditures shall be adjusted to a basis of not exceeding $50,000 per annum.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, I make this proposition, after mature deliberation, not in any hostility to the Navy, nor to any of its officers, but as a steadfast friend, with the purpose of relieving naval officers of the chief responsibility in the direction of our astronomical observatory, which the experience for the greater part of fifty years shows would be a grave error longer to impose.

One purpose of the change contemplated is that of economy, in order to escape from the overwhelming criticism that the United States parades great expenditures without the parade of great results. Another high purpose is to obtain a skilled and practical astronomer as superintendent of an observatory which, not the Navy but the nation supports, and of which our country must bear the responsibility and the recoiling reputation. It is wholly a conservative measure—a relief to the Navy, and a relief to the observatory. A large portion of the working force of competent officers, professors, and computers now at the observatory must be retained, although the force will be reduced by the limit proposed to the total expenditures.

No nation, as I am assured on the best authority, has now or ever had an astronomical observatory directed by its naval officers. The observatory in France is placed in charge of the department of public instruction, science, and fine arts. The Greenwich Royal Observatory is under the admiralty, or navy, but the director is a prominent practical astronomer, as he should be here.

No one will dispute that we have had very eminent naval officers detailed for service as superintendents of our national observatory, and it was fortunate soon after its start to have had, even for a brief time, such officers as Maury and Gilliss, with qualifications and genius that won deserved national recognition.

Some occasional notable work has since been done by officers of rare scientific culture, such as Prof. Hall, who were also ornaments of the naval profession.

Yet many blank years have passed without so much as an annual report of astronomical observations to show even the existence of our Naval Observatory, and when reports of the usual work well done have appeared the work has rarely been better done than that of observatories of much inferior nominal rank in different parts of our country. We want an observatory which will promote the advancement of astronomical science by day and by night, by "labor and study intent," and prove itself by its work at least able to contest the primacy of any other observatory in America.

We have purchased a site and erected a new Observatory at a cost of about $640,000, or greater than the cost of any similar national institution in Europe, and have furnished it with a 26-inch equatorial telescope, as well as other proper instruments for scientific observation. Manifestly the design could not have been less than to give our Observatory a higher national character and the means of answering the public demand for resulting work of commensurate importance. The present annual cost for its support is extraordinarily large, or $68,600, being nearly twice as much as that of the Greenwich Royal Observatory. If any recent extraordinary work has been done, its report has not yet leaped to light.

The United States naval officers are educated and trained in their legitimate profession as profoundly as any in the world. The curriculum at our Naval Academy is broad and exacting, embracing English studies, modern languages, mathematics, chemistry, steam engineering, ordnance, gunnery, drawing, mechanics, applied mechanics, and much else. To master these branches in four years is a task full of labor. But the cadets at the Academy do not touch either astronomy or navigation until the second term of the third year, and all instruction in these branches ends with some further attention and one or two brief voyages at sea in the fourth and last year at the Academy. This is the whole measure of instruction in navigation and astronomical science with which all our naval officers have been or can be practically equipped.

The numerous studies prescribed at the Naval Academy require the utmost diligence of students in order to pass the rigid examinations to which they are subjected, and final success here secures to our country the best possible material for the officers of the American Navy, of whose conduct, in peace or in war, our people have always been justly proud. That is their chosen and sufficient field of ambition, and however worthy in all other respects, it would seem impossible for them to have won distinction as experts in astronomy where they have merely had a brief opportunity to learn only something of the rudiments, and so far only as related to or necessary in navigation.

No one can more fully realize the impropriety of placing a naval officer at the head of an astronomical observatory than naval officers themselves. If the question could be submitted to them I have much reason to believe that no more such appointments would be made.

I will here make a brief extract from the very able report, in 1892, of the Secretary of the Navy, as follows:

The revolution which the last thirty years have witnessed in the requirements of marine warfare on the one hand and in the methods and appliances of astronomical research on the other have quite severed that close connection between the naval and astronomical professions which led to placing the old observatory under the direction of a naval officer and regarding it as a naval station; and the professional attainments now exacted by our officers and necessary to their efficiency include so wide a range of subjects and extend to such minute details that they have no time to devote to matters so far outside of the line of their profession as those which pertain to the management of a great modern astronomical observatory.

The position is not regarded as a perquisite logically belonging to naval officers, few of whom hanker for it and less obtain it. The fair fame of the Navy can lose nothing but gain much by the co operation of leading astronomers in building up a national observatory that will remain under the loyal protection of the Navy Department.

Since March 4, 1885, twenty-five new modern naval vessels have been completed; fifteen more are to be completed in 1894, three more in 1895, and five in 1896. In all there will be forty-eight new vessels, for which the best and most competent officers either have been or must be assigned. After deducting vessels lost or no longer seaworthy, the large addition of new vessels will demand an unusually large increase of the number of officers in active sea service and the surplus for duty on shore will be diminished.

When naval officers are to be entrusted with the command of these modern "gems of the sea," surely neither the gallant captain now serving as the superintendent of the Observatory nor his friends will consent that he shall be neglected or held back in tame shore duties.

The direct and discreet control by the presiding officer of institutions of learning and even of legislative bodies is found to be absolutely necessary, but for such service it has never been found equally necessary to select a military officer. Military authority is healthful and indispensable on the deck of a vessel of war, but in the studious and patient direction of a national astronomical observatory it may seem sometimes obtrusive, rather than always useful. The working force of almost any institution will cheerfully obey the chief director if known to be their superior in practical kowledge, as well as authority, of the work in hand. The number of eminent practical astronomers in the United States is comparatively large. No one of them, however, is a candidate for the position, but with a more permanent tenure in sight, some one of those who has made and still makes astronomy the ambition of life might be had for superintendent of our Observatory.

Except perhaps for the Nautical Almanac, astronomical observations are hardly more useful to the Naval Department than to that of Agriculture.

An astronomical observatory is a light-house in the skies by which we behold the magnificence of possible worlds, infinite in number, greater than that where we were created. Eagerness of the human race to explore the secrets of the heavens above us has prevailed in every age and grows more intense by its modern achievements. I only seek to have the work in that direction of the United States, by its admirable establishment on Georgetown Heights, take rank with that of other leading nations.

I present some papers in relation to the amendment which I move be printed as a miscellaneous document, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. QUAY. Mr. President, I desire to make a personal explanation. It is understood pretty well that I am not in the habit of paying any attention to newspaper statements affecting myself, and I refer to this one, first, because legislation connected with the subject is to come up in the other House to-day, and if a contradiction is not made it may be affected by the article I send to the desk; and, secondly, because the name of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] is given as authority for the lying statement. I ask that the article may be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as indicated.

The Secretary read from the New York Sun of Sunday, June 10, 1894, as follows:

CORRUPTION IN CONGRESS—CHARGES AS SERIOUS AS THOSE INVOLVED IN THE SUGAR SCANDAL—EFFORTS OF THE PHILADELPHIA SYNDICATE, OF WHICH SENATOR QUAY IS SAID TO BE THE ACTIVE AGENT, TO GET CONTROL OF THE SURFACE ROADS IN THE DISTRICT AND TO PROCURE CHARTERS FOR THE CONSTRUCTION OF NEW LINES WITH THE TROLLEY AS THE MOTIVE POWER.

WASHINGTON, June 9.

Congress may soon be called upon to investigate charges of corruption against members of both Houses as serious as those involved in the sugar scandal. For several years past Congress has been besieged with applications for charters for the construction of new surface roads in this city and the extension of old lines, and there has been constant contention between the citizens, the District officials, and Congress as to the motive power to be used. The citizens of Washington generally are opposed to the use of the overhead trolley system, and it is in use by only one or two lines within the District, and only for a short distance. Moreover, under the law, even this short privilege will cease within a few months.

For the past few weeks the Washington News has persistently charged that the Philadelphia syndicate is making a systematic effort to get control of all the important surface roads in Washington, and that to carry out their plan a combination of wealthy men in the Senate and House has been formed by which the stock of the local companies is to be depressed so that it can be bought up at a low figure. The News charges further that Thomas Dolan, of Philadelphia, is the agent of the syndicate, and that the active man under him in trying to influence Congress is Senator QUAY. For sometime there has been a bill before the House granting a charter for a cross-town road, and in spite of the fact that nine-tenths of the property owners along the proposed route protest against using the street for a car line, the bill came near passing the House last Monday, which was District day. It was withdrawn in the face of the strong opposition, however, and will come up again on Monday next.

According to the News, which quotes Senator CHANDLER as one of the authorities for the statement, Dolan and QUAY have made a list of the men whose votes they can control, and have announced that the bill will certainly pass, with a proviso authorizing the use of the overhead trolley system. The vote on this bill, it is said, is to be used as a test of the strength of the Dolan-Quay combination, and if they win on that they feel sure of being able to pass the other bills and gridiron the city with trolley roads. According to the News there are fifty-eight bills pending asking for charters for new surface roads, in many of which the syndicate is interested, or of which they hope to get absolute control.

One of the most important car lines of Washington uses the cable system, and its main rival still employs broken-down horses. Several years ago Congress ordered this road to change its motive power within a given time, but it did not do it, although the date set has long since passed. This road, which is one of the greatest money-making concerns in the District of Columbia, also owes the Government a great many thousands of dollars for back taxes, and although negotiations have been in progress for two or three years for the settlement of the claim, not a cent has been paid. Congress, the District Commissioners, and the directors of the road are still in a wrangle as to the motive power that is to be used, and they are apparently as far from an agreement in this as they are with regard to the payment of the back taxes. The directors of the road say that the use of the cable is impossible on this line, owing to the great number of abrupt curves, and that the underground electric system, now in use with great success on one line within the city limits, is too expensive and too impracticable. The District Commissioners are divided in their opinion, and the citizens and taxpayers are opposed to the use of the overhead trolley. In the meantime horses pull the cars, the fight goes on, and Congress does not bring the road to terms. The vote in the House on Monday will probably show whether the Philadelphia syndicate or the citizens of Washington are in control of the city.

Mr. QUAY. I desire to state that the allegations in that article, as it is probably unnecessary for me to say, are absolutely false.

I will state the facts. Certain citizens of Philadelphia, how many I know not, and exactly whom I know not, of whom Mr. Thomas Dolan, who was recently president of the Manufacturers' Club in that city, is one, have corporate interests in some passenger railways in this city. I do not remember the name of their corporation. They are seeking an enlargement of some of their franchises, what I do not exactly know, for I have not seen the proposed legislation.

At their request I did for them what I will do for any other citizens of Pennsylvania or for citizens of any other State who come here for a fair and honest purpose. My interference in their behalf was simply to introduce Mr. Dolan to the Senator from Michigan [Mr. MCMILLAN], who is a member of the Committee on the District of Columbia, in order that Mr. Dolan might present the case to him.

I think I have not heard from the Senator from Michigan since on the subject. Also, at the request of Mr. Dolan, I spoke to the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER], who I understood was chairman of a subcommittee having this matter in charge, requesting that he should give Mr. Dolan a hearing. The Senator from West Virginia informed me that I was mistaken, that he was not chairman of the subcommittee, and I have not heard from him since on the subject.

On Friday last, at the request of Mr. Dolan, I asked a friend of mine of the other House to request some of the delegation from his State to be present to-day in order to constitute a quorum. He replied that there would be a quorum there to-day.

That is the extent of my knowledge of or connection with this enterprise. I think I am justified in this instance in departing from my usual course in relation to the thousands of newspaper attacks upon me, first, as I said before, because this article was evidently written to affect legislation to come up in the other House to-day; and, secondly, because the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] is alleged to be the author of it.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator from Pennsylvania did not call the subject to my attention before sending up the paper. I only heard what he said, and I have not the statements of the article distinctly in mind. I did, however, see the statement in the Evening News, which is quoted by the article the Senator has had read. I have heard of the syndicate and the proposed formation of a traction company for the purpose of obtaining control of the street railways of this city, and that is about all I can say on the subject, except that I may have talked with newspaper men about it and asked them questions, and they may have asked me questions.

I never heard until this morning Mr. Dolan's name in connection with any such project, and I certainly have made no remarks attributing any improper motives to any Senator, or any improper relations, or any relations whatever to any such proposed traction company organization—certainly nothing connecting the Senator from Pennsylvania with any such organization in any way whatever. I have no reason to doubt the exact truth of the statement made by the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. QUAY. I do not know but that the matter may as well be referred to the special committee of which the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] is chairman, so as to let him take charge of this subject along with the other matters referred to that committee. I make that motion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. QUAY presented petitions of Herman Diesenger and 230 other citizens of Philadelphia; of J. Harold Wickensham and 33 other citizens of Lancaster; of H. W. Taylor and 37 other citizens of Philadelphia; of W. J. Vance and 8 other citizens of Braddock; of John W. Schell and 10 other citizens of Philadelphia; of F. B. Schertz and 7 other citizens of Philadelphia; of W. M. Geesaman and 16 other citizens of Shippensburg; of Thomas Lamb and 37 other citizens of Boston; of B. F. Stedeford and 40 other citizens of Wilmerding; of C. B. Kebber and 7 other citizens of Coroy; of A. H. Koch and 8 other citizens of Sharpsburg; of C. B. Roberts and 10 other citizens of Philadelphia; of William H. White and 22 other citizens of Uniontown; of W. E. Baldwin and 19 other citizens of Unionville, and of C. R. Moore and 45 other citizens of St. Petersburg, all in the State of Pennsylvania, praying that the funds of mutual life insurance companies and associations be exempted from the proposed income-tax provision of the pending tariff bill; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. HARRIS presented a petition of sundry citizens of Huntingdon, Tenn., praying that fraternal beneficiary societies and associations be exempted from the proposed income-tax provision of the pending tariff bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. SHERMAN presented the petition of M. A. Meyer and sundry other citizens of Ohio, praying that the funds of mutual life insurance companies and associations be exempted from the income-tax provision of the pending tariff bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented petitions of Thomas C. Bope and sundry other citizens of Lancaster; of D. E. Brown and sundry other citizens of Niles, and of Job D. Williams and sundry other citizens of Ironton, all in the State of Ohio, praying that the pending tariff bill be amended so that fraternal beneficiary societies, orders, or associations, operating upon the lodge system and providing for the payment of life, sick, accident, and other benefits to the members, and dependents of such members, shall be exempt from all the provisions of the bill requiring taxation in any form; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CULLOM. I present quite a number of memorials from wholesale and retail liquor dealers of various cities in Illinois, remonstrating against an increase of the whisky tax, and also against an extension of the present bonded period. I call attention to these memorials because there are a large number of them and they all seem to be endorsed alike. I move that the memorials lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CULLOM presented a petition of sundry citizens of Morgan County, Ill., and a petition of sundry citizens of Elgin, Ill., praying that fraternal beneficiary societies, orders, and associations be exempted from the proposed income-tax provision of the pending tariff bill; which were ordered to lie on the table.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. McPHERSON, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred an amendment submitted by Mr. MORRILL on the 9th instant, intended to be proposed to the naval appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed; which was agreed to.

Mr. DUBOIS, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred an amendment submitted by himself on the 9th instant, intended to be proposed to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and be printed; which was agreed to.

TARIFF BULLETINS.

Mr. VOORHEES. I report from the Committee on Finance Tariff Bulletins Nos. 45, 46, and 47, inclusive, which I ask may be printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. WASHBURN introduced a bill (S. 2107) granting to the Northern Mississippi Railroad Company right of way through certain Indian reservations in Minnesota; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. TELLER (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2108) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a United States court in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes," approved March 1, 1889, and an act entitled "An act to provide a temporary government for the Territory of Oklahoma, to enlarge the jurisdiction of the United States court in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes," approved May 2, 1890; to provide for the redistricting of the Indian Territory for judicial purposes, for an additional judge and more United States commissioners, and to prescribe the jurisdiction, duties, and authority of such judges and commissioners, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BRICE introduced a bill (S. 2109) to correct the military record of George W. Pilcher; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. GORDON introduced a bill (S. 2110) to aid and encourage the holding of a Cotton States and International Exposition at Atlanta, Ga., in the year 1895, and making an appropriation therefor; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

AMENDMENT TO REVENUE BILL.

Mr. SHERMAN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 4864) to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

AMENDMENT TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. HIGGINS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. VILAS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (select), and ordered to be printed.

THE PADRONE SYSTEM.

Mr. CHANDLER. I submit a resolution to be printed and go over until to-morrow.

The resolution was read and ordered to lie over and to be printed, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to inform the Senate, so far as the records of the Department enable him to do so, to what extent the system now prevails under which immigrants from Italy or other countries fall into the hands of agents or bankers who entice or force them into contracts or customs under which their labor is farmed out to their employers, commonly called the padrone system; and also to inform the Senate whether any special measures are being taken or contemplated by the Treasury Department for breaking up every such system; whether the Department has sufficient funds at its disposal derived from the head moneys, or whether additional appropriations are needed for the suppression and extermination of such systems and for the due enforcement of the laws prohibiting the importation of contract laborers.

GRAND ARMY PLACE.

Mr. PALMER submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia:

Resolved by the Senate of the United States (the House of Representatives concurring), That that portion of the public reservations in the city of Washington, D. C., lying south of the grounds of the Executive Mansion, and bounded on the east by Fifteenth street, on the south by B street, and on the west by Seventeenth street, be designated and hereafter known as "Grand Army Place."

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolution; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 6500) to define and establish the units of electrical measure;

A bill (H. R. 7293) regulating the procedure in criminal causes in the district of Minnesota; and

A joint resolution (H. Res. 172) granting full permission to the State of Maryland and to the several State courts to occupy the old United States court-house in the city of Baltimore for the period of five years.

THE REVENUE BILL.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of half past 10 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4864) to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes; the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. ALDRICH, in paragraph 237, line 25, page 52, before the word "cents," to strike out "one dollar and eighty" and insert "two dollars and fifty;" so as to read:

Brandy and other spirits manufactured or distilled from grain or other materials, and not specially provided for in this act, $2.50 per proof gallon.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is the Senate ready for the question on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. ALLISON. I suggest that we have the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin (when his name was called). I announce once for all, for the day, that I am paired with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY]. The Senator from Wyoming wished me to state that he has been called out of the city by the death of a member of his family.

Mr. PALMER (when his name was called). The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH] is absent from the city, unwell. I announce my pair with him, and withhold my vote. I will not again announce the pair to-day. If he were present I should vote "nay" on this question.

Mr. PATTON (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. GIBSON]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. QUAY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Alabama (Mr. MORGAN]. If he were present I should "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MCPHERSON (after having voted in the negative). Has the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HIGGINS] voted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He has not voted.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Then I wish to withdraw my vote, as I am paired with that Senator. I shall not announce the pair again to-day.

Mr. CAFFERY. I inquire if the Senator from Montana [Mr. POWER] has voted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He has not voted.

Mr. CAFFERY. Then I announce my pair with that Senator, and withhold my vote.

Mr. GORDON. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. IRBY] and vote "nay."

Mr. FRYE. I am paired with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN], who is detained from the Chamber by illness.

Mr. LODGE. I am paired with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. HILL], and withhold my vote. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. HOAR. I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PUGH].

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I am paired with the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS], and the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. MITCHELL] is paired with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY]. We have agreed to transfer our pairs so that the senior Senator from Wisconsin will stand paired with the Senator from Wyoming. I vote "yea."

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin. Under that arrangement I vote "nay."

Mr. DANIEL (after having voted in the negative). I desire to explain that I have a standing pair with the Senator from Washington [Mr. SQUIRE], but I have transferred that pair to the Senator from Georgia [Mr. WALSH], who is absent, understanding that he has no pair. If he has, I should be glad to know it, so that no mistake be made. If the Senator from Georgia is not paired I will let my vote stand.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I inquire if the Senator from Michigan [Mr. MCMILLAN] has voted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He has not voted.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I am paired with that Senator, and withhold my vote.

Mr. GEORGE. In order to make a quorum, I vote "nay," although paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH].

Mr. HOAR. I suggest to the Senator from Mississippi that we transfer our pairs. I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PUGH], and I will transfer that pair to the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH], which will enable the Senator from Mississippi and me to vote.

Mr. GEORGE. That is all right. I vote "nay."

Mr. HOAR. I vote "yea."

Mr. PLATT (after having voted in the affirmative). Has the Senator from Virginia [Mr. HUNTON] voted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He has not voted.

Mr. PLATT. Then, I think perhaps I ought to withdraw my vote, as I am paired with that Senator.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I suggest to the Senator from Connecticut that, if agreeable to him, we transfer our pairs. I am paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HIGGINS].

Mr. PLATT. I shall be very glad to do so.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Then I transfer my pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HIGGINS] to the Senator from Virginia [Mr. HUNTON].

Mr. PLATT. So that the Senator from Virginia will stand paired with the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Yes.

Mr. PLATT. Then my vote may stand.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 18, nays 27; as follows:

YEAS—18.

Allison,	Hale,	Morrill,	Shoup,
Chandler,	Hoar,	Peffer,	Teller,
Cullom,	Kyle,	Perkins,	Washburn.
Davis,	Manderson,	Platt,
Dubois,	Mitchell, Oregon	Sherman,

NAYS—27.

Allen,	Daniel,	McLaurin,	Roach,
Berry,	George,	McPherson,	Smith,
Blackburn,	Gordon,	Martin,	Turpie,
Butler,	Harris,	Mills,	Vest,
Call,	Jarvis,	Mitchell, Wis.	Voorhees,
Cockrell,	Jones, Ark.	Murphy,	White.

NOT VOTING—40.

Aldrich,	Faulkner,	Hunton,	Proctor,
Bate,	Frye,	Irby,	Pugh,
Blanchard,	Gallinger,	Jones, Nev.	Quay,
Brice,	Gibson,	Lodge,	Ransom,
Caffery,	Gorman,	McMillan,	Squire,
Camden,	Gray,	Morgan,	Stewart,
Cameron,	Hansbrough,	Palmer,	Vilas.
Carey,	Hawley,	Patton,	Walsh,
Dixon,	Higgins,	Pettigrew,	Wilson,
Dolph,	Hill,	Power,	Wolcott.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. ALLISON. I observe in the printed bill an amendment at the end of paragraph 237. Has that been agreed to?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. It has not been offered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The reading of the bill will be resumed.

The Secretary read as follows:

238. Each and every gauge or wine gallon of measurement shall be counted as at least one proof gallon; and the standard for determining the proof of brandy and other spirits or liquors of any kind imported shall be the same as that which is defined in the laws relating to internal revenue; but any brandy or other spirituous liquors, imported in casks of less capacity than 14 gallons, shall be forfeited to the United States: Provided, That it shall be lawful for the Secretary of the Treasury, in his discretion, to authorize the ascertainment of the proof of wines, cordials, or other liquors, by distillation or otherwise, in cases where it is impracticable to ascertain such proof by the means prescribed by existing law or regulations.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I notice that in Schedule H, spirits, wines, and other beverages, the rates of duty prescribed by the existing law have been very largely reduced. On the first item, the one upon which the vote has already been taken, the duty has been reduced from $2.50 per proof gallon to $1.80 per proof gallon.

I also notice that in the latter part of the bill, in dealing with internal revenue it is proposed to increase the tax on domestic spirits very largely and to give certain advantages to the distillers of whisky. I should like to know from the Senator having charge of the bill whether it is true or not that the duties on imported brandies and spirits are largely decreased, while the tax on domestic spirits is largely increased?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Under the present law the tariff on brandy and liquors of that kind coming from abroad is $2.50 a proof gallon, and it is now proposed to reduce it to $1.80. The internal-revenue tax stands now under the present law at 90 cents a gallon, and the provision in this bill raises that tax to $1.10.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is the very point to which I wish to call the attention of the Senate. It seems to me that this is grossly wrong. Brandy is one of the strongest possible forms of spirituous liquor for common consumption which is imported from abroad. It does not come up to the standard of alcohol, but it approaches nearer to it than any other spirit.

It seems to me that here is a difficulty that ought to be at once corrected. There is no reason in the world why the duties on wines, spirits, and other beverages imported from abroad, which are entirely articles of luxury and consumed mainly by those who are perfectly able to pay the duties, should be reduced, and I can see no reason, as this is intended to be a bill to provide revenue for the support of the Government, why the rates of duty should be reduced on articles which would be imported anyway, whatever may be the rate of duty, and would be imported probably to the same extent whether the duty is high or low.

Therefore, it seems to me that the theory of this whole schedule is wrong. I can not comprehend why the duties on these imported articles—not taking into account the question of protection at all, because, so far as that is concerned, no spirits made in the United States would probably compete with brandy, except whisky, which is very cheap, and on which the tax is very high—should be reduced, while the tax is increased on the domestic article.

I hold in my hand a large number of remonstrances, petitions, and resolutions of different commercial bodies, not only in Ohio but in other parts of the country, and even including Kentucky, against the increased tax on whisky and against the additional discrimination that is proposed to be given to imported spirits. I present these papers and ask that they be laid upon the table. They come from large organizations of business men, and from large firms and dealers who are known to me personally, and they uniformly remonstrate against any increase of the tax on spirits.

It is true, we have not yet come to the internal-revenue portion of the bill; but certainly we ought not, in view of the proposed increase of the tax on domestic spirits, to reduce the duty on imported spirits, especially on articles like champagne wines, although I believe the duties on them have not been materially changed, but if at all, they have been reduced. On brandy, gin, and all articles of that kind there is no occasion, in my judgment, for a reduction of the duty.

No one has complained against the duties now placed on those articles; no petition has been presented here for such a reduction, and there would be no sympathy in the Senate or among the people of the United States in favor of a reduction of duties on these articles of luxury, which may be consumed, but which the people are better without than with.

I think, under the circumstances, the Senate ought to give a little deliberation to the question of this proposed reduction of the duty on brandy alone. I have not the statistics before me, but I think it will bring about a large reduction of the revenue and that the decrease of revenue will not be made up by the increase of importations.

I think, in considering this whole schedule, it would be better for the Senate to allow it to stand as it now is. There has been no complaint against the provisions of the existing law, so far as the rates of duties on these imported articles of spirits are concerned, and no petitions and no remonstrances have been received against the present rates of duty on them.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The opinion of the committee was that the present tax on liquors of this class was entirely too high to derive the largest amount of revenue from them. We believe that a larger amount of revenue would come to the Treasury from a smaller rate of taxation; we believe that the present rate of duty approaches, in a considerable degree, to the point of prohibition, and that there would be a larger commerce in these articles under a tax of $1.80 per gallon than under a tax of $2.50 a gallon.

We impose an internal-revenue tax of 90 cents a gallon under the law upon domestic spirits, and we impose a tariff tax of $2.50 a gallon on imported spirits. It seem to me that those rates are unreasonable. When we reach the internal-revenue features of this bill, whether or not we shall impose a large domestic tax on liquor is a question to be determined then. The petition presented by the Senator from Ohio, of course, is addressed to that subject; and when we reach that portion of the bill will be the time to consider the question. For the present, it seems to me the proposed reduction of the tax on these foreign liquors from $2.50 a gallon to $1.80 a gallon is not unreasonable, particularly as French brandy is, to a very considerable degree, a medicinal article, a prime necessity otherwise than as a luxury or as a beverage.

Mr. HALE. Before the Senator sits down, I wish to say that, of course, the reason he has given was expected to be the only one that could be given in reply to the statement of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], that this being a revenue duty a larger amount of revenue was expected from this duty than from a higher one.

Now, will not the Senator, as the organ of the committee conducting this bill upon business principles and in business fashion, tell the Senate upon what he bases his judgment that there will be a larger revenue from this reduced duty than from the old duty?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. As a rule, Mr. President, a reduction of tariff will increase the importations. I presume it is not necessary for me to undertake to enter into an argument to show why that should be so, and that that rule will apply in this case as well as in others.

Mr. HALE. There must be some point at which that rule should cease. The Senator does not hold that, if duties were reduced 50 per cent or 75 per cent, there would be a larger revenue? I take it, if he did, he would have moved to reduce the duty to a lower point.

What I was seeking was the reason why the Senator, who has given a great deal of study to this bill—and we know his intelligence upon it—struck this particular point as being the place that would give the most revenue, and not any other. Why did he not either allow the old revenue rate to remain, or, if reduced duties give larger revenues, why not cut the rate still further and not rest at this point?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. It is a matter of conjecture as to what the revenue point will be on an article until after a trial has been made. I am fully satisfied that a duty of 300 per cent is not a revenue duty; and so believing, I favor a reduction at least to this extent.

Mr. SHERMAN. Before the Senator sits down, I wish to state that I have the statistics before me, which I did not have a while ago, showing that this article of brandy and other spirits yields nearly $3,000,000 annually of revenue.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The Senator will allow me to say, in that connection, that more than a million and a half of that is levied upon an article that costs abroad only 65 cents; and the present duty is a tax of almost exactly 300 per cent on that class of goods.

Mr. SHERMAN. Very well; but we now tax our domestic whisky, which can be manufactured anywhere in the West for 20 cents a gallon, 500 per cent. The present tax on imported brandies, according to their valuation, is only 91 per cent, less than 100 per cent, and the Senator proposes to reduce it to 66 per cent on three items which now yield us nearly $3,000,000 of revenue. We certainly ought not to interfere with the revenue by such a reduction, especially when we know that these articles will be imported, and that the reduction of duty will increase the importation, but even if it would increase the importation we ought not to legislate in that way.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I do not see on what authority the Senator from Ohio can assert that there will be no increase of importation. The committee believe that there will be not only an increase of importation, but an increase of revenue from this decrease of taxation.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Arkansas suggests that one reason for reducing the duty upon brandy is that it is used largely as medicine. It is used to some extent for that purpose; but, as I take it, our grape brandy in this country for medicinal purposes is quite as good as the grape brandy of France. But the unit of value on brandy is now $2.73 a gallon, as shown by the official tables. So that the duty is only about 65 per cent upon this great article of luxury. There is no article which is more an article of luxury than French brandy, and yet it is reduced here in this bill to a point much less than the duty upon many necessary articles of consumption.

On the next item, "other spirits distilled from grain," the unit of value is not 65 cents, but 85 cents a gallon. That is chiefly Scotch and Irish whisky.

I call the attention of Senators to the fact that by increasing these importations, they displace other articles of revenue in our own country. Why it is that this schedule should be selected when in all past tariff laws it has been considered purely a revenue schedule and nothing else, and it had no other purpose or aim, and why we should single this article out and reduce the duty upon brandy, upon Scotch whisky, and Irish whisky, and upon still wines seems to me a marvel. There will not be one cent additional revenue produced by this reduction, in my judgment; in other words, the reduction of duty will only reduce the revenue.

People are not going to drink Scotch whisky because they can get it a few cents less a gallon upon importation. Those who drink Scotch whisky do so because they like it and prefer it; they are accustomed to it, and they will pay the duty on it; and yet it is reduced to $1.80 a gallon from $2.50 a gallon. People who are fond of gin will buy it and pay the duty. There is no smuggling under it, and there is no complaint of a single sort as to the existing liquor schedule. It is a duty which is easily collected. Now, with all these cries for revenue, here is an article yielding $3,000,000 to the Treasury, which we are told we must cut down to a revenue point, as the gentleman from Arkansas says, in order that we may get a little more revenue.

Mr. President, the effect of this proposition will be simply to induce the importation of these foreign luxuries and reduce the revenue. That is all there is about it.

Mr. PLATT. The vote upon the paragraph which we have just passed was taken so quickly and quietly, and while my attention was diverted for the moment, that I did not say anything when it was under consideration. Of course, a motion to reconsider would put me in order, but I had supposed that the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] would oppose this reduction before the vote was taken. I agree to all that has been said, but there were one or two other considerations which I should like to advert to.

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] has well said that there would be no more imported under a reduction of duty, for the reason that people who drink brandy and Scotch whisky and gin drink it because they have acquired a taste for it. Brandy is used for medicine, and by a few gentlemen of wealth, whom we call brandy drinkers. They will drink no other kind of liquor. The same is largely true of Scotch whisky. Nobody supposes that a prescription will be a cent cheaper by reason of the reduction of the duty on brandy. There will be no benefit to those who are obliged to use the medicine. It is quite improbable that there will be any diminution in the price to those who have acquired the habit of brandy drinking.

The Senator from Arkansas says we make no brandy in this country. I think the Senator is mistaken in that respect. I remember when I was in San Francisco I was taken to the grape farm of the late Senator Stanford, and I know that the process of making brandy was going on there at that time. I am informed that large quantities of brandy are made in California. I know that during recent sickness in my family my physician advised that for medicine I should obtain California brandy because it is pure, and we have no pure French brandy, certainly none the purity of which can be guaranteed.

There is another consideration which has not been adverted to. We have made a discrimination against Germany on sugar. I should like to speak at some length upon this matter, but being limited to five minutes I am precluded from doing so. If the newspapers are correct, and I think they are, an informal protest has been entered by the German minister on account of the discrimination which is proposed against Germany by reason of the special discriminating duty on sugar. Now, I will not say Germany and France are at swords points, but there is friction between them, as we all know. If we discriminate against Germany in the matter of sugar and discriminate in favor of France in the matter of brandy, will not Germany have the greater reason to complain to our Government, and will it not be an inducement for Germany to restore the prohibition on pork? I have little doubt that that will be done if we insist upon discriminating against Germany in the matter of sugar and discriminating in favor of her rival, France, in the matter of brandy.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The reading of the bill will be proceeded with.

The Secretary read the next paragraph, as follows:

239. On all compounds or preparations of which distilled spirits are a component part of chief value, not specially provided for in this act, there shall be levied a duty not less than that imposed upon distilled spirits.

The Committee on Finance reported to strike out paragraph 239 and insert:

239. Upon all compounds or preparations containing alcohol there shall be levied a duty at the rate of $1.80 per proof gallon upon the distilled spirits contained therein in addition to the duty provided by law upon the other ingredients contained in such compounds or preparations.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I withdraw the committee amendment. I move to strike out paragraph 239 and insert:

239. On all compounds or preparations (except as specified in the preceding paragraph of the chemical schedule relating to medicinal preparations, of which alcohol is a component part), of which distilled spirits are a component part of chief value, not specially provided for in this act, there shall be levied a duty not less than that imposed upon distilled spirits.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next paragraph, as follows:

240. Cordials, liquors, arrack, absinthe, kirschwasser, ratafia, and other spirituous beverages or bitters of all kinds containing spirits, and not specially provided for in this act, $1.80 per proof gallon.

The Committee on Finance reported an amendment to paragraph 240, after the word "gallon" in line 19, to insert:

But when imported in bottles or jugs no separate or additional duty shall be assessed on the bottles or jugs.

So as to read:

240. Cordials, liquors, arrack, absinthe, kirschwasser, ratafia, and other spirituous beverages or bitters of all kinds containing spirits, and not specially provided for in this act, $1.80 per proof gallon; but when imported in bottles or jugs no separate or additional duty shall be assessed on the bottles or jugs.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. ALDRICH. In paragraph 240, line 18, I move to strike out "$1.80" and insert "$2.50;" so as to read:

Two dollars and fifty cents per proof gallon.

Mr. President, the reasons which were stated by the Senator from Iowa against the reduction of the duties upon brandy apply with greater force to the paragraph now under consideration. I can not understand why absinthe and the other cordials and liqueurs should be placed at a lower rate of duty than they are in the existing law. Certainly there can be no reason for increasing the importation into this country, and if they are imported they certainly ought to pay a very high rate of duty. The rate ought to be higher even than the existing law. Therefore I have moved to restore the rates of the act of 1890.

Mr. VEST. The decrease in the duty on these cordials, absinthe, ratafia, and other articles is inconsiderable. In the McKinley act the rate is 97.63 per cent, and we make it 70.27, a reduction of something over 20 per cent. We would judge from the arguments made by the Senator from Iowa and the Senator from Ohio that there was an inconsiderable duty upon these brandies which we have passed. But I simply want to call attention to the fact that brandies made out of grain have a duty in the pending bill of 211.14 per cent.

Mr. ALLISON. That rate does not apply to brandy; it applies to other spirits—Scotch whisky.

Mr. VEST. And brandy made from other materials 264.06. I am talking about the items we have passed.

Mr. ALLISON. The rate the Senator has quoted is applicable to Scotch and other whiskies.

Mr. VEST. It is spirits; other spirits not specially provided for, manufactured from grain, etc.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator from Missouri allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. Does the Senator from Missouri think it good policy to encourage larger importations of absinthe and other articles enumerated in this paragraph?

Mr. VEST. No, Mr. President, I would not encourage the importation of any of them, and I would not encourage the manufacture of any of them in this country, to be entirely frank. But I would put such a duty upon them——

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Arkansas says the object of the duty is to increase importations.

Mr. VEST. I understood the Senator from Arkansas to say what he and I entirely agree about, that it is simply a revenue question. We reduced these duties because we think they are too high under the McKinley act. We are taxing those articles under the internal-revenue system, and as long as we treat them as manufactured articles we ought to treat them as we do other articles in the bill. We put upon whisky, for instance, and other alcoholic stimulants an internal-revenue tax of $1.10 in the bill and $1.80 is the import duty, making the differential 70 cents. Under the English system they impose in their tariff law an equivalent to the internal-revenue duty. We go beyond that and put in 70 cents more. Under the McKinley act the duties are considerably higher, and they are too high.

In other words, our friends in making the McKinley law did not increase the duties upon these articles simply because they are luxuries, but they seem to have injected into the act the idea of excluding them from the country because they are injurious luxuries. It seems to me that the duty now proposed upon cordials, a reduction of only 20 per cent, is a very fair one. There may be people in the United States, and we have no right to suppose anything else, who think that these cordials are necessary to their health and comfort. There is no question of competition between anything we produce here and these compounds; they do not come in competition directly with anything we make in this country, and the duty proposed is, it seems to me, a very fair one.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, although this item looks very innocent and harmless, it covers merely articles of luxury. Whatever may be said of pure brandy used for medicine can hardly be said of cordials, liqueurs, arrack, absinthe, kirschwasser, ratafia, and other spirituous beverages, which are used merely to encourage an appetite for drink. They are seasoning materials for brandy or whisky or anything of that kind. Their importation yields now a revenue of $491,596. The decrease of the rate of duty will not in the slightest degree affect the importation. The large amount of 196,000 proof gallons is introduced here, and will be introduced whatever rate of duty is put upon it. The present revenue derived from the imports is $3,213,000, and as a rule the committee have reduced it about one-third; so that it sacrifices about $1,000,000, which is paid by a class of people for a luxury that is not enjoyed generally.

Now, here is the discrimination. The tax of 90 cents a proof gallon upon spirits made in this country is 450 per cent, and you propose to tax these liqueurs at a rate of from 60 to 85 per cent, the present rate being, according to the McKinley act, from 80 to 115 per cent. It seems to me this is a great mistake, but I consider that my duty is done when I call attention to it. There is no public demand for it and no petitions asking that it be done. If there is any ring or trust behind it I do not know.

Certainly there can be no motive for reducing the revenue on these articles.

I hope Senators will review the matter. With the large proposed increase in the internal tax on spirits, which is opposed by our own people very stoutly and strongly, as I have shown by the mass of petitions which I have presented this morning, to reduce largely the duty on foreign brandies and whiskies and gins, it seems to me, is a departure from a just principle. It is throwing a burden upon our own productions and relieving the foreign product. It is legislation in the interest of foreigners and not in the interest of our own people. It is not in the interest of anybody here who complains of the prices he now has to pay for these expensive liquors.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the Senator from Missouri has stated, as I think everyone must agree, that this is a revenue question. No one desires to encourage the production of absinthe, liquors, arrack, and the other articles enumerated in the schedule, in this country. The question of free trade or protection does not enter into this clause at all. It is purely a revenue question.

Now, these are articles of luxury. If there are any articles in the world that ought to bear a high tax, certainly it is the articles enumerated in this schedule. Their production is undesirable; their importation is undesirable, and it seems to me that all we ought to look at is how high a duty we can impose on those articles without going beyond what is called the smuggling limit; that is, without making it profitable to smuggle these things in large quantities.

As the Senator from Iowa said, these articles are going to be introduced and sold in substantially the same quantities that they are now sold, without any reference to the duty, until you reach the point at which it becomes profitable to take the risk of smuggling. No one pretends that that point was passed in the McKinley act.

The only argument I can see here made in regard to this provision is that it is more or less modeled after the English system. Surely we ought to be able in this country to raise our own revenue, in what we think the best way, on productions of this character on some better reason than the English tariff. It seems to me that we ought to get from these articles the largest possible revenue. I can not understand the principle on which a duty is placed upon sugar and then every duty is reduced on these spirituous liquors, cordials, etc., articles which ought to be made to bear the very heaviest tax which can be placed upon them.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, the more this matter is discussed the more its importance is seen. If there is anything upon which persons with differing views upon protection and free trade have been agreed, it is that luxuries ought to have a high duty placed upon them. Another principle has come in, which is that deleterious luxuries may have such a duty placed upon them as to be practically prohibitive.

Now, one of the articles included in this paragraph, absinthe, is about as deleterious as opium. One of any extensive reading can not but know that in France the habit of using this cordial is almost as deleterious to human life as the morphia habit. I think it does not prevail to such an extent in America, but a person who gets in the habit of using it will go on with its use until death comes.

Now, why, when we want revenue, when we hear every day about the need of revenue and the deficiency in the Treasury, the revenue upon articles of this sort should be reduced passes comprehension. I thought for a moment that when the Senator from Missouri stated that duties were too high in the McKinley act the reason might be that the other side do not want to fix exactly the same duties that were fixed in the McKinley act, but I turn to the next paragraph and I see there is at least one duty which the committee does not consider infamous, for they have let the rate of duty upon champagne stand without any reduction. So that can not be the reason.

I submit under the circumstances there can be no reason adduced why the duty upon the articles which we have been considering should be reduced. It is a reduction of the revenue at a time when the universal cry is that we have not revenue enough

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, it is another wonderful feature of this most wonderful bill, that while upon many articles of everyday consumption by all the people the duties have been raised, when you strike articles which are pure luxuries, and also, as the Senator from Connecticut suggests, injurious luxuries, and that are used by but few people, the duties are reduced. Here are brandies, Scotch whiskies, Holland gin, which are luxuries used by comparatively few, and in this class of cordials, liqueurs, arrack, absinthe, kirschwasser, ratafia, articles of luxury of a still narrower range than brandies and the other liquors, the same reduction is made.

The Senators in charge of the bill do not quite agree. The Senator from Arkansas says frankly that he thinks more duty will be raised by this lower rate; and while it is a matter of conjecture, he believes that they have reached just the proper rate where the most money can be put into the Treasury. But the Senator from Missouri balks at that conclusion——

Mr. VEST. The Senator is mistaken.

Mr. HALE. I understood the Senator to say——

Mr. VEST. I said this is a pure revenue duty.

Mr. HALE. So the Senator did say; but when he was reminded by the Senator from Iowa what the Senator from Arkansas had said, that this would raise more revenue and result in larger importations, the Senator said that he is not in favor of larger importations and that was not the reason why the duty had been reduced.

Mr. VEST. I said I would not put it lower to increase importations.

Mr. HALE. So I say the Senators differ. The Senator from Arkansas says plainly, squarely, and frankly that the rate has been reduced because he believes it will result in larger importations and larger revenue. The Senator from Missouri does not agree to that.

Mr. President, the whole sum and substance of this provision is that it will benefit only one very narrow class. The importations of these strong liquors, what are called good brandies, Scotch whiskies, Holland gin, and these cordials, is in the hands of a few importers, almost all foreigners. They are the only men who will get the benefit of it. The consumer will not get a dollar of benefit in a year; he will not get a cent of benefit at any time whatever. The consumers of these liquors are small in number. The consumers of these heavy liquors and cordials are a very small portion of the American people, but they are very much larger than the importers who bring them here. The consumers will not get any benefit from it, while the very few men, the foreigners who import these articles, will get so much more benefit from it. They will not charge a dollar less in their prices, and their profits will be increased.

If this duty is fixed, anyone who gets the figures, the facts, will learn that that is the result. Under the present duty there is no smuggling to amount to anything. There is no complaint from the Treasury Department that the present duty ought to be lowered in order to prevent smuggling. There is no pretense of that anywhere. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] stated it right. It is not because the present duty reaches the smuggling limit. I do not understand that it has been stated here that the Treasury Department, looking carefully after the ingress of these liquors into this country and the payment of the duties, see where there are infractions of the law. I do not understand that the Treasury Department has declared that here is a grievance in the Department, and that the duty ought to be lowered. Where does the demand come from? Not from the people; not from the Treasury Department; not from the consumers of these cordials, many of which are noxious; only from the importers.

Mr. HOAR. I was in hopes that before the Senator from Maine ended he would have asked the Senator from Arkansas if he could state to the Senate from what source, if any request came to the committee, or on what authority this reduction was made. Is the Senator able to state?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The bill came in this form from the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives. It was considered and passed by the other House in this form. It had the indorsement of a large number of gentlemen there, and I have no doubt the provision was indorsed by many other people besides.

Mr. HOAR. The mere fact that a particular rate of duty had the indorsement of the Ways and Means Committee or of the other House, does not seem to have governed our committee in other things. Do I understand the Senator he did not get any evidence which was before the Ways and Means Committee of the House, and that there was nothing before his committee urging this reduction of duty? I suppose from the answer of the Senator we are to understand that nobody applied to the Finance Committee of the Senate to reduce this duty?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I do not think anyone did.

Mr. HOAR. Why, when they depart from the House committee and put up duties because they say they need the revenue, the committee should put this rate down and keep it down, I do not understand.

Mr. HALE. They put it down from the old law.

Mr. HOAR. They put it down from the old law. I understand this is a foreign product, in the first place, purely. It is a luxury, in the second place, and the business of importing these liqueurs and the high-priced brandies is conducted by a class of persons mainly in the State of New York. I think the principal house in Boston which imported such things has nearly discontinued its direct importations. I am not sure about that; but I suppose it is done by a few houses in New York, who are themselves foreigners chiefly, and the business is largely established by foreign capital, with foreign partners, under foreign management, so that the commerce part of it is foreign as well as the production.

The consumers perhaps are not foreigners, but they are pretty much all that class of Americans who spend a large part of their lives abroad, and when they are at home spend their time mainly in wishing that they were foreigners. I do not think there will be any increased revenue by this reduction, and if any revenue comes by the reduction anywhere, I do not think it will ever reach the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. PEFFER. Mr. President, the Republicans have made two points on this schedule. One is discrimination against the home manufacturer. I suggest to them that that discrimination has been measurably set off by the proposition in the bill to extend the bonded period five years for the benefit of the manufacturers. The other point is that we shall lose revenue. I suggest to those Senators that while we shall lose revenue upon the liquor schedule, it is made up about tenfold or more on the sugar schedule, so that we are not going to lose any revenue in the end.

For myself, I regard it as a very great mistake upon the part of the committee to attempt to reduce duties upon spirits and upon the different varieties of liquors imported into this country for any purpose, no matter what the purpose may be. I believe it would be a good deal better, if instead of having any schedule of duties upon imported liquors there should be a prohibitory paragraph, a provision that there should be no liquors of any kind imported into the country except for medical purposes, or scientific purposes, or some useful function in the arts or sciences.

But to remove duties from an article whose use is wholly voluntary, whose use is confined almost exclusively to the rich and to that class of rich people who neither do us nor anybody else any good, a class of people who spend a large part of their time in club houses, in yacht racing, in horse racing, and things of that kind; gentlemen and ladies who are able to pay very high prices for an article and who prefer such articles because they are high priced and because they are foreign. That class of people almost exclusively use the articles upon which these duties are proposed to be levied, and I submit to the Senate that it would be much wiser to prohibit their importation entirely rather than to reduce duties upon them, especially when we have to place a duty on sugar, a necessary of life, in order to make up a deficiency.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH].

Mr. HOAR. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CULLOM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. DANIEL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Washington [Mr. SQUIRE], and I refrain from voting.

Mr. PEFFER (when Mr. KYLE'S name was called). The Senator from South Dakota has been called away from the Chamber on official business. He requested me to state when his name was called that if he were present he would vote for this amendment.

Mr. GORDON (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] to the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. IRBY] and vote "nay."

Mr. MCPHERSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HIGGINS].

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS].

Mr. PATTON (when his name was called). I wish to announce my pair with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GIBSON]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. PLATT (when his name was called). Has the Senator from Virginia [Mr. HUNTON] voted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He has not voted.

Mr. PLATT. Then I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MILLS. I wish to ask if the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] has voted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He has not voted.

Mr. MILLS. I am paired with that Senator. I should vote "nay" if he were present.

Mr. CAMDEN. I have a general pair with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW], but with the understanding that I can vote whenever it is necessary to make a quorum. The Senator from South Dakota is not in the city to-day, and I shall not vote at this time.

Mr. FRYE. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] to the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES], and vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 22, nays 26, as follows:

YEAS—22.

Aldrich,	Dixon,	McMillan,	Quay,
Allen,	Dolph,	Manderson,	Sherman,
Allison,	Dubois,	Morrill,	Shoup,
Cameron,	Frye,	Peffer,	Teller.

Faulkner,	Hunton,	Patton,	Wolcott.
Gallinger,	Irby,	Pettigrew,
George,	Jones, Nev	Platt,
Gibson,	Kyle,	Proctor,

So the amendment was rejected.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The reading of the bill will be proceeded with.

The Secretary read the next paragraph, as follows:

241. No lower rate or amount of duty shall be levied, collected, and paid on brandy, spirits, and other spirituous beverages than that fixed by law for the description of first proof; but it shall be increased in proportion for any greater strength than the strength of first proof, and all imitations of brandy or spirits or wines imported by any names whatever shall be subject to the highest rate of duty provided for the genuine articles respectively intended to be represented, and in no case less than $1 per gallon.

Mr. ALDRICH. I move to insert the words "and fifty cents" after "one dollar," so as to read:

And in no case less that $1.50 per gallon.

The other House reduced the rates upon all genuine liquors, spirits, and wines, and here it is proposed to reduce the duties on importations of spirits and wines, I do not know for whose benefit.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 7, page 55, paragraph 241, after the word "dollar" insert the words "and fifty cents," so as to read:

one dollar and fifty cents per gallon.

Mr. ALDRICH. I hope there will be no objection to this amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Rhode Island.

The amendment was rejected.

The Secretary read the next paragraph, as follows:

Bay rum or bay water, whether distilled or compounded, of first proof, and in proportion for any greater strength than first proof, $1 per gallon.

Mr. ALLISON. The articles mentioned in this paragraph are not used as medicine; and therefore I move to insert the words "and fifty cents" after the words "one dollar."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 10, page 55, paragraph 242, after the word "dollar," insert "and fifty cents;" so as to read:

One dollar and fifty cents per gallon.

The amendment was rejected.

The Secretary read the next paragraph, as follows:

Wines:

243. Champagne and all other sparkling wines, in bottles containing each not more than 1 quart and more than 1 pint, $8 per dozen; containing not more than 1 pint each and more than one-half pint, $4 per dozen; containing one-half pint or less, $2 per dozen; in bottles or other vessels containing more than 1 quart each, in addition to $8 per dozen bottles, or the quantity in excess of 1 quart, at the rate of $2.50 per gallon.

The Committee on Finance reported an amendment to the paragraph by adding thereto:

But no separate or additional duty shall be assessed on the bottles.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. That amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like to ask some member of the Committee on Finance whether the duty on champagne wines is reduced from the present law proportionately as the reduction is made on brandies and cordials, arracks, absinthe, etc.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. It is not reduced at all.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like to ask the Senators in charge of the bill why a reduction is made on one class of spirituous drink and not upon another.

Mr. VEST. Simply because we thought this a fair duty, considering the quantity brought in and consumed in this country.

Mr. CHANDLER. I must confess that I am at a loss to understand the principle upon which the Senators on the other side of the Chamber have constructed this schedule. It seems that while we are to change free sugar to dutiable sugar and tax every poor man's household in the land, we are to encourage a larger importation of French brandies and "cordials, liquors, arrack, absinthe, kirschwasser, ratafia, and other spirituous beverages or bitters of all kinds containing spirits;" and we are to enlarge if possible the consumption of those articles in this country. They are luxuries and they contribute to vices; and they are to be encouraged at a time when we need more revenue.

Senators perhaps think there will be more revenue by encouraging a larger importation, but that larger importation will be an importation that will come in competition with our own whiskies and spirituous liquors, which I think it must be admitted are purer liquors and spirits than imported French brandies are likely to be. But that is the policy. This is to be done to get more revenue by encouraging vice; and when we come to champagne, which certainly is not more harmful than brandy and absinthe, we are told that the duty is to remain upon champagne. I did not distinctly understand the reason given by the Senator from Missouri for the discrimination, but we are to deal with one kind of intoxicant differently from the way we deal with other kinds of intoxicants. We are to encourage by a reduction of duty the importation of foreign ardent spirits in competition with Kentucky and Illinois whisky. We are not to encourage the importation of champagne wines, which are comparatively pure.

Mr. President, I dislike to coerce the Senator from Missouri into listening to speeches from me. He may stop up his ears if he likes, or go out of the Chamber; but I am obliged to take the opportunity to say that I think this schedule as it is being made is utterly inconsistent; and following the term which the Senator from Missouri commonly applies to the system of protection, it is an infamous schedule when you compare it with the duty that is to be imposed by the bill upon the sugar that is to be used in the coming years in this country.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The reading of the bill will be proceeded with.

The Secretary read the next paragraph, as follows:

244. Still wines, including ginger wine or ginger cordial and vermuth, in casks or packages other than bottles or jugs, 50 cents per gallon: Provided, That no such still wines in casks shall pay a higher rate of duty than 100 per cent ad valorem. In bottles or jugs, per case of 1 dozen bottles or jugs, containing each not more than 1 quart and more than 1 pint, or 24 bottles or jugs containing each not more than 1 pint, $1.60 per case; and any excess beyond these quantities found in such bottles or jugs shall be subject to a duty of 5 cents per pint or a fractional part thereof, but no separate or additional duty shall be assessed on the bottles or jugs: Provided, That any wines, ginger cordial, or vermuth imported containing more than 25 per cent of alcohol shall be classed as spirits and pay duty accordingly: And provided further, That there shall be no constructive or other allowance for breakage, leakage, or damage on wines, liquors, cordials, or distilled spirits. Wines, cordials, brandy, and other spirituous liquors imported in bottles or jugs shall be packed in packages containing not less than 1 dozen bottles or jugs in each package, or duty shall be paid as if such package contained at least 1 dozen bottles or jugs.

The first amendment reported by the Committee on Finance to paragraph 244 was, on page 56, in line 2, after the word "jugs," to insert:

If containing 14 per cent or less of absolute alcohol, 30 cents per gallon; if containing more than 14 per cent of absolute alcohol.

So as to read:

Still wines, including ginger wine or ginger cordial and vermuth, in casks or packages other than bottles or jugs, if containing 14 per cent or less of absolute alcohol, 30 cents per gallon; if containing more than 14 per cent of absolute alcohol, 50 cents per gallon.

Mr. ALLISON. I call the attention of the Senator from Missouri to what I think must be a vice in the amendment. It will practically allow all still wines to come in at 30 cents a gallon, because as a matter of course they will contain only 14 per cent of alcohol. The difference between 30 and 50 cents, 20 cents a gallon, will result in all these wines being so diluted as to alcohol as to make them measure only 30 cents. I think that is a very dangerous provision. I trust the Senator will leave the paragraph in that respect as the other House left it and as it is in the existing law. I certainly think the provision on page 56 was not put in at the request of the California Senators.

Mr. WHITE. May I ask the Senator from Iowa to repeat his statement?

Mr. ALLISON. I understand that the amendment proposed by the committee, found on page 56, reduces the duty upon the cheap wines to 30 cents a gallon.

Mr. WHITE. I will state to the Senator from Iowa, if I will not interrupt him, that the amendment reported by the committee is much more advantageous to the wine producers than the bill as it came from the other House, and it was on their suggestion that the change was made.

Mr. ALDRICH. It is much less advantageous, however, than the existing law.

Mr. WHITE. It is very little less; and in fact, in my judgment, so far as affecting the industry is concerned, there is no difference.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The question as to where this line should come in was discussed with representatives of the wine producers and the importers, and the opinion of the Treasury Department was taken on the question. Fourteen per cent was accepted as being the proper line for the cheaper class of wines, wines of little strength, and the strong wines.

Mr. ALLISON. But the question is as to whether we shall allow these wines to come in at 30 cents a gallon, or a little more than one-half the rate now imposed on the same class of wines.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. My opinion is it ought to be less than that. The importations are absolutely prohibited by the present law. The wines of that class do not come here at all.

Mr. ALLISON. Still wines?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. That class of still wines which go below 14 per cent. There is a considerable importation of still wines, but they contain more than 14 per cent of alcohol. Wines containing less than 14 per cent of alcohol are absolutely prohibited.

Mr. ALLISON. It seems to me to be very curious that just at the line of 14 per cent of alcohol there is to be a change, and that there shall be suddenly a jump from 30 to 50 cents. I think that will make great confusion in the administration of the law.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, I am greatly surprised at the statements both of the Senator from Arkansas and that of the Senator from California in this regard. One of the descriptions here given of the two kinds of still wines, that containing less than 14 per cent of alcohol, is intended to apply to clarets and red wines of that kind, and the other to what are called sweet wines. All clarets contain 14 per cent or less of alcohol, and all sweet wines, like ports and sherries, contain more than 14 per cent of alcohol.

If this paragraph is adopted as it now stands all clarets, which come in competition most largely with California wines, will only pay 30 cents a gallon, while ports and sherries will pay, as under the present law, 50 cents. Some time since I asked a large importer of wines in New York, a man who I think is more familiar with this question than anyone else, for an estimate of the amount of wines that would come in under these different rates. He gave me a statement which he had prepared, based on the importations of 1893, showing that substantially one-half of the still wines imported are claret and other wines containing 14 per cent or less of alchol, and about one-half wines containing more than 14 per cent. Any reduction of the rates of duties on still wines will, in my opinion, be harmful to the wine-producing interests of this country.

Mr. WHITE. Do I understand the Senator to say that no claret contains more than 14 per cent?

Mr. ALDRICH. No claret contains more than 14 per cent. None of the ordinary red table wines do.

Mr. ALLISON. Red wine.

Mr. ALDRICH. None of the ordinary red wines contain more than 14 per cent alcohol, or are not supposed to at least, and do not unless they are doctored; that is, if they have not had alcohol inserted. But the ordinary red wines as they are usually made would not contain more than 14 per cent of alcohol.

Now, I can not see any good reason for reducing duties on any still wines at all. It makes a difference in the revenue, as I remember, of about $250,000 a year if the reduction in rates is made. I think myself that the provision as it now stands will be less harmful to the domestic industry than the bill as it came from the House, because the imitation wines made in Cette and other points in France would come in at very much less than 30 cents per gallon, as I think they are sold at 10 or 12 cents a gallon.

Mr. WHITE. Seven or eight cents, sometimes.

Mr. ALDRICH. Sometimes they are sold, as the Senator says, at 7 or 8 cents, or even less. So the duty under the House provision would be very much less than the Senate provision as it now stands. We produce large quantities of still wines in this country, and will soon produce a sufficient quantity for our consumption. If people prefer foreign still wines to American it is no great hardship for them to pay the difference in cost growing out of the imposition of a considerable revenue duty.

Mr. WHITE. The statement of the Senator from Rhode Island that this rate is more favorable to the producers of wine than the rate prescribed by the other House is correct. I think he agrees with me in that regard.

Mr. ALDRICH. Yes.

Mr. WHITE. I will state the difficulty with the provision as it came from the other House. The language used by the House is as follows:

That no such still wines in casks shall pay a higher rate of duty than 100 per cent ad valorem.

Of course where wine is sold at 8 cents a gallon, as was the case last year in France, where there was an immense surplus crop, the result would be very apparent.

Now, the wine producers of California got together and sent here a representative who is an expert in the business. He was in constant communication with me and with other members of the California delegation. We found the provision in the bill as it came from the other House and thought it was hardly fair. On the other hand, there were other parties representing other interests from other parts of the country where wines were not produced. Finally, as the result of considerable talk upon the subject, and, as the Senator from Arkansas has stated, after consultation with the revenue officers of the Government, we reached a point where we consented to accept the schedule as it is now found in the bill.

Mr. HALE. Will not the Senator from California tell us what interest is represented by the other side with which he says the California wine growers came in conflict and had to be yielded to, reducing the present duties? What is the interest to which the Senator refers?

Mr. WHITE. Those whom I spoke to about it—I met the parties myself—are from New York City.

Mr. HALE. They are New York importers?

Mr. WHITE. I presume so. Anyway, they are gentlemen who were here upon the subject. I refer to the men I myself saw.

Mr. HALE. Those were the men whose representations here resulted in the duty being reduced to the rate proposed, which is better than the House duty.

Mr. WHITE. I will say no. There were many others beside these parties, as I discovered, who were endeavoring to have low duties. In fact, there was a demand that came from various parts of the country. I read an article in a Chicago newspaper the other day attacking me very vigorously because it was said I insisted upon a duty of two or three hundred per cent upon some classes of wines. It was not confined to importers.

I will further state that the difficulty we have encountered in marketing our wines has been mainly due to the fact that a great many persons who consume beverages of that kind are still wedded to the idea that they must get their liquor abroad. Just before the last commercial treaty with France was ratified some of our California producers understood that our Government had succeeded in procuring the insertion of the favored clause in the treaty, and they entered into a contract with French manufacturers, involving some hundreds of thousands of dollars, to sell their wine in France. But we found that Mr. Reid had not been able to obtain, or at least did not obtain, the insertion of that clause in the treaty; and as the result, the California producers were forced to cancel their contracts.

Mr. ALLISON. What was the contract?

Mr. WHITE. They made a contract in France to sell wine to French dealers for the purpose of being remanufactured there, and sent back and sold to us under French labels.

Mr. ALLISON. Is not that prohibited under the French law?

Mr. WHITE. Under the French law as it is to-day they were unable to carry it out, principally owing to the French duty, which remains under the treaty negotiated by Mr. Reid, and which is a treaty very detrimental to our interest.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like to ask the Senator from California whether it is not true that the pure article of brandy, made from the California grape, is sent to France and doctored in that way, coming back as French brandy?

Mr. WHITE. I will state to the Senator from New Hampshire that I, of course, do not know of my own knowledge, but I have heard that such is the case. But, as I said, I do not know anything about it.

Mr. CHANDLER. I have been informed by a person who thinks he knows, that that is the case. Therefore, I call the attention of the Senator from California to the importance of not having this reduced rate of duty, reduced from $2.50 to $1.80, put upon French brandy, because after all it is valued very high; it comes in an impure article, and is consumed here. I suggest to the Senator that if, instead of a specific rate of duty, he would get an ad valorem upon these high-priced French brandies—and that I believe is the Democratic principle now—it would be a great deal better for the consumers of this country and quite as well for the producers of brandy in California.

Mr. WHITE. I desire to correct a mistaken inference which may be drawn from a remark I made just now. I learn from an inspection of the record that but 1,000 gallons of brandy were exported to France last year. So that it could not have been sent over there to any great extent to be doctored.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will allow me, the proposition is that the product of the California grape is exported.

Mr. WHITE. Yes, sir; grape brandy.

Mr. HOAR. Is it not true that millions and millions are sent abroad and come back into this country?

Mr. WHITE. I think not.

Mr. HOAR. It is exported and comes back into this country as foreign wine.

Mr. WHITE. Not a great deal of it.

Mr. HOAR. It is a subject which I have not investigated, but I was told, I think by as high an authority as California contains, that that is true, going up into the millions.

Mr. PERKINS. I will state for the information of my colleague that I was informed a few days since that all the vintage of brandy on the Stanford estate had been shipped to Europe, part of it going to France.

Mr. WHITE. If my colleague will allow me, I shall perhaps explain the whole matter by simply referring to the table I hold in my hand. We exported to France 1,096 gallons, to Germany 38,052 gallons, undoubtedly to be remanufactured in Hamburg, and to the United Kingdom 77,000 gallons.

Mr. CHANDLER. I desire to state to the Senator from California that I am obliged to him for enlarging the 1,000 gallons which he said was all that was exported to France. I did not say that the importations of manufactured brandy came from France. I said there were importations of French brandy, not intending to imply that it was manufactured in France.

Mr. WHITE. I was speaking of the exports.

Mr. CHANDLER. I suppose it makes no difference whether French brandy is made out of California brandy in the United Kingdom or Germany; the fact remains that the brandy goes abroad. I do not think it can be made into anything but brandy, except that it may be made into some of the infernal cordials which are referred to in the bill, probably ratafia. But otherwise it is made into brandy and comes back as brandy, whether French brandy or any other brandy; and instead of being dutiable at $1.80 a gallon it ought to be $2.50 a gallon, or it ought to have a high ad valorem rate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee; which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In paragraph 244, after the word "jug," in line 2, insert:

If containing 14 per cent or less of absolute alcohol, 30 cents per gallon; if containing more than 14 per cent of absolute alcohol.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance to paragraph 244, was, in line 5, page 56, after the word "gallon," to strike out:

Provided, That no such still wines in casks shall pay a higher rate of duty than 100 per cent ad valorem.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. In lines 18 and 19 I move to strike out "twenty-five," and insert "twenty-four," so that the proviso will read:

Provided, That any wines, ginger cordial, or vermuth, imported, containing more that 24 per cent of alcohol, shall be classed as spirits and pay a duty accordingly.

Under the existing law where those articles contain more than 24 per cent of alcohol they are forfeited. Now, 24 per cent of alcohol or 25 per cent of alcohol is equal to about 49 per cent, I should say, of proof spirits, and the object of the existing law as respects these articles is to forfeit them in case they are sought to be imported as wines and cordials and not as proof spirits. The House provision simply says that they shall be classed as spirits and pay duty accordingly.

There is no forfeiture and no punishment for the effort to import spurious or distilled spirits under the name of wines. But I remember very well, as I think the Senator from Rhode Island must remember, that in the consideration of the tariff bill in 1890 we were very careful as to the per cent. I remember that we had before us a good many dealers, and especially experts, who stated that 24 per cent of alcohol was a line beyond which it would not be safe to go.

I suggest to the Senator from Arkansas that the amendment I have proposed be made, and if afterward any reason can be shown why it should be increased (and I do think there can be, because it is equal now to more than 2 per cent proof spirits added) it can be changed afterward. The Senator from Arkansas may be in possession of a reason for it of which I am not advised.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The object of the committee in making this provision in lieu of the one which now exists is that we believe the tariff should be levied upon these spirits in case they come in in this way without undertaking to levy a forfeiture.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not ask the Senator to change the provision in that respect. I do not contemplate moving an amendment for a forfeiture of the articles, but inasmuch as you have now provided that they shall be classed as spirits and pay duty accordingly I think it is important to insert 24 per cent instead of 25, because I am quite sure, although I speak only from memory, that when we had this subject up two years ago it was stated distinctly that that was a line beyond which forfeiture could not well go, beyond which, if you provided a greater strength, it would lead to fraud. Now, I suggest to the Senator that he allow 24 per cent to go in, and if later on it shall appear that 25 per cent is essential, I shall make no objection to it.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The penalty attached to finding 25 per cent of alcohol in wines is of, course, very heavy; they are classed as spirits, and compelled to pay a duty accordingly. The difference between 24 and 25 per cent is not very great, and it does not seem to me to be at all likely that any harm can be done to allow a margin this much wider for what might be an accident in the increase of the strength of wines beyond the point that it ought to be. I do not think there is a very great difference in it. We consulted the Commissioner of Internal Revenue on this point, and his opinion was that 25 per cent is nearer a correct line than 24; and we were governed more by his judgment than our own. Altogether it seems but a slight difference between the present law and the pending bill.

Mr. ALLISON. With all due deference to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, I know this was a topic of very great consideration and it was a topic as respects what was called the legislation, in favor of California. Senators have stated on this floor that very little wine is exported and that very little brandy is exported. We went into a most elaborate and complicated scheme two years ago whereby the Californians were permitted to withdraw their grape brandy in bond. For what purpose? For the purpose of enabling them to fortify the wines in order that they might carry them around the Horn. Fourteen per cent was the minimum and 24 per cent the maximum. We went into that matter with the utmost elaboration. I remember it very well.

I wish to say to the Senator from Arkansas that I agree with him that this is very little, but it is a very big thing to somebody or else we should not see this provision in the bill. Somebody thinks it is a little bigger thing than the Senator from Arkansas does. All I ask of him is to make an amendment here so that we shall have it in control, and if it turns out that he is right and I am wrong, then we can change it.

Mr. VEST. Why not let it stay at 25 per cent, and if the Senator from Iowa can show us afterwards it is such an important matter we will change it?

Mr. ALDRICH. You can not change it then.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. This provision was sent from the other House; the Commissioner of Internal Revenue indorsed it; the Senators from California, who are interested in the question, preferred 25 per cent. Why should we make a change?

Mr. ALLISON. Do I understand that the Senators from California prefer 25 per cent?

Mr. WHITE. The matter has never been suggested.

Mr. ALLISON. If the people who are interested in the question do not care anything about it, I do not see why I should stand up here and ask for the change. Here is a change that comes from the other House. I venture to say, without knowing anything especially about it, that there is an individual in the wood pile. If the provision is left as it is now, we can not go back to it and change it without having the fight all over again in the Senate.

Mr. HALE. Let me ask the Senator from Iowa if he does not think the "individual in the wood pile" is likely to be one of these New York importers, whom the Senator from California says he met here and who made the representations before the Committee on Ways and Means? Is not that likely to be the interest?

Mr. ALLISON. I do not know what the interest is; but I know that this matter does not come under the jurisdiction of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue at all. He has no more to do with it than the man who is reputed to be in the moon. Whilst his opinion on everything within his jurisdiction is valuable, and may also be valuable upon this subject if he has examined it, still, having examined it two years ago and having looked into it with the utmost care, I should like to look into it further before I consent to the change.

The Senator says let it go, and if it turns out to be all right so be it; but if we allow it to remain as the other House has put it, then the only way to deal with it is in the Senate after the bill has been reported to the Senate.

Mr. WHITE. With the permission of the Senator from Iowa, I desire to state that I have no doubt if I had called the attention of the committee, or if the committee's attention had in any way been called to the fact that there was a mistake, it would have been rectified. I do not know that there is any mistake about it.

Mr. ALLISON. Neither do I.

Mr. WHITE. The expert who was here representing our interest did not point it out. But as the difference is slight I think it is advisable to make the change. I do not see that any harm can come from making it 24 instead of 25 per cent, and it might possibly prevent a mistake.

Mr. ALLISON. As I am fortified by the Senator from California, I hope the committee will yield to him, as they do not to me.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. We shall agree to it; but I hope the Senator from Iowa will point out the "individual in the wood pile," as we get further along in this matter.

Mr. ALDRICH. I think I can do that right now to the satisfaction of the Senator from Iowa and the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ALLISON. I did not see the individual, I will say to the Senator. I should be glad to see him now.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I should be obliged to the Senator if he would point him out.

Mr. ALDRICH. I call the attention of the Senator from Arkansas and the Senator from Iowa to the fact that under the provision as it now stands, taking the two provisions together, all still wines, including ginger wines and vermuth containing more than 14 per cent of alcohol, shall pay 50 cents a gallon duty.

If they contain 25 per cent of alcohol, according to this provision they will pay, as we now have it, only 45 cents a gallon. In other words, a vermuth containing 25 per cent of alcohol would pay a less rate of duty than a vermuth containing 15 per cent of alcohol, as 15 per cent would pay 50 cents a gallon, and under the provision as you have it, if it contains 25 per cent, it would pay less.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. It would be classed as spirits.

Mr. ALDRICH. And of course it would pay a duty of 25 per cent proof spirits, which, at $1.80 per gallon, would be 45 cents a gallon, according to my arithmetic.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. It would be classed as proof spirits, and pay a duty accordingly. We understand it pays a duty as if it were proof spirits.

Mr. ALDRICH. It pays duty on the proof spirits in it.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. That is not what the provision says.

Mr. ALDRICH. That is what it would do according to the terms of the proposed law in other respects.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. It says, "Containing more than 25 per cent of alcohol shall be classed as spirits and pay duty accordingly."

Mr. ALDRICH. That would be 45 cents a gallon.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. It would pay the full tax.

Mr. ALDRICH. If you say it shall pay a duty of $1.80 a gallon I shall not object to it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In paragraph 244, line 18, strike out "twenty-five" and insert "twenty-four;" so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That any wines, ginger cordial, or vermuth imported containing more than 24 per cent of alcohol shall be classed as spirits and pay duty accordingly.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALDRICH. In line 20 I move to strike out the words "duty accordingly" and insert "a duty of $1.80 per gallon."

Mr. VEST. There is no occasion for that.

Mr. ALDRICH. If that is the meaning of the language we might as well have it expressed.

Mr. VEST. We prefer our own language, with all due respet to the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. ALDRICH. What does the Senator from Arkansas say in respect to my suggestion, that it will pay a duty of only 45 cents a gallon? What answer does the Senator make to that suggestion?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. That is provided for in the bill, and that is sufficient.

Mr. ALDRICH. I do not think it is provided for. I therefore move to strike out the words "duty accordingly," in line 20, and insert:

A duty of $1.80 per gallon.

So as to read:

Shall be classed as spirits and pay a duty of $1.80 per gallon.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Rhode Island.

The amendment was rejected.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The reading of the bill will be proceeded with.

The Secretary read the next paragraph, as follows:

215. Ale, porter, and beer, in bottles or jugs, 30 cents per gallon, but no separate or additional duty shall be assessed on the bottles or jugs; otherwise than in bottles or jugs, 15 cents per gallon.

The Committee on Finance reported an amendment, in line 7, before the word "cents," to strike out "fifteen" and insert "ten;" so as to read:

Ten cents per gallon.

Mr. ALDRICH. I move to amend the paragraph by inserting "forty" instead of "thirty" in line 4, and "twenty" instead of "ten" in the last line. Those are the rates of the present law.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Rhode Island will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In paragraph 215, line 4, strike out "thirty" and insert "forty;" and in line 7 strike out "ten" and insert "twenty," so as to make the paragraph read:

215. Ale, porter, and beer, in bottles or jugs, 40 cents per gallon, but no separate or additional duty shall be assessed on the bottles or jugs; otherwise than in bottles or jugs, 20 cents per gallon.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. HALE. On that let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not quite see why it is proposed to reduce the duty upon these articles imported from abroad. The duty is not a very high one, and especially in the last clause, which the committee propose now to reduce to 10 cents a gallon, while the House provision, I believe, is 15 cents a gallon.

Under the existing law ale, porter, and beer imported otherwise than in bottles or jugs pay just half the duty put upon beer in bottles. Now, it is proposed to make the duty upon bottled beer 30 cents, and the duty upon beer imported otherwise 10 cents a gallon. I think that is too great a difference, and I do not see any reason why we should reduce the duty. It is purely a revenue duty, just as the other articles here are articles having revenue duties. Of course, I do not expect to see it changed, but I regret that the committee have made the reduction.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Twenty cents is the difference provided for under the McKinley act between bottled beer and beer in barrels.

Mr. HALE. I call the attention of the Senator from Iowa, but in my own time to the fact that upon ale, beer, and porter in casks, imported from abroad, coming in competition with our own manufactures, at the moderate duty imposed by the present law, the imposts fort 1893 amounted to $412,377.40, and upon ale, beer, and porter in bottles, they amounted to $495,751, or an aggregate of $907,000.

Mr. ALLISON. Under an ad valorem of 41 per cent.

Mr. HALE. That sum was paid by the consumers of these higher priced malt liquors from abroad. No representation appears to have been made here by anybody, by the people at large, by the Treasury, by the consumers, as to why the duty should be reduced, and yet the committee proposes to take from it a large portion of this revenue and make it up on something else. Of course it is in the same line with the treatment which the committee has accorded to these imported products in the form of spirits, not malt liquors.

Somebody or other, somebody whom the Senator from California met when he was trying to protect his own producers, has been here. The foreign importer has been here. He has been abroad. His mark is shown here in the bill, and it runs all the way through whether it is spirits, brandy, Scotch whisky, Holland gin, favorite foreign liquors, or the finer kinds of beers, porters, and ales, made in England, Austria, Germany, and perhaps in France. It is all one way. The only person who in any way will get one dollar of profit out of it will be the foreign importer. There will not be a bottle of German beer, or Bass's ale, or malt liquor, or porter which will be one cent less to the consumer after the bill is passed.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, whatever political differences there may be between the Senator from Maine and myself, I think he will believe me when I make a personal statement. Not a single human being has approached our committee in regard to these duties. This reduction from 15 cents to 10 cents upon ale and beer not in barrels or kegs was made at the instance of a member of the committee who is not present here today, and who insisted upon some reduction, and urged vehemently that the present duty is too high. I thought then and think now it should be put back, and I have no objection to putting back the duty to what was fixed by the other House, 15 cents, although it is not a matter of very great difference. It applies only to these peculiar brands of German beer which are brought into this country and are drank principally by Germans.

Americans very seldom drink any of them, but prefer the domestic beer. We will withdraw the amendment, because it is a matter of not the slightest importance. I wish to say to the Senator from Maine, however, that so far as any solicitation is concerned, none was made to us at all by anybody; not even a written communication.

Mr. HALE. Of course nobody will raise any question upon that score after the Senator's statement. I referred most naturally to the belief that the importer had been here, and largely because of the statement of the Senator from California—that when he was wrestling for the interests of his own people he did meet the New York importer who had other ends and other objects in view.

I am very glad he did not make his way to the committee. I for one do not think that the taking of the House proposition will satisfy either the revenues of the Treasury or the people. I think the vote ought to be taken upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Rhode Island, that restores the present rate, which is a moderate duty, and which gave us nearly a million dollars in revenue.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, if this proposition becomes a law the revenues will be reduced by it, based on the importations of 1893, at least $325,000 a year. The reduction of the rates would be about to 30 per cent ad valorem in both cases, if the changes suggested by the committee are adopted.

Now, I can not understand any economic theory which proposes to impose a duty of 30 per cent ad valorem upon foreign ale, porter, and beer, and on Saturday imposed a duty of 3.00 per cent upon currants, a revenue duty in both cases. It seems to me that if a high revenue duty is to be imposed upon anything it ought to be upon foreign ale, beer, and porter, and if we are to impose high revenue duties, we ought not to select sugar and currants, and other articles in common use by the people of the country and a necessity to them, and reduce the duty to the lowest point upon French brandies and upon foreign ales and porters.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WHITE in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH], on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CAFFERY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Montana [Mr. POWER], and withhold my vote unless I see that it is necessary to make a quorum.

Mr. CULLOM (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY]. He is not present and I withhold my vote. I should vote "yea" if he were present.

Mr. LODGE (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from New York (Mr. HILL]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. MCPHERSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HIGGINS].

Mr. MORRILL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. PATTON (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. GIBSON]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. PLATT (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. HUNTON].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. PLATT. I wish to state that my colleague [Mr. HAWLEY], who was called away by the death of a relative and has not returned, is paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER].

Mr. GORDON. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. IRBY], and vote "nay."

Mr. MILLS. I am paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER]. If he were present I should vote "nay."

Mr. CAMERON. Has the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina has not voted.

Mr. CAMERON. I withhold my vote, being paired with that Senator.

Mr. CAMDEN. I wish to announce my pair with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW] under the conditions heretofore stated. I shall only vote when necessary to make a quorum.

Mr. BRICE. I am paired with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT]. If he were present I should vote "nay."

Mr. GEORGE. Has the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH] voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not voted.

Mr. GEORGE. I am paired with that Senator.

Mr. DANIEL. I desire to state that I am paired with the Senator from Washington [Mr. SQUIRE]. Otherwise I should vote "nay."

Mr. CAMDEN. Under the terms of my pair with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW] I have a right to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. DANIEL. Having the same privilege, in order to make a quorum, I vote "nay."

Mr. ALLISON (after having voted in the affirmative). Has the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has not voted.

Mr. ALLISON. Then I take the liberty of withdrawing my vote for the present. Of course if it is necessary to make a quorum I will renew it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa withdraw his vote?

Mr. GEORGE. He had better let it stand.

Mr. ALLISON. I will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. CAMERON. Having a right to vote to make a quorum, I vote "yea."

Mr. MILLS. I do the same thing. If my vote is necessary to make a quorum, I vote "nay."

Mr. BRICE. If it is necessary to make a quorum, I vote "nay."

Mr. CAFFERY. I reserved the right to vote to make a quorum, and I vote "nay."

Mr. GEORGE. If necessary to make a quorum, I vote "nay."

Mr. MORRILL. If necessary to vote to make a quorum, I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 19, nays 29; as follows:

YEAS—19.

So the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Chair understand the amendment of the committee is withdrawn?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. It was withdrawn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The Secretary read the next paragraph, as follows:

246. Malt extract, including all preparations bearing the name and commercially known as such fluid, in casks, 15 cents per gallon; in bottles or jugs, 30 cents per gallon; solid or condensed, 30 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. There is a mistake in punctuation in line 9 of the paragraph. The comma after the word "fluid" should come in after the word "such," and not after the word "fluid."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection that change will be made. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The Secretary read the next paragraph, as follows:

247. Cherry juice and prune juice or prune wine, and other fruit juice not specially provided for in this act, containing 18 per cent or less of alcohol, 50 cents per gallon; if containing more than 18 per cent of alcohol, $1.80 per proof gallon.

Mr. ALLISON. I call attention to paragraph 247 in analogy to the wine provision. If cherry juice and prune juice contain 18 per cent of alcohol or less, they pay 50 cents. If they contain more than 18 per cent, they pay $1.80. So I think I am somewhat strengthened and invigorated by my statement made awhile ago.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The purpose of this paragraph is to prevent fraud being perpetrated under the pretense of the importation of fruit juice. Eighteen per cent is sufficient to preserve the juice and bring it here in a sound and healthy condition. When a greater amount of alcohol is put in it is evidently the intention of the importer to smuggle juice into the country, and the intention is to make him pay a penalty for undertaking to do so. If they want to import fruit juice fairly and honestly they can put in the necessary spirits to bring it in without difficulty, and after that limitation if they undertake to perpetrate a fraud they pay a penalty.

Mr. ALLISON. I am thoroughly in accord with the provision of the paragraph, but I was merely contrasting it with the one which we had under debate a little while ago when certain other people who want to bring in spirits under the name of wines were allowed to bring them in at 25 per cent.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The things are totally unlike. Regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is no question before the Senate. The reading will proceed.

Mr. HALE. I noted and appreciated what the Senator from Arkansas said, that the object is to make the difference between the two sufficent to deter false entries; but why was it considered necessary to make the discrimination between the juices which are 18 per cent or less and those which are over so much greater than under the present act?

In the present act it is 60 cents per gallon for 18 per cent of alcohol or less, and for that which is over 18, where the opportunity for fraud arises, it is $2.50, or a difference of $1.90 between the two. The committee have made the difference by adopting the provision of the House only the difference between 50 cents and $1.80, which is $1.30. Now, does the Senator think that that discrimination is better than the older and larger discrimination?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I do not understand the criticism of the Senator from Maine. This juice containing 18 per cent or less under the present law pays 60 cents. Under the bill we propose that it shall pay 50 cents. That is a reduction from 60 to 50 cents. Then the juice containing more than 18 per cent pays the same duty that a gallon of proof spirits would pay, and for the reason I have explained distinctly to the Senator from Iowa. The tax on a gallon of proof spirits imported from abroad under the McKinley act was $2.50. Under this bill it is $1.80. That imposed the tax on a gallon of proof spirits upon this article when more than the required per cent of alcohol went into the prune juice, and this is just the same provision exactly.

Mr. HALE. Now I catch what I did not catch before, and it is perfectly satisfactory. This is made to adapt itself to the rate that is fixed on proof spirits.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Exactly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the bill will be resumed.

The Secretary read as follows:

248. Ginger ale or ginger beer, 20 per cent ad valorem, but no separate or additional duty shall be assessed on the bottles.

249. All imitations of natural mineral waters, and all artificial mineral waters, 30 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. In paragraph 249, line 21, I move to strike out the word "thirty" and insert "twenty," so as to make the rate 20 per cent ad valorem on "all imitations of natural mineral waters, and all artificial mineral waters."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], not now in his seat, desires to offer an amendment at this point in the bill. I have sent for him, but in the meantime I send the amendment to the desk, and ask that it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire for the Senator from Massachusetts will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out paragraph 249, and in lieu thereof to insert—

249. All mineral waters, and all imitations of natural mineral waters, and all artificial mineral waters not specially provided for in this act, in green or colored glass bottles, containing not more than 1 pint, 16 cents per dozen bottles; if containing more than 1 pint and not more than 1 quart, 25 cents per dozen bottles. But no separate duty shall be assessed upon the bottles. If imported otherwise than in plain green or colored glass bottles, or if imported in such bottles containing more than 1 quart, 20 cents per gallon, and in addition thereto duty shall be collected upon the bottles or other covering at the same rates that would be charged if imported empty or separately.

Mr. CHANDLER. If the Senator from Massachusetts does not come into the Chamber before I conclude the brief statement I desire to make, I shall ask that the paragraph may be passed over. He is engaged in performing a duty to which he has been assigned by direction of the Senate.

I notice that the present law puts a duty of 16 cents per dozen pint bottles on all mineral waters, which, I suppose, includes natural mineral waters. The committee not only reduce the duty on imitations of natural mineral waters and artificial mineral waters, but they propose to admit free of duty all natural mineral waters. I do not understand why it is necessary to relieve natural mineral waters from the payment of any duty whatever.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the Senator from New Hampshire was kind enough, during my temporary absence on business of the Senate, to offer an amendment which I desired to offer when this paragraph was reached, reimposing the rates of the McKinley act. Of course, this paragraph covers articles of consumption totally different from all the other articles in this schedule. It involves not only the important industry of natural mineral waters and the making of artificial mineral waters, but also many associated industries. I desire to read a letter stating the case, written by a gentleman largely engaged in this business. He is also an importer. So that, so far as he is immediately concerned, his business would not suffer; but he puts the case for the home manufacturer. He says:

BOSTON, June 2, 1894.

DEAR SIR: I wish you would place before the honorable Senate the following statement bearing upon the importation of mineral waters.

During the past twenty years the importation of mineral waters has increased to an enormous extent, and keeps increasing every year. This has seriously crippled the mineral-water industry of this country. The amount of money that leaves this country for those waters foots up to at least three quarters of a million dollars every year.

These imported waters are by no means superior to the waters we have in this country. We have the richest production of mineral waters, North, South, East, and West, that can be found in any part of the world. I can not understand why some check can not be put on the importation of foreign waters.

Several industries connected with the mineral-water trade have suffered seriously through this source, viz., the manufacture of mineral waters, manufacture of glass bottles, manufacture of mineral-water apparatus, the cork trade, label printing, etc., which would give thousands of skilled laborers employment in this country.

I wish to state here that we pay our employés from $10 to $30 per week, whereas in Germany, where the greater part of this water is manufactured, the same class of workmen receive from 6 to 18 marks per week (some receiving 1 mark per day, some as high as 3), or from about $1.50 to $4.50 per week. This is in the rural districts.

I am well acquainted with this subject, as I have been in Germany on three occasions and have traveled through those districts. Under such conditions it would be impossible for us engaged in the mineral-water business to compete with the importers, labor being so cheap there and high here, and the freight from Hamburg, Rotterdam, or any other port to this country is so low.

On that account instead of having the duty 30 per cent ad valorem, as it is in the Wilson bill, it should be 100 per cent, or in other words those waters should be prohibited altogether, as it is only a matter of fancy and luxury to use foreign waters in preference to our mineral waters here.

I hope you will make a strong argument in behalf of the mineral-water industry of this country, and also in behalf of the labor and industries in general, as in my judgment it is impossible for the country to exist in a prosperous state without a high tariff.

I remain yours, respectfully,

ROGER F. SCANNELL.

Hon. HENRY CABOT LODGE.

The writer of that letter is familiar with the entire business in all its aspects. Mineral springs, as he states, exist all over this country. Some are developed and some are undeveloped. They stand, so far as their value is concerned, on precisely the same ground as iron, or coal, or any other gift of nature of that character; and I can see absolutely no reason for drawing a distinction between mineral waters and coal or iron, which have both been given a large protective duty, whilst the duty proposed here on these mineral waters is absolutely insufficient. It will result in driving the native mineral waters from the market; it will also greatly diminish the associate industries, which are very numerous and employ a great many men.

It strikes not only the manufacturers of mineral water, but the manufacturers of glass bottles, which are made in this country for our own mineral waters, and it also strikes at the manufacturers of mineral-water apparatus, the label printing for bottles, and all the men engaged in every branch of the industry. If there could be any industry suggested entitled to a fair protection it certainly is this one. Mineral waters, if they are to be introduced and imported into this country, are a proper source of revenue. For that reason, Mr. President, I offer the amendment.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, reflection convinces me that mineral waters imported should pay a duty; that they should contribute to provide revenue for the Government and the general welfare of this country; and that they should also pay a duty as a protection to our own industries.

It is very evident from the letter read by the Senator from Massachusetts that the cost of the production of mineral waters is almost entirely a question of labor. The cost of producing foreign water for importation into this country is substantially all labor.

When I was in Carlsbad in 1889, where I saw them bottling the Carlsbad water for exportation to the United States, I inquired the price of labor and the kind of labor that they employed to do that work, and I was informed that full-grown men who did that work were paid a florin a day; that is, 40 cents. The same kind of labor for which 40 cents a day is paid in Carlsbad, according to my observation, would receive in this country from a dollar to a dollar and a half a day, and perhaps the more intelligent workmen engaged in bottling the mineral waters of this country would receive much more than that.

Mr. President, the taking the duty off of foreign mineral waters will simply flood the market with those mineral waters to the destruction of our mineral water industry. To be sure it is better that these waters should come in and supplant our own waters than that French brandies and vile compounds, like absinthe and other cordials, should come in and poison and destroy our people; but certainly the mineral waters which are produced by the cheap labor of Europe and other countries ought to have a duty imposed upon them out of regard to our own labor.

Mr. SHOUP. Mr. President, I desire to add a word to what has been said by the Senator from New Hampshire and the Senator from Massachusetts.

In Idaho the bottling of mineral waters has become a great industry. We have near the village of Soda Springs, on the line of the Oregon Short Line Railroad, several mineral springs which produce immense quantities of natural mineral water. The water is bottled, being naturally charged, and having as much life as the Apollinaris and other waters which are artificially charged.

The water of these springs find a market in Idaho, and they are also exported in large quantities into Montana, Oregon, Washington, and Utah, but the waters can not be shipped East on account of the heavy rates of transportation to Eastern points in this country, where they come in competition with the imported waters; and hence, in my opinion, a duty of 16 cents per 1 dozen pint bottles or 25 cents per dozen on quart bottles ought to be imposed on the imported waters.

As stated by the Senator from New Hampshire, and as I understand it, these imported natural mineral waters are a proper subject for the imposition of a duty, and in my opinion they are, of all waters, those which ought to pay a duty.

I will go further and say that artificial mineral waters should be required to be stamped "artificial mineral water" on the bottles, so as to prevent our people being deceived by them.

Mr. CHANDLER. May I ask the Senator what would be the cost in Idaho of the ordinary labor of adults that would be employed in bottling those waters? Would it be as low in any case as 40 cents a day for any kind of adult labor employed in that work?

Mr. SHOUP. Oh, no; nothing like it.

Mr. CHANDLER. What would probably be the labor cost in Idaho?

Mr. SHOUP. The probability is that the labor in such work there would cost from $1.50 to $2 a day.

Mr. HALE. Let me ask the Senator whether the mineral waters in his own State have not been proved by analysis and by use to be as good and as safe table waters as the mineral table waters of Europe?

Mr. SHOUP. I will say to the Senator that our waters are equal or superior to any waters of the kind in the world; and the mineral waters are bottled just as they come from our springs, requiring no artificial charging whatever. The difficulty is, as I have stated, that the rate of transportation from Idaho to New York is two or three times as much as the freight from Europe to the city of New York; and so our mineral waters are driven out of the Eastern market.

Mr. LODGE. I desire to emphasize the point which has been so strongly confirmed by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. SHOUP], that under this clause natural mineral waters, as I understand it—if I do not misread the clause—go upon the free list, and a duty of 30 per cent ad valorem is imposed on imitation mineral waters.

Mr. ALLISON. Let me call the attention of the Senator to the fact that before he came in the committee proposed an amendment reducing the duty of 30 per cent ad valorem to 20 per cent, which was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. That I had not heard; but it only still further strengthens the point I make. Why should there be a duty on coal or a duty on iron ore and the refusal of a duty on mineral waters? We are opening these springs all over the country, and they are of great value, just as valuable as the European springs, and if they are stricken down and not allowed to be developed, while we have a duty on coal and iron, or if the duty on mineral waters is cut so low it will force men like my correspondent, whose letter I have read, who prefer to go on bottling the American mineral waters, to become solely importers. The result would be under this clause the practical destruction of the native industry and the forcing of these men into some other occupation.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like to ask the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] whether water is not bottled at Colorado Springs, at Manitou, and also at Idaho Springs? When I was in Colorado in 1873 there was no habitation at the so-called soda springs at Manitou. There was a village at a place called Idaho Springs. I have been informed that since that time a large industry has grown up in the bottling of those waters. I should like the Senator to state whether that is so or not. I call his attention to the fact that mineral water is to be admitted free under the provisions of this bill, and I should like the Senator to state what the price of labor would be in Colorado to-day employed in bottling those waters?

Mr. TELLER. Natural mineral water is bottled at Manitou in large quantities, and it is also bottled at two or three other places in the State—not at Idaho Springs now; that, I understand, has been discontinued; but quite a large industry has grown up in the bottling of natural waters, and it is being extended to a great many springs; though in my State there are many springs which have never been touched.

The labor cost in Colorado, as a rule, is nearly double what it is in the country east of the Alleghanies.

Mr. VEST. I can not understand why there is any complaint in the duties proposed in this bill on artificial mineral waters. As I understand, we are not now discussing the natural mineral waters.

Mr. FRYE. There is an amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] to include natural mineral waters.

Mr. VEST. I did not know that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts is to impose a duty on natural mineral waters.

Mr. VEST. I beg pardon. In 1890, after a debate which I remember very well, both by Republican and Democratic votes, all natural mineral waters were put upon the free list, and they remain there to-day under the existing law.

Mr. LODGE. The amendment that I offered is the same as the provision in the McKinley act.

Mr. VEST. I understand the Senator has offered an amendment; but I am speaking now of the existing legislation. Under the McKinley act all mineral waters, not artificial, were put on the free list.

Mr. HALE. They are on the free list in the McKinley act?

Mr. VEST. Yes; and I recollect very well the debate in which Apollinaris water figured very conspicuously.

Mr. LODGE. The McKinley act says:

All mineral waters, and all imitations of natural mineral waters.

It includes both.

Mr. VEST. If the Senator will turn to the free list in the McKinley act he will find that all mineral waters not artificial are on the free list.

Mr. LODGE. The mineral waters "not otherwise provided for," I suppose are on the free list; but these are otherwise provided for here.

Mr. VEST. Then I am worse mistaken than I have ever been in my life, and I have at times been badly mistaken. I read paragraph 650 of the McKinley act, which is part of the free list:

Mineral waters, all not artificial.

I remember the debate very well, and it was one of the very few things about which both sides of the Chamber seemed to agree in 1890. The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] remembers it.

The imitation waters under the McKinley act, in bottles containing not more than one pint, pay a duty of 22.59 per cent; artificial mineral waters, in bottles containing more than one pint and less than one quart, 19.52 per cent; and artificial mineral waters and waters in bottles containing more than one quart, 24 per cent.

The bill as it came from the House of Representatives put 30 per cent, or an increase of 8 per cent, over the first and 11 per cent over the second classification. We simply brought it down to the equivalent in the McKinley act, as it now is, of 20 per cent, which is a fair duty. Unless the Senate has changed its mind materially as to putting mineral waters on the dutiable list, the provision in this bill is right.

Mr. SHOUP. Mr. President, I desire to say a word.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that the understanding has been that the Senate was proceeding under the five-minute rule. While there has been some transgression of the rule, as the Chair understands, the Senator can not speak a second time upon the same amendment.

Mr. VEST. I hope the Senator will be allowed to proceed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the Senator from Idaho will proceed. The Chair hears none.

Mr. SHOUP. Mr. President, in 1890 I made inquiry as to the amount of water brought in and shipped from Idaho springs, in the State of Idaho, and I was informed by the agent that in 1889 535,000 bottles had been shipped. The same authority states that about a million bottles or 250,000 gallons had been shipped in 1890.

I have some recent data at my hotel which I should like to present to the Senate. I therefore ask that this paragraph may go over until to-morrow to enable me to produce them.

Mr. VEST. Would the Senator not just as soon have the matter considered when the bill is reported to the Senate? We do not like to leave a gap and go back in the bill again. The Senator can bring the matter up when the bill is reported to the Senate.

Mr. HARRIS. The question will be quite as open then as it is now.

Mr. SHOUP. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

Mr. LODGE. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BRICE (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT].

Mr. DANIEL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Washington [Mr. SQUIRE].

Mr. LODGE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. MILLS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], and shall not vote unless it be necessary to make a quorum.

Mr. MORRILL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. PATTON (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GIBSON]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. GORDON. By an arrangement with the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], I transfer my pair with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] to the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL], and vote "nay."

Mr. LODGE. Then I vote "yea."

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin. I am paired with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY]. If he were present I should vote "nay."

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I am paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS]. If he were here I should vote "yea."

Mr. PLATT. I am paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. HUNTON]. I should vote "yea" if he were present.

Mr. MORGAN (after having voted in the negative). I withdraw my vote. I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY], who, I observe, has not voted.

The result was announced—yeas 20, nays 26; as follows:

So the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The Secretary read as follows:

SCHEDULE I—COTTON MANUFACTURES.

250. Cotton thread, yarn, warps, or warp yarn, whether single or advanced beyond the condition of single by grouping or twisting two or more single yarns together, whether on beams or in bundles, skeins, or cops, or in any other form, except spool-thread of cotton, hereinafter provided for, valued at not exceeding 12 cents per pound, 20 per cent ad valorem; valued at over 12 cents per pound and not exceeding 20 cents per pound, 25 per cent ad valorem; valued at over 20 cents per pound and not exceeding 30 cents per pound, 30 per cent ad valorem: valued at over 30 cents per pound and not exceeding 40 cents per pound, 35 per cent ad valorem; valued at over 40 cents per pound, 40 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I move to strike out the paragraph which has just been read, and to insert in lieu of it what I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out paragraph 250, and insert:

Cotton thread and carded yarn, warps or warp yarn, in singles, whether on beams or in bundles, skeins or cops, or in any other form, except spool thread of cotton hereinafter provided for, not colored, bleached, dyed, or advanced beyond the condition of singles by grouping or twisting two or more single yarns together, 3 cents per pound on all numbers up to and including No. 15, one-fifth of a cent per number per pound on all numbers exceeding No. 15 and up to and including No. 30, and one-quarter of a cent per number per pound on all numbers exceeding No. 30; colored, bleached, dyed, combed or advanced beyond the condition of singles by grouping or twisting two or more single yarns together, whether on beams, or in bundles, skeins or cops, or in any other form, except spool thread of cotton hereinafter provided for, 6 cents per pound on all numbers up to and including No. 20, and on all numbers exceeding No. 20 three-tenths of a cent per number per pound: Provided, however, That in no case shall the duty levied exceed 8 cents per pound on yarns valued at not exceeding 25 cents per pound, nor exceed 15 cents per pound on yarns valued at over 25 cents per pound and not exceeding 40 cents per pound: And provided further, That on all yarns valued at more than 40 cents per pound there shall be levied, collected, and paid a duty of 45 per cent ad valorem.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PASCO in the chair). The reading of the bill will be continued.

The Secretary read as follows:

251. Spool thread of cotton, containing on each spool not exceeding 100 yards of thread, 4½ cents per dozen; exceeding 100 yards on each spool, for every additional 100 yards of thread or fractional part thereof in excess of 100 yards, 4½ cents per dozen spools.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. There are certain amendments to that paragraph I desire to propose, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 58, line 25, paragraph 251, after the word "thread," it is proposed to strike out "four and one-half" and insert "five and one-half;" and in line 4, on page 59, before the word "cents," to strike out "four and one-half" and insert "five and one-half;" so as to read:

251. Spool thread of cotton, containing on each spool not exceeding 100 yards of thread, 5½ cents per dozen; exceeding 100 yards on each spool, for every additional 100 yards of thread or fractional part thereof in excess of 100 yards, 5½ cents per dozen spools,

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The Secretary read as follows:

252. Cotton cloth not bleached, dyed, colored, stained, painted, or printed, and not exceeding fifty threads to the square inch, counting the warp and filling, 1 cent per square yard; if bleached, 1½ cents per square yard; if dyed, colored, stained, painted, or printed, 2 cents per square yard.

253. Cotton cloth, not bleached, dyed, colored, stained, painted, or printed, exceeding 50 and not exceeding 100 threads to the square inch, counting the warp and filling, 1½ cents per square yard; if bleached, 1½ cents per square yard; if dyed, colored, stained, painted, or printed, 2¾ cents per square yard: Provided, That on all cotton cloth not exceeding 100 thread to the square inch, counting the warp and filling, not bleached, dyed, colored, stained, painted, or printed, valued at over 6½ cents per square yard, 20 per cent ad valorem; bleached, valued at over 9 cents per square yard, 25 per cent ad valorem; and dyed, colored, stained, painted, or printed, valued at over 12 cents per square yard, there shall be levied, collected, and paid a duty of 30 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I move to strike out paragraph 253, and insert what follows in small type.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out paragraph 253 and insert:

253. Cotton cloth, not bleached, dyed, colored, stained, painted, or printed, exceeding 50 and not exceeding 100 threads to the square inch, counting the warp and filling, and not exceeding 6 square yards to the pound, 1½ cents per square yard; exceeding 6 and not exceeding 9 square yards to the pound, 1½ cents per square yard; exceeding 9 square yards to the pound, 1⅞ cents per square yard; if bleached and not exceeding 6 square yards to the pound, 1½ cents per square yard; exceeding 6 and not exceeding 9 square yards to the pound, 1⅞ cents per square yard; exceeding 9 square yards to the pound, 2½ cents per square yard; if dyed, colored, stained, painted, or printed, and not exceeding 6 square yards to the pound, 2½ cents per square yard; exceeding 6 and not exceeding 9 square yards to the pound, 3½ cents per square yard; exceeding 9 square yards to the pound, 3⅞ cents per square yard: Provided, That on all cotton cloth not exceeding 100 threads to the square inch, counting the warp and filling, not bleached, dyed, colored, stained, painted, or printed, valued at over 7 cents per square yard, 25 per cent ad valorem; bleached, valued at over 9 cents per square yard, 25 per cent ad valorem; and dyed, colored, stained, painted, or printed, valued at over 12 cent per square yard, there shall be levied, collected, and paid a duty of 30 per cent ad valorem.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The Secretary read as follows:

254. Cotton cloth, not bleached, dyed, colored, stained, painted, or printed, exceeding 100 and not exceeding 150 threads to the square inch, counting the warp and filling, 1½ cents per square yard; if bleached, 2½ cents per square yard; if dyed, colored, stained, painted, or printed 3½ cents per square yard: Provided, That on all cotton cloth exceeding 100 and not exceeding 150 threads to the square inch, counting the warp and filling, including all cotton duck, not bleached, dyed, colored, stained, painted, or printed, valued at over 7½ cents per square yard, 25 per cent ad valorem; bleached, including all cotton duck, valued at over 10 cents per square yard, 30 per cent ad valorem; dyed, colored, stained, painted, or printed, valued at over 12½ cents per square yard, there shall be levied, collected, and paid a duty of 35 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I move to strike out that paragraph, and insert what follows in small type.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

254. Cotton cloth, not bleached, dyed, colored, stained, painted, or printed, exceeding 100 and not exceeding 150 threads to the square inch, counting the warp and filling, and not exceeding 4 square yards to the pound, 1½ cents per square yard; exceeding 4 and not exceeding 6 square yards to the pound, 2 cents per square yard; exceeding 6 and not exceeding 8 square yards to the pound, 2½ cents per square yard; exceeding 8 square yards to the pound, 2¾ cents per square yard; if bleached, and not exceeding 4 square yards to the pound, 2½ cents per square yard; exceeding 4 and not exceeding 6 square yards to the pound, 3 cents per square yard; exceeding 6 and not exceeding 8 square yards to the pound, 3½ cents per square yard; exceeding 8 square yards to the pound, 3¾ cents per square yard; if dyed, colored, stained, painted, or printed, and not exceeding 4 square yards to the pound, 3½ cents per square yard; exceeding 4 and not exceeding 6 square yards to the pound, 3¾ cents per square yard; exceeding 6 and not exceeding 8 square yards to the pound, 4½ cents per square yard; exceeding 8 square yards to the pound, 4½ cents per square yard: Provided, That on all cotton cloth exceeding 100 and not exceeding 150 threads to the square inch, counting the warp and filling, not bleached, dyed, colored, stained, painted, or printed, valued at over 9 cents per square yard, 30 per cent ad valorem; bleached, valued at over 11 cents per square yard, 35 per cent ad valorem; dyed, colored, stained, painted or printed, valued at over 12½ cents per square yard, there shall be levied, collected, and paid a duty of 35 per cent ad valorem.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair calls the attention of the Senator from Arkansas to line 12, and suggests that the word "pounds" should be "pound."

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. It is not printed that way in the copy of the bill I have, but if it is so printed in any other copy, it should be corrected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 12, it is proposed to strike out the the word "pounds" and insert "pound."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be made in the absence of objection.

The Secretary read as follows:

255. Cotton cloth, not bleached, dyed, colored, stained, painted, or printed, exceeding 150 and not exceeding 200 threads to the square inch, counting the warp and filling, 2 cents per square yard; if bleached, 2½ cents per square yard; if dyed, colored, stained, painted, or printed, 4½ cents per square yard: Provided, That on all cotton cloth exceeding 150 and not exceeding 200 threads to the square inch, counting the warp and filling, not bleached, dyed, colored, stained, painted, or printed, valued at over 8 cents per square yard, 30 per cent ad varorem; bleached, valued at over 10 cents per square yard, 35 per cent ad valorem; dyed, colored, stained, painted, or printed, valued at over 12 cents per square yard, there shall be levied, collected, and paid a duty of 40 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. HOAR. I suggest to the Senator from Arkansas that there is no occasion for reading the text which is to be stricken out. I ask unanimous consent that it may be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, it will be so ordered. The Chair hears none.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I move to strike out paragraph 255, and insert what follows in small type.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out paragraph 255 and insert:

255. Cotton cloth not bleached, dyed, colored, stained, painted, or printed, exceeding 150 and not exceeding 200 threads to the square inch, counting the warp and filling, and not exceeding 3½ square yards to the pound, 2 cents per square yard; exceeding 3½ and not exceeding 4½ square yards to the pound, 2¼ cents per square yard; exceeding 4½ and not exceeding 6 square yards to the pound, 3 cents per square yard; exceeding 6 square yards to the pound, 3½ cents per square yard; if bleached, and not exceeding 3½ square yards to the pound, 2½ cents per square yard; exceeding 3½ and not exceeding 4½ square yards to the pound, 3½ cents per square yard; exceeding 4½ and not exceeding 6 square yards to the pound, 4 cents per square yard; exceeding 6 square yards to the pound, 4½ cents per square yard; if dyed, colored, stained, painted, or printed, and not exceeding 3½ square yards to the pound, 4½ cents per square yard; exceeding 3½ and not exceeding 4½ square yards to the pound, 4½ cents per square yard; exceeding 4½ and not exceeding 6 square yards to the pound, 4½ cents per square yard; exceeding 6 square yards to the pound, 5 cents per square yard: Provided, That on all cotton cloth exceeding 150 and not exceeding 200 threads to the square inch, counting the warp and filling, not bleached, dyed, colored, stained, painted, or printed, valued at over 10 cents per square yard, 35 per cent ad valorem; bleached, valued at over 12 cents per square yard, 35 per cent ad valorem; dyed, colored, stained, painted, or printed, valued at over 12½ cents per square yard, there shall be levied, collected, and paid a duty of 40 per cent ad valorem.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES].

The amendment was agreed to.

The next paragraph of the bill was read, as follows:

256. Cotton cloth, not bleached, dyed, colored, stained, painted, or printed, exceeding 200 threads to the square inch, counting the warp and filling, 3 cents per square yard; if bleached, 4 cents per square yard; if dyed, colored, stained, painted, or printed, 5½ cents per square yard: Provided, That on all such cotton cloths not bleached, dyed, colored, stained, painted, or printed, valued at over 10 cents per square yard, 30 per cent ad valorem; bleached, valued at over 12 cents per square yard, 35 per cent ad valorem; and dyed, colored, stained, painted, or printed, valued at over 15 cents per square yard, there shall be levied, collected, and paid a duty of 40 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I move to strike out that paragraph and insert what is in small type below.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out paragraph 256 and insert:

256. Cotton cloth not bleached, dyed, colored, stained, painted, or printed, exceeding 200 threads to the square inch, counting the warp and filling, and not exceeding 2½ square yards to the pound, 3 cents per square yard; exceeding 2½ and not exceeding 3½ square yards to the pound, 3½ cents per square yard; exceeding 3½ and not exceeding 5 square yards to the pound, 4 cents per square yard; exceeding 5 square yards to the pound, 4½ cents per square yard; if bleached, and not exceeding 2½ square yards to the pound, 4 cents per square yard; exceeding 2½ and not exceeding 3½ square yards to the pound, 4½ cents per square yard; exceeding 3½ and not exceeding 5 square yards to the pound, 5 cents per square yard; exceeding 5 square yards to the pound, 5½ cents per square yard; if dyed, colored, painted, or printed, and not exceeding 3½ square yards to the pound, 5½ cents per square yard; exceeding 3½ square yards to the pound, 6½ cents per square yard: Provided, That on all such cotton cloths not bleached, dyed, colored, stained, painted, or printed, valued at over 12 cents per square yard: bleached, valued at over 14 cents per square yard; and dyed, colored, stained, painted, or printed, valued at over 16 cents per square yard, there shall be levied, collected, and paid a duty of 35 per cent ad valorem.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The Secretary read as follows:

257. The term cotton cloth, or cloth, wherever used in the foregoing paragraph of this schedule, shall be held to include all woven fabrics of cotton in the piece, whether figured, fancy, or plain, not specially provided for in this act, the warp and filling threads of which can be counted by unraveling or other practicable means.

258. Clothing ready made, and articles of wearing apparel of every description, handkerchiefs, and neckties or neckwear composed of cotton or other vegetable fiber, or of which cotton or other vegetable fiber is the component material of chief value, made up or manufactured wholly or in part by the tailor, seamstress, or manufacturer, all of the foregoing not specially provided for in this act, 40 per cent ad valorem.

259. Plushes, velvets, velveteens, corduroys, and all pile fabrics composed of cotton or other vegetable fiber, not bleached, dyed, colored, stained, painted, or printed, 35 per cent ad valorem; on all such goods, if bleached, dyed, colored, stained, painted, or printed, 40 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. In line 23 of paragraph 259 I move to strike out the word "thirty-five" and insert "forty;" so as to read "40 per cent ad valorem."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. In line 24, I move to insert the words "seven and a half;" so as to read "47½ per cent ad valorem."

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The Secretary read as follows:

260. Chenille curtains, table covers, and all goods manufactured of cotton chenille, or of which cotton chenille forms the component material of chief value, 40 per cent advalorem.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I move to insert what follows in small type.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add to paragraph 260:

Sleeve linings or other cloths, composed of cotton and silk, whether known as silk stripe sleeve lining, silk stripes, or otherwise, 45 per cent ad valorem.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The Secretary read as follows:

261. Stockings, hose, and half-hose, made on knitting machines or frames, composed of cotton or other vegetable fiber and not otherwise specially provided for in this act, and shirts and drawers composed of cotton, valued at not more than $1.50 per dozen, 30 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I move to strike out the words included in brackets.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "act," in line 9, it is proposed to strike out "and shirts and drawers composed of cotton, valued at not more than $1.50 per dozen."

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The Secretary read as follows:

262. Stockings, hose and half-hose, selvedged, fashioned, narrowed, or shaped wholly or in part by knitting machines or frames, or knit by hand, including such as are commercially known as seamless or clocked stockings, hose or half-hose, all of the above composed of cotton or other vegetable fiber, finished or unfinished, 40 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. In line 16 I move to strike out "clock" and insert "clocked." It should be "clocked stockings." It is a misprint.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. In line 17 I move to insert the words "and knitted shirts or drawers."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. In line 18; I move to strike out "forty" and insert "forty-five;" so as to read "45 per cent ad valorem."

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The Secretary read as follows:

263. Cords, braids, boot, shoe, and corset lacings, tape, gimps, galloons, webbing, goring, suspenders, and braces, made of cotton or other vegetable fiber, and whether composed in part of India rubber or otherwise, and cotton damask, in the piece or otherwise, 35 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I move to strike out that paragraph, and insert what I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas will be stated

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out paragraph 263, and insert:

263. Cords, braid, boot, shoe, and corset lacings, tapes, gimps, galloons, webbing, goring, suspenders, and braces, woven, braided, or twisted lamp or candle wicking, lining for bicycle tires, spindle binding, any of the above made of cotton or other vegetable fiber and whether composed in part of India rubber or otherwise, 45 per cent ad valorem.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. Did I understand the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas omitted entirely "cotton damask"?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. That is to be included in the following paragraph.

Mr. LODGE. It is to be offered as a separate paragraph?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. It is to be offered as an amendment to follow the words "cotton duck," in the first line of the next paragraph.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The Secretary read as follows:

264. All manufactures of cotton not specially provided for in this act, including cloth having India rubber as a component material, 35 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I move to insert after the word "cotton," in the first line of the paragraph, the words "including cotton duck and cotton damask in the piece, or otherwise."

Mr. DOLPH. I desire to be heard upon that amendment.

Mr. President, of all the surprises during the progress of the bill this is the greatest. Here is one of the most important schedules in the bill, which covers ten pages of closely printed matter, and it has been substantially disposed of in thirty minutes. The Senate was for many days discussing the question of the proposed amendment of the committee fixing the time when the bill should take effect, and other comparatively trivial matters have occupied the time of the Senate for days.

Now, we are disposing of the cotton schedule, embracing ten pages of the bill, vital to a great industry of all the New England States, and my vigilant and aggressive friend from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] has not opened his mouth. No objection has been made to a single line or provision of the schedule. My friend from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], who has taken so able and instructive a part in this discussion is silent, and even my friend from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] is not in the Chamber.

Mr. HOAR. Will my friend from Oregon allow me to tender him my profound thanks and gratitude? For the first time in my life I have been commended for not opening my mouth, and I want it recorded. [Laughter.]

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. President, this silence is significant, and I want to know what it means. I want to know why my friend from Rhode Island, representing so many of the great cotton manufactories in that State, is silent now; I want to know why my friend from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT], who has been so vigilant in looking after the interests of his State, is absent. There is but one conclusion, and that is that this schedule is satisfactory to the cotton manufacturers. Why is it? Is it because the Democratic majority have abandoned its platform and its principles? Why have we not heard during the consideration of this schedule something about the profits of the cotton manufacturers? Why have we not heard some denunciation of the robber barons manufacturing cotton?

If our Democratic friends have abandoned their position, if they have gone astray from their platform, if they have become afraid of their principles, and know that to destroy this great industry would not only destroy the prosperity of the country, but destroy the Democratic party, I congratulate them on their conversion to the doctrine of protection. I can tell better whether that is the case when we reach the woolen schedule.

If I find in the woolen schedule that the woolen manufacturers of New England have been treated as liberally as the cotton manufacturers, I shall say that is conclusive proof that our friends have abandoned their position on the tariff in regard to the cotton manufactures of this country. If I find, on the contrary, that the provisions of the woolen schedule are not satisfactory to the New England Senators, and that they will claim that the provisions of that schedule will destroy the woolen manufactures in their States, then, sir, I shall know that the action of the majority concerning this schedule is because cotton is a product of the South; then I shall know that the reason for fixing this cotton schedule so that it is satisfactory to New England, is because cotton manufacturing is an industry of the South.

Mr. President, I repeat that I am amazed that the cotton schedule, covering ten pages of the bill, should have been read and substantially passed in thirty minutes, and not a New England Senator opening his mouth to protest against its provisions. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] asks me why should they, as it is satisfactory to them. How and why has it become satisfactory? Who was it that secured these satisfactory provisions? I can not, I do not believe that New England and the South have combined, that there has been any agreement between New England and the Democratic majority in regard to the progress or the final disposition of this bill which secured this result.

There must be some reason not apparent. Why is it that our friends have so suddenly changed front? Wy is it that protective duties are given to manufacturers of cotton? I understand the general reduction in this schedule will not be over 30 per cent upon the duties imposed by the McKinley law, and under the changed conditions of the country, with the fall in prices, no doubt the duties to be levied by this schedule, when it becomes a law, will be nearly equivalent to those in the McKinley law.

The Pacific coast is discriminated against, as we have no cotton manufactures. I should like to know why it is that the great industries of my State are to be destroyed and the industries of New England are to be protected; and some of the rest of us should like to know the reason why. I disclaim all idea that there has been any agreement between New England and the majority of the Senate concerning this schedule by which the final disposition of the bill is to be effected or the time when the bill shall be voted upon determined.

If I find the woolen schedule has not been dealt as fairly with, I shall believe that it is because the Democratic majority in this body has come to the conclusion that the South has an interest in cotton manufactures, and desires to preserve the home market for its cotton, and to protect its cotton manufacturers. I am glad that this industry has been protected and provided for. I should have voted for any increase of duties if it had been desired by the New England Senators, just as I voted on my own motion not to put rice in the same category with wheat and other agricultural products of the North. I believe in protection. I am willing to protect every industry, but I should like to know what is the secret of this matter, the reason why the cotton schedule has been dealt with as it has.

I desire to call the attention of the Senate and of the country to the fact that the Democratic majority, which has been denouncing the manufacturers of this country, and is seeking to destroy the agricultural industries of the country, to destroy the woolgrowing industry, and to put our laborers engaged in producing agricultural products on a level with the laborers of the rest of the world, and which proposes to put lumber on the free list, has presented here a cotton schedule that is so satisfactory to New England that not a New England Senator has opened his mouth to protest against it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ought to say a word in answer to the suggestions made by the Senator from Oregon. I will say that the rates in the schedule are reduced, I should think, about 30 per cent upon the average below those imposed by the act of 1890.

Mr. DOLPH. I should like to have the Senator state the average imposed by the McKinley law and also by this bill, so that we may know.

Mr. ALDRICH. The average rate imposed by the act of 1890 upon cotton cloth, as shown by the imports of 1893, was about 55 per cent ad valorem. It is reduced by this bill, I think, to about 40 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. DOLPH. The Senator means, then, 30 per cent on the rates of duty, and not 30 per cent on the price of the goods. There was a controversy between the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from California the other day. The Senator from California was using the same comparison that the Senator from Rhode Island uses, and I saw the Senator from Missouri had reference to the percentage on the cost of the goods. But what the Senator from Rhode Island now means to say is that there has been a 30 per cent reduction on the duty; that is, that the difference between the duty as imposed under the McKinley law and a sproposed by this bill would be about 30 per cent of the duty under the McKinley law.

Mr. ALDRICH. That is the statement exactly.

Mr. DOLPH. I rose simply to call attention to the fact, after the controversy between the Senator from California and the Senator from Missouri, for one had one in mind and the other had another.

Mr. ALDRICH. I will state that aside from this reduction, this schedule, which was prepared by a number of manufacturers of Fall River so far as the price of cloth is concerned, is perhaps the most scientific schedule that has ever been prepared upon the subject. The rates are lower than the manufacturers of New England or the people interested in the manufacture of cotton throughout the country desire, but so far as the method of representing the rate is concerned it is most satisfactory.

I realize, as all the other Senators from New England do, that it is impossible to have the rates fixed in accordance with our notions. If that had been possible I certainly should have moved an amendment to every paragraph on the schedule, but I recognize the inevitable. I think that the committee deserves the thanks of the cotton manufacturers of the country, certainly, for having consented to an arrangement which, while the duties are not high enough, is perfectly satisfactory as to the methods by which they are levied.

Mr. GEORGE. How do they compare with the McKinley duties?

Mr. ALDRICH. I think they average about 30 per cent lower than the McKinley duties, and I suppose that is about the average reduction which is made throughout the bill. I trust this explanation will be satisfactory to my friend from Oregon as to the reasons why the New England Senators did not antagonize the schedule.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Oregon has not observed perhaps that the only question before the Senate upon these paragraphs is not the question of their adoption, but whether certain amendments to the House provisions should be adopted; and while those amendments do not raise the duty, they do make a scale fixing the duty which is more specific in its effect on the product in proportion to the labor. Instead of having one gross, sweeping provision by which there is a per cent ad valorem, as the House proposed, on articles that are 95 per cent labor and articles that are 30 or 40 per cent labor, the committee have granted an amendment which does not increase the rate of duty at all, I understand, but which does make a little more fitting adaptation of the duty to the amount of labor in the particular product.

Now, I think he would be a very strange Senator from New England or from the North anywhere who when that amendment is the only question should get up and undertake to make a long debate over it. It is remarkable while the whole proceeding was going on, the eloquent and resonant voice of the Senator from Oregon, which we so delight to hear, whether it utters the opinion of the Senator himself or utters the opinion of the State of Oregon which loves and trusts him, was also silent. We all agreed, I and the Senator from Rhode Island, and all were of the same opinion that the schedule as proposed should pass without discussion. I do not think the Senator from Oregon has had occasion to complain of any New England Senator, certainly not any Senator from Massachusetts, that he did not free his mind about the general wickedness of this bill; and I do not think my honorable friend will have occasion to do so in the future if he shall hear some few remarks I have been proposing to make when I get the floor.

I will inform the Senator, so far as the woolen schedule is concerned, that any proposition which does not take as good care of wool and of lumber as of any article in the cotton schedule, will be opposed by me as vigorously as I know how to oppose it; it will be attacked in argument as vigorously as I know how to attack it; it will be denounced on the stump hereafter as vigorously as I can denounce it; and it will be repealed in about two years, when the Republicans get into power; and I hope I may possibly help to repeal it.

Mr. DOLPH. I did not intend to complain of the Senators from New England. I drew the inference that they were satisfied with the schedule.

Mr. HOAR. With the amendments. We are very much dissatisfied with the schedule.

Mr. DOLPH. I drew the inference that they were satisfied with the amendments. It is no answer for the Senator from Massachusetts to say that the only question before the Senate was whether certain amendments proposed should be adopted. If those amendments were not satisfactory they were open to amendment, and if they had not been satisfactory the Senators from New England interested in cotton manufactures would have moved an increase of duties; but the amendments were so satisfactory that the Senators held their peace. I discussed the relations of the Senators from New England to this industry far enough to draw the conclusion that the cotton schedule had been reasonably satisfactory to the cotton manufacturer. I did that for the purpose of then asking the majority why these cotton manufacturers had been so dealt with.

Mr. President, I have not complained of the manner in which the Senators from New England have discussed or voted upon questions in which my constituents are interested. My constituents are not especially interested in the question of cotton manufacture. We raise no cotton, and we manufacture none, I think; at least, we manufacture no cotton cloth in the State of Oregon. We are interested in the question of protecting cotton industries just as we are interested in protecting every industry of the country, because, as I have stated more than once on this floor, every industry in the country is intimately connected, and you can not strike down the cotton industry unless you strike a blow at the prosperity of Oregon; and you can not strike down the woolen industry and the woolgrowing industry unless you strike a blow at every industry in the United States and all the people of the United States.

Not only the States of the Union are so connected by interest, the people of the States of the Union are so connected, the industries of the country are so connected, the different classes of our population are so connected that you can not strike a blow at any industry in this country unless it falls upon every State of the Union, upon every industry of the Union, and every class of our citizens.

I did not feel called upon to move an amendment to any of the rates proposed in the cotton schedule. As I said, it is not an industry of my State, and if the Senators from New England are satisfied with it, that is all I desire. I said I am glad of their good fortune, and that all I should like for them to tell me is how this was brought about?

I should like to know the agencies, I should like to know the arguments, I should like to know the inducements, because I want to apply those agencies and use those inducements to protect the industries of my State. All the reason I had for calling attention to this schedule was to call the attention of the Senate and of the country to the fact that the cotton schedule has been treated differently from the industries of my State.

Mr. President, I rejoice in the good fortune of New England, and whatever reason has induced it, whether it is the selfish reason affecting the cotton-manufacturing industry, or the industries of the South, or whether a majority of the Senate have come to believe that to strike down the manufacturing industry of the country will destroy the country and the Democratic party as well—whatever the reason, I rejoice in the good fortune of New England in securing reasonable protection for cotton industries. I do not doubt that when we come to the woolen schedule we shall have the sympathy and the support of every New England Senator.

It is true that New England buys our wool and our food products to feed her operatives, and so New England and Oregon are jointly interested in maintaining the wool industry and the woolen manufacturing industry. While we are individually in Oregon less interested in the cotton schedule and cotton manufactures, as I have said before, we are interested because the people of Oregon understand that the question of protection or free trade is a national question, and they are quite willing, while only asking that their own industries may be protected, that every industry which affords employment to the laborers of the United States shall be protected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I wish to make one correction in an amendment. In passing over paragraph 262 I made a mistake and moved to insert "forty-five" where I should have moved to insert "fifty," in line 19, paragraph 262, relating to stockings, hose and half-hose, etc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 19 strike out "forty-five" and insert "fifty;" so as to read:

All of the above composed of cotton or other vegetable fiber, finished or unfinished, 50 per cent ad valorem.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The Secretary read as follows:

SCHEDULE J.—FLAX, HEMP, AND JUTE, AND MANUFACTURES OF.

265. Flax, hackled, known as "dressed line," 1½ cents per pound.
266. Hemp, hackled, known as "dressed line," 1 cent per pound.
267. Yarn, made of jute, 20 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. In line 10, page 68, paragraph 267, I move to strike out "twenty" and insert "thirty," so as to read "30 per cent ad valorem."

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the bill will be continued.

The Secretary read the next paragraph, as follows:

268. Cables, cordage, and twine (except binding twine), composed in whole or in part of New Zealand hemp, istle or Tampico fiber, manila, sisal grass, or sunn, 10 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. DOLPH. There is no amendment I believe to that paragraph. I move to strike out "ten," in line 14, and insert "twenty-five;" so as to read:

Twenty-five per cent ad valorem.

Some months ago I presented to the Senate a memorial from all the employés of the Portland Cordage Company, and I was proceeding to read it in the Senate when the Senator from Missouri objected, and I was not allowed to put it in the RECORD. I believe my colleague, in a speech which he made upon the pending bill, placed that memorial in the RECORD. It was signed by the employés without regard to politics, and I think stated substantially what is stated in a letter I hold in my hand from the secretary of that company. They present their case for a protective duty so clearly that I will read the communication.

PORTLAND, OREGON, January 22, 1894.

DEAR SIRS: Inclosed you will find, signed by thirty-one of our employés and addressed to the United States Senate, a protest against those clauses of the Wilson bill that relate to manila and sisal rope and binder twine. Please see that this protest is put in the way of doing all the good possible towards accomplishing the object prayed for.

It is of vital importance to us, and indirectly to this whole community, that the tariff on rope and twine be not reduced from its present schedule.

Free trade in these articles, or an approach to it, will put us in direct competition with the rope manufacturers in Hongkong, where labor is but a fractional part of what it is here (being from 10 cents to 25 cents per day). In addition to that the freight on rope from the East Indies will probably be very low, as a large proportion of our yearly grain fleet comes here in ballast from those climes (from Europe via East Indies with general cargoes for those ports), and they can and propably will accept very low rates from the East Indies to United States and save the handling of ballast.

We think our strongest competition in cordage will come from China. If so, the labor that we would pay here, under protection with free trade, will be transferred to China.

This west coast will be helpless without a protective tariff, because our volume of trade is so very limited (to say nothing of higher expenses) that our cost of manufacture must necessarily be at the maximum until there is a more plentiful supply of labor and increased consumption by increase of immigration.

Our European competition, under free trade, would come mostly from England, and there we must contend against interest, insurance, and labor, probably 50 per cent less than the average in the United States; but there is another item that we think is not given due consideration, and that is the marine transportation from the Philippine Islands and Yucatan to the factories and thence to the general markets of the world.

England for the past century has fostered her marine until now she has a direct line of sailing vessels to all the good markets of the world. This we, the American people, do not enjoy and regular and cheap transportation to the world's markets would be the life of any business. As it is, we are shut out of a large portion of the world's markets and the proposed tariff's advocates ask us to be content with only a portion of our home market. If we could manufacture as cheaply to-day as the English, we would still be shut out on account of transportation.

In years past at this season we have run our factory at full capacity and manufactured a large stock of binder twine and rope for the following summer's trade; but the uncertainty about the tariff now compels us to move cautiously, so we have made a reduction of 25 per cent in our pay-roll schedule and are only employing thirty-one hands, whereas a year ago we gave work to sixty-five mill hands. If free trade comes we want a small stock on hand at a reduced cost, because it is likely to prove more profitable to close the factory and loan the working capital.

We know that you are interested in the general cause of protection, but beg of you to give a little especial attention toward having the tariff on cordage and twine maintained as at present.

Thanking you and your honorable colleagues in advance, we remain,
Yours, respectfully,

THE PORTLAND CORDAGE CO.,
By S. M. MEARS, Treasurer.

Hon. J. N. DOPLH and Hon. JOHN H. MITCHELL,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

This letter tells the whole story so far as the Pacific coast is concerned. There are large cordage manufactories in Hongkong and in other points in China. They have improved machinery, manufactured, I think, in the United States. They are manufacturing cordage and twine with Chinese labor at from 10 to 25 cents a day as compared with the labor paid to the mill hands in the United States.

Mr. President, whenever we have discussed this question of Chinese labor there has been virtually an agreement on both sides of the Chamber as to the bad effect of allowing Chinese laborers to come into this country to compete with the American laborers. I should like to ask any Senator on the floor what is the difference in principle between importing Chinese laborers to this country to manufacture cordage and employing them in the manufacture of cordage and twine and the manufacture of cordage and twine in China, and bringing that either free of duty or at a very low rate of duty into this country. The principle is the same.

Mr. FRYE. There is a great difference. If we bring the foreigner here and let him manufacture we have the privilege of feeding him here, and clothing him here, and giving him house room here, and all that sort of thing, which we do not have if he manufactures abroad.

Mr. DOLPH. That is true; and I called attention to that matter the other day; but there is less advantage in allowing Chinese labor to come to this country than bringing laborers from other countries, because they use less of the products of this country, they expend less of their earnings in this country, they make no permanent investments in this country. But the principle of protecting American labor is the same, whether we apply it to the exclusion of Chinese laborers or apply it to the exclusion of the products of cheap Chinese labor in China.

The letter I have read tells the whole story. I do not desire to take up the time of the Senate, because I have learned from experience that the amendments proposed under the caucus agreement of the majority here, like the laws of the Medes and Persians, can not be changed. I do not expect to bring about a change even when I show, so that every Senator can understand it, that in the present case the reduction of the duty upon cordage and upon binder-twine means that our cordage and twine will be largely manufactured in China. I do not suppose that the committee will relent, or that the majority of the Senate will consent to any increase of duty.

The Portland Cordage Company sent me their answers to the questions propounded to them through the circular of the Finance Committee, and they left it optional with me whether I should present their answers to the committee or keep them for use in the Senate. At the time their communication came to me I did not understand that the reports would be printed as they are now being printed in the bulletins which are laid upon our desks from day to day, and for that reason, fearing that it might never see the light if simply turned over to the committee, having the option given to me as to what I should do with it, I kept it in my desk for the purpose of presenting it to the Senate at the proper time. As it is a very full statement of the whole case and of this industry, I ask to have it read as a part of my remarks, and then I shall conclude.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WHITE in the chair). The Secretary will read the communication, if there be no objection.

The Secretary read as follows:

REPLY TO CIRCULAR LETTER OF COMMITTEE ON FINANCE, UNITED STATES SENATE.

PORTLAND, OREGON, February 17, 1894.

SIR: We have the honor to transmit to you answers to your circular letter of December 20, received February 10.

1 to 5. The name of our corporation is the Portland Cordage Company, of Portland, Oregon. Our invested capital is $350,000, and we established in 1887.

6. We have run full time since 1888, adding to our plant each year until 1893. We began operations with $100,000 capital. In 1893 we were running full capacity until about July 1, when the general financial and business depression compelled us to curtail our output one half.

7. We consider the present specific duty of 1½ cents per pound none too great to enable us to compete profitably with foreign competition. Our neighbors in British Columbia and Canada are protected by a tariff of 1½ cents per pound and 10 per cent ad valorem, or an average duty of about 2 cents per pound. They have as cheap facilities for manufacturing as we have, and with our tariff removed they could invade our territory and we could not retaliate or protect ourselves, as they could afford to dispose of their surplus in this market at a very close figure.

8. If the present duty were removed one-third, we would be compelled to reduce our cost one-third, which would be a difficult matter to do except by a lowering of wages.

10. Both domestic and foreign competition has in a measure caused a gradual decline in our prices for the past four years.

11. Our preference is for specific duty. This is particularly applicable to manila hemp products, as fully 80 per cent of the cordage manufactured is of a standard grade, and the remaining 20 per cent of cordage does not average more than 20 per cent less in value, so that in this instance the duty can not be said to bear very unequally upon the different grades, and what little of that objection there is is more than offset by the assurances that the Government will not sustain any loss of revenue by under and dishonest valuation that is possible under the ad valorem system; especially as we understand the ad valorem duty is to be collected on market value at the port of shipments. With specific duty dishonest merchants have no advantage over their honest neighbors.

12. Since July 1, 1893, our sales have fallen off 40 per cent on account of the general depression in business, although we have lost no customers, and added some new accounts to our books.

13. Since July 1 the tendency of wages has been down. On January 1, 1894, we reduced our scale of wages 25 per cent.

16. The price of living in this locality has decreased some in the past four years from local competition in all lines, and lower freight rates from the East.

17. The causes of the present depression in trade, we think, can be attributed to the unprofitable management of railroads and other large corporations. Also, to overproduction and speculation, the result of ten years' prosperity under a protective tariff. These, however, are but auxiliaries to the main issue, the tariff changes now proposed.

It being generally understood that the political party now in power were pledged to radical tariff reform in the direction of free trade, the natural result was that those manufacturing protected articles could not wisely continue buying raw materials and continue the manufacture of products when they could form no safe idea of what the value of their goods would be in the near future, and most all manufacturers have to plan at least six months ahead. Uncertainty hampers any business.

The result in our particular line has been, that since the United States manufacturers have ceased buying fiber, except for immediate wants, the fiber market has declined in price 30 per cent, which means nearly that percentage of loss on all stocks of fiber and manufactured goods on hand. Such loss is depressing. Manufacturing can not resume to any extent except for immediate demands (demands prior to the date that the proposed Wilson bill goes into effect) until the tariff question is settled. If cordage manufacturing can then be resumed at a profit without protection, it is sure to be with a reduced market, from foreign competition. The world's source of supply for manila and sisal hemps are the Philippine Islands and Yucatan. These fibers are the raw material to cordage manufacturers, and they are now admitted free of duty. The higher rates of interest, insurance, and labor in this country will offset transportation charges from Europe to New York, so that foreign manufacturers will have an equal footing with us in our home market, and we must expect to divide with them. We certainly can not enter foreign markets, from lack of the low rates and regular sail transportation enjoyed by the English, and not by us.

As a remedy for the depression we believe in stopping the present radical changes suggested in the Wilson bill. Reform of our tariff laws may be advisable, but we pray it may be done gradually, so that business can adjust itself to the changes without a great loss.

18 and 19. Fibers are our raw materials and our products are necessities.

20. Our credit we consider unquestioned, and yet we are compelled to pay 8 per cent interest on sixty-day loans. We think foreign manufacturers only pay on the average of about 3 per cent.

21. We have not had enough immigration to feel the effects of it.

26. We have kept foreign rope out of this market by quoting prices that make it advantageous for our local merchants to trade with us.

27. The only country that we could export to is British Columbia, but their protective tariff and other foreign competition preclude our selling at a profit there. We can not export to any other country because freights are too high to allow us to compete with English manufacturers.

28. The cost of manufacture has decreased since our establishment by increasing our volume, which always brings cost nearer the minimum. That is the only decrease in cost we have experienced, except in fibers, until the last few months; since that time we have reduced our wages.

29. All raw materials have grown less in value from year to year, as transportation facilities to this coast have improved. In the summer of 1893 the fiber market made a sharp decline, and has continued declining ever since, caused by large falling off in demand in the United States and decline in silver exchange rates.

31. We do not use any products of this country except tar, oil, and tallow. Ninety per cent of our material is raw material from the Philippine Islands and Yucatan. These markets are the general source of supply for the world.

32. None of our component materials are dutiable, and yet we require a protective tariff on the manufactured articles for reason stated above.

We trust we have answered your queries to your satisfaction, and hope it may have some influence towards convincing your honorable committee that protective tariff for the cordage industry is a necessity for its successful prosecution in the United States.

Yours, respectfully,

PORTLAND CORDAGE COMPANY,
By S. M. MEARS, Treasurer.

D. W. VOORHEES, Esq., Chairman.

Mr. LODGE. Is there an amendment now pending?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is an amendment, the Chair will state, pending to line 14, page 68, to strike out "ten" and insert "twenty-five"—the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH].

Mr. LODGE. I move to amend, in line 12, by striking out the words in parenthesis, "except binding twine."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Chair understand that the Senator from Oregon has yielded the floor?

Mr. DOLPH. I have yielded the floor, but my amendment is pending.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question before the Senate is the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon. That amendment is now pending.

Mr. LODGE. If only one amendment is pending it is in order of course to offer a second amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair was not aware that the Senator from Massachusetts understood exactly the amendment before the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. I understand it is to raise the rate from 10 to 25 per cent ad valorem.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the amendment.

Mr. LODGE. My amendment is to strike out the words "except binding twine."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments are disconnected, it appears to the Chair.

Mr. LODGE. They are, but it makes no difference. I give notice that I shall offer my amendment after the amendment of the Senator from Oregon is disposed of.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. LODGE. I now offer my amendment. On page 68, line 12, paragraph 268, I move to strike out the words "except binding twine."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 12, page 68, paragraph 268, strike out the words "except binding twine;" so as to make the paragraph read:

Cables, cordage, and twine, composed in whole or in part of New Zealand hemp, istle or Tampico fiber, manila, sisal grass, or sunn, 10 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. LODGE. Of course, I need not say that after striking out the words proposed by my amendment it would require the addition of a separate clause to put the proper rate on binding twine, that is, to restore it to its present rate. The striking out of "binding twine" in the amendment I propose, if it shall prevail, is only preliminary to another amendment. Binding twine forms a portion of a very large industry of New England and some other portions of the country, and particularly the State which I represent, and I wish, as representing a large body of men engaged in the industry, to say a few words in regard to it.

Binding twine was first introduced in 1878 as a substitute for wire, and at a cost of 17 cents per pound, which was then fully 40 per cent cheaper to the farmer than wire. The manufacture of this article is carried on principally in the States of Massachusetts, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Illinois, Indiana, and Texas, and has steadily increased in this country, and the entire amount of twine consumed has for many years been produced here, although it is also manufactured in England, France, Germany, Canada, and some in the Philippine Islands, and also in Italy. It is largely used in every civilized country on the globe.

The production here has reached the aggregate of 50,000 tons per annum. The price has steadily declined to 7¼ cents per pound in May, 1891, at which point it remained during the entire year. Latterly the manufacturers have used domestic hemp in the manufacture of binder twine, until in 1890 one-seventh of the entire product was made from this material, and it is believed that the proportion has now largely increased. Manufacturers have been spending large sums of money every year for new improvements, and have been reducing price of twine; and with low-priced fibers binder twine has been sold fully 40 per cent cheaper, on the average, than when first introduced. The expenditures for one factory alone, for new machinery and mill, have been over $600,000, and this has been the rule all over the United States.

I mention this to show that the manufacturers have aimed to reduce cost, and by doing so increase consumption. There has been no single year since binder twine has been introduced that the manufacturers have not sold it at a reasonable price over and above the cost of fiber; the difficulty is, that they are too far from the farmer, from the fact that the twine will have passed through two or three dealers before it reaches the farmer, and then it is sold to them by the village storekeeper, who is obliged to trust them from one to two and sometimes three years' crops before he gets his money. If the farmer could buy closer to the manufacturer he could save from 3 to 4 cents per pound on his twine.

Under the tariff of 1883 the duty upon binder twine was 2½ cents per pound. The duty upon the raw material from which it was manufactured was, for manila, 1¼ cents per pound; sunn and sisal grass, three-fourths of a cent per pound; and jute 20 per cent ad valorem, being from one-half to three-fourths of a cent per pound. The Mills bill made these raw materials free, and reduced the duty upon binder twine to 25 per cent ad valorem, which amounted to about 2 cents per pound. The tariff act of 1890 makes all these raw materials free, and reduces the duty on binding twine to seven-tenths of one cent per pound, which is less than 10 per cent ad valorem.

Statistics show that the price of binding twine during the season of 1891 were so near the actual cost of fiber that binding twine could not be imported without loss, and yet the supporters of the bill now under consideration advocate the destruction of this industry in this country by putting the article on the free list, and yet they have the evidence, as given before the Committee on Ways and Means, that if the duty should be further reduced binder twine could not be made in this country.

It is therefore evident that to remove the tariff is to transfer the entire industry to other countries. It must be understood that there is no country in the world equipped with the machinery to supply the demand of the United States with binder twine, and if the manufacturers of the United States found that England, Ireland, and Germany were building and putting in machinery to do this work, the manufacturers here would be compelled to remove their works abroad or close the mills, for their wages in these three countries are fully 60 per cent less than ours, and the seven-tenths of a cent duty does not protect the American manufacturer. The duty now on binder twine is the lowest grade of duty on any article manufactured in the United States.

The cost of labor in this country to manufacture this twine is about 2 cents per pound. In Belfast and Dundee the cost of labor is fully 50 per cent less. In Hongkong there are now running American machines manufacturing this twine at a cost of $5 per month for labor. This industry distributes to labor yearly the sum of $2,000,000. It is estimated that 10,000 tons of American hemp are used in its manufacture yearly. The manufacture of this twine from American hemp is an industry peculiar to the Western and Northwestern States. The raising of hemp for this purpose is more profitable than that of any cereal. What will it profit the American farmer if the vast army of American workmen now employed in the production of binder twine is driven to adopt agricultural pursuits and the industry transferred to Belfast or Hongkong?

The majority, by implication at least, profess to think that the removal of this duty will relieve the consumer, not of American wheat, but of binder twine. They propose to destroy the business of one class of American citizens for the assumed benefit of another class, and yet on every occasion this same majority are loud in their denunciation of class legislation. The fact is, the removal of this duty would simply benefit foreign producers and foreign consumers of the surplus of American wheat.

In the end the farmer would bear whatever burden falls to the American consumer. Destroy the competition of the American manufacturer and you leave the farmer entirely at the mercy of the foreign producer and the importer. The seven-tenths of a cent protection, if taken off, would never reach the farmer, but would simply be the means of compelling the dealers to pay cash for their twine, if supplied from England, whereas the manufacturers in the United States sell to them on six months' credit without interest.

This industry is already established; the removal of this duty would destroy it, throwing thousands of men out of employment and rendering millions of invested capital useless, and turning $2,000,000 in wages annually to the laborers of other countries. There is a lively competition which can only be maintained by the present duty which enables manufacturers of American hemp binder twine to prolong their existence; the destruction of this industry would inevitably increase the price of binder twine.

I have a letter from the Plymouth Cordage Company, which is the largest cordage company I believe in the State, or one of the largest, written by the treasurer, Mr. G. F. Holmes, in which he states that:

PLYMOUTH CORDAGE COMPANY,
North Plymouth Mass., May 23, 1894.

We pay the same for labor engaged in the manufacture of binder twine as we do for making rope, and the labor is fully two-thirds of the expense of manufacturing either article. It puts us to a decided disadvantage and brings us in direct competition with foreign labor if these goods are admitted free of duty. Our foreign competitors have the same style of machinery that we use, and of course this can be made to turn out as many goods in Europe as in America.

Yours, very truly,

G. F. HOLMES, Treasurer.

Not only that, but they have American machinery in China, in Hongkong, just as good machinery as we have, and they get their labor there, as I have said, for something like $5 a week. The result of putting binding twine upon the free list will be the destruction of a large portion of the cordage industry in my State and several other States of the Union. I do not believe that it will be of the slightest benefit to the farmer whom it is intended to benefit, for while it will destroy beyond any question the American industry, it will remove the American competition and leave us entirely at the mercy of the foreign importer. For this reason I move to strike out those words preliminary to a further amendment restoring the existing duty of seven-tenths of a cent on binding-twine.

Mr. PEFFER. The people whom I represent are interested in binding-twine; not in its manufacture, but in its use. Those of us who use binding-twine are engaged in business out of which we produce a very large surplus of wheat, for the binding of which twine is used. That surplus is sold in a foreign market where the prices are regulated by wheat coming from half a dozen different nations, competing one with another, all the producers of which excepting our own work for wages ranging from 6 cents per day in India to about 25 cents per day in the Argentine Republic and Russia.

Now, if we are compelled to produce wheat in competition with such labor as that, I do not see why the manufacturers of twine in Massachusetts can not do as well as we do in this open, free-trade competition. Hence I object to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. ALDRICH. I call the attention of the Senator from Arkansas to the language used in this paragraph in regard to the composition of twine. The language used is:

Cables, cordage, and twine (except binding-twine), composed in whole or in part of New Zealand hemp, istle or Tampico fiber, manila, sisal grass, or sunn, 10 per cent ad valorem.

In order to secure the admission of twine for 10 per cent ad valorem it will be necessary to insert a small proportion of some one of these articles. For instance, cotton twine or silk twine, with a small proportion of any of these fibers, would be admitted at 10 per cent ad valorem. It seems to me that the words "or in part" should be stricken out, and perhaps the words "or admixture of any of them" inserted; so that the paragraph would read:

Cables, cordage, and twine (excepting binding-twine), composed in whole of New Zealand hemp, etc.

Now, that was the intention of the committee. This paragraph was copied in part from the act of 1890, but the rates imposed by the act of 1890 were so much higher that there was really no danger of frauds in the direction which I have suggested. I think it would be much safer for the paragraph to have the language changed as I have suggested, so that it would read, "composed in whole of New Zealand hemp, istle," and then add after "sunn," in line 14, "or a mixture of any of them." That is all it is intended to cover, I have no doubt, and I move to amend as I have indicated.

Mr. VEST. This is the same provision that was found in the McKinley act, and I have never heard of any trouble in regard to it.

Mr. ALDRICH. But the rate is a very different one. There was a considerable specific rate imposed by the act of 1890, and this is a very small ad valorem rate. The Senator will notice that he proposes to give a heavier duty upon yarns than upon the twine, and it is important that we should limit the articles to be admitted at this very low rate of duty, so that there will be no chance for deception or frauds upon the revenue.

Mr. VEST. All these are hard fibers. It would be almost impossible to mix them with cotton or other softer fabrics so as to produce the trouble the Senator anticipates. I should not like to make this change, because, as I said, there has never been any trouble in regard to it, and I do not think it ought to be done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. ALDRICH. I think the Senator from Missouri did not quite catch the meaning of what I said. I think that manila, for instance, could easily be mixed in a very small proportion with either cotton, or silk, or wool, and that a yarn could be imported under the name of twine at this very low rate of duty. But, in order to make the paragraph perfectly plain, I suggest to strike out "or in part," after the word "whole," and to insert after the word "sunn," in the fourteenth line, "or a mixture, or any of them." That, I think, will make the meaning of the paragraph, as the Senator from Missouri desires it, perfectly plain.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. CHANDLER. What is the amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "whole," line 13, page 68, paragraph 268, strike out the words "or in part," and after the word "sunn," in line 14, same page, insert "or a mixture of any of them."

Mr. VEST. Then that would confine the paragraph to these articles alone.

Mr. ALDRICH. Is not that what was intended?

Mr. VEST. And mix New Zealand hemp with istle, or with Tampico fiber, or with manila or sisal grass?

Mr. ALDRICH. Is not that the intention of the committee?

Mr. VEST. In other words, it would shut out every one of them. It reads here, "composed in whole or in part."

Mr. ALLISON. Let me ask the Senator from Missouri if it is not intended by this paragraph that you may mix a twine of hemp and cotton, for example, or of hemp and silk, or that you may make manila twine with manila and cotton?

Mr. VEST. I think that certainly would be the construction the way it reads.

Mr. ALLISON. I think so, too; and it seems to me hardly the right thing to do, because surely the twines that are named here are intended to be made of these cheap raw materials, and they are intended to include twines made of cotton. For instance, you might put in a single thread of manila here under this paragraph as it reads. There is a great deal of cotton twine, and it could all come in at 10 per cent ad valorem. It may be that it is a proper duty for such an admixture, but I think not. Certainly the old paragraph was intended to include cables. cordage, twine made of all these articles, or of any one of them.

Mr. VEST. "Composed in whole or in part."

Mr. ALLISON. Yes; and it is now the suggestion of the Senator from Rhode Island to make it very clear, that it is composed in whole, or of any one of them, or of an admixture of any two of them or more. It seems to me that would make it a clear statement, and I hope the Senator will consent to the amendment.

Mr. PLATT. How would it affect paragraph 263 as it now stands?

Mr. ALLISON. Paragraph 263 accords. Of course, there is a large amount of what might be called cordage twine, I think, manufactured.

Mr. ALDRICH. I hope the Senators on the other side will accept the amendment. It will take a great deal less time to dispose of it in that way than to discuss it. It seems to me it makes clear what the committee must have intended.

Mr. VEST. I should like to know what was intended by the McKinley act. There the duty was 1½ cents. I understand the Senator to say now it might be all silk except one thread of the sisal grass, or of hemp, or of manila, and then it would come in at 10 per cent. The same thing could have happened under the McKinley act, but it never has been done. There has been no difficulty in regard to it. It can not be possible that anybody would take cotton, a very cheap article, or ordinary hemp, or the common or coarser grasses and put in a thread or two of the higher priced articles and then pay 10 per cent upon it.

Mr. ALLISON. I agree to that. I believe that statement true, and if it be true then there could be no objection to the change proposed.

Mr. VEST. It certainly never was the intention of either the McKinley act or the present enactment that these cables should be made entirely of the articles mentioned here, because it says "made in whole or in part." The 10 per cent attaches if there are any of these specific articles found in the texture. That unquestionably is the law and is so construed by the Department. If there has never been any trouble, why should we undertake to change it now?

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask that the paragraph be read as it would read as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated as requested.

The SECRETARY. After the word "whole," in line 13, page 68, strike out the words "or in part;" and after the word "sunn," in line 14, insert "or a mixture of any of them;" so that the paragraph, when amended, will read:

Cables, cordage, and twine (except binding-twine), composed in whole of New Zealand hemp, istle or Tampico fiber, manila, sisal grass, or sunn, or a mixture of any of them, 10 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. ALDRICH. As I have already stated, the reason why this was not taken advantage of under the act of 1890 was undoubtedly because of the imposition of quite a large specific duty by that act. Now we are to have a very small ad valorem duty. I have always felt as though the paragraph might be taken advantage of even under the act of 1890 for the importation of high-class articles in fraud of the revenue. My attention was not called to it until after the bill had passed and become a law, and I have been fearful from that time to this that there might be some importations of different articles under the provision. It seems to me there can be no question but that the Senator's intent is covered by the language which I have proposed to use, and I hope my amendment will be accepted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask for a division.

Mr. VEST. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nay were ordered; and the Seretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FAULKNER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY]. I do not see him present.

Mr. PLATT. My colleague has not returnd from the funeral of his relative.

Mr. FAULKNER. I announce my pair with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY].

Mr. MCPHERSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HIGGINS].

Mr. QUAY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN]. If he were present I should vote "yea" and he would vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CULLOM. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. VILAS. I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL].

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am paired with the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON], but I transfer that pair to the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM], so that the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] and myself may vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. HALE. I vote "yea."

Mr. GORDON. By an arrangement with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM], I transfer my pair with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] to the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY], and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. CULLOM. I vote "yea."

Mr. FAULKNER. Under an arrangement made, the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY] will transfer his pair with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], to the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY], and he and I will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. QUAY. I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 19, nays 26; as follows:

YEAS—19.

Aldrich,	Dolph,	Patton,	Sherman,
Allison,	Dubois,	Peffer,	Shoup,
Chandler,	Frye,	Perkins,	Squire,
Cullom,	Hale,	Platt,	Teller.
Dixon,	McMillan,	Quay,

NAYS—23.

Berry,	George,	Kyle,	Turpie,
Blackburn,	Gibson,	McLaurin,	Vest,
Blanchard,	Gordon,	Martin,	Voorhees,
Cockrell,	Harris,	Murphy,	Walsh,
Coke,	Hunton,	Pasco,	White.
Daniel,	Jarvis,	Roach,
Faulkner,	Jones, Ark.	Smith,

NOT VOTING—40.

Allen,	Gallinger,	Lindsay,	Pettigrew,
Bate,	Gorman,	Lodge,	Power,
Brice,	Gray,	McPherson,	Proctor,
Butler,	Hansbrough,	Manderson,	Pugh,
Caffery,	Hawley,	Mills,	Ransom,
Call,	Higgins,	Mitchell, Oregon	Stewart,
Camden,	Hill,	Mitchell, Wis.	Vilas,
Cameron,	Hoar,	Morgan,	Washburn,
Carey,	Irby,	Morrill,	Wilson,
Davis,	Jones, Nev.	Palmer,	Wolcott.

So the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the bill will be proceeded with.

The Secretary read the next paragraph, as follows:

239. Hemp and jute carpets and carpetings, 20 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I move to strike out "20 per cent ad valorem," in lines 16 and 17, and insert "4 cents per square yard."

Mr. PEFFER. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the last five words "four cents per square yard," and inserting "shall be exempt from duty;" so that the paragraph will read:

Hemp and jute carpets and carpetings shall be exempt from duty.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next paragraph, as follows:

270. Burlaps, not exceeding 60 inches in width, containing not over 40 threads to the square inch counting warp and filling, 15 per cent ad valorem; bags for grain made of such burlaps, 20 per cent ad valorem.

The Committee on Finance report to amend the paragraph, on page 68, line 21, by striking out after the word "burlaps," the word "twenty," and insert "twenty-two and a half."

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I move to strike out in line 18, the words "not exceeding 60 inches in width."

Mr. ALDRICH. I should like to have the Senator from Arkansas explain why that is done.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I can see no reason why a higher rate of duty should be put on burlaps over 60 inches in width than those that are narrower. It seems to me they are of the same value practically, and if there is any reason for having a rate of duty on burlaps under 60 inches the same reason should apply to burlaps above 60 inches.

Mr. ALDRICH. I think the Senator from Arkansas stated but a very small part of his case. Burlaps exceeding 60 inches in width have been made in this country to a considerable extent, especially since 1883, when a higher rate of duty was imposed upon burlaps exceeding 60 inches in width. They are more expensive than narrower burlaps. The narrower burlaps have always been given a low rate of duty for the reason that they have not been made in this country to any considerable extent.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The wide ones are not made here practically.

Mr. ALDRICH. Yes; to a very considerable extent. One large concern in New York has made a great many of them, and they have been sold in competition with the foreign article at a rate of duty which was not more than reasonably protective. Now, the effect of this amendment if it is adopted will be to prevent absolutely the making of any burlaps exceeding 60 inches in width in the United States.

Let us see just what the committee have done. They have proposed by paragraph 267 to impose a duty of 30 per cent ad valorem upon jute yarn, and in the next paragraph but one they propose to impose a duty upon burlaps from which yarn is made of 15 per cent ad valorem, 30 per cent on yarns and 15 per cent on the finished cloth. If there could be a more absurd arrangement of paragraphs than that I can not imagine. Certainly jute yarns ought to be 10 per cent or some such sum if burlaps are to be 15 per cent.

To show the inconsistency of this scheme as it stands, here we have these three rates: First, a duty upon jute yarns of 30 per cent; then a duty upon burlaps, of which the yarns are made, of 15 per cent, and in the next paragraph still a duty upon the bags, from which the burlaps are made, of 22½ per cent, a decline from the yarns to the cloth of 15 per cent, and an advance from the cloth to the finished bag of 7½ per cent. All that is necessary to make this cloth into bags is to sew them up with a sewing machine. The total cost of making them does not exceed three-tenths of a cent apiece on bags, or four-tenths at the outside; and yet the committee proposes to advance the rate from 15 to 22½ per cent for a protection upon that one process, which I affirm is 400 per cent of the total cost of making bags in India, where they are made in competition with those who make bags in the United States.

If there is to be that great additional amount of protection to the man who makes bags over the man who makes burlaps, there certainly should be some protection in the manufacture of burlaps over the man who produces yarn in the United States. This whole jute schedule is certainly anything but creditable to the members of the committee who have prepared it. These different rates can never be considered with any relation to each other. I presume the duty on jute yarns was put up to accomodate somebody who was engaged in the manufacture of jute yarn, and the duty upon burlaps was put down possibly because the oilcloth manufacturers were not content with their rate of duty.

Then, the duty upon bags has been put up to please a small bag combine, or people who are engaged in making bags in the United States, to an inordinate rate of duty, I mean as compared with the others. The whole schedule is as inharmonious and as out of line as it is well to imagine any schedule to be constructed. If it is desirable to give up the production of jute to the foreign manufacturer in Calcutta or Dundee and they are to have this trade, let us give them the whole of it. Let us make all the jute product free, or let us see that there is some relation between the different products. I shall be glad to know why these different rates are made and on what theory they have been adopted.

Mr. HALE. There seems to be something almost heartrending after we have got through a schedule that had been the subject of pacificatory arrangement and had been settled satisfactorily to some parties, so that it went through quietly and almost unobservedly, to find following that in the same day a schedule that is legitimately subject to the very sharp denunciation which the Senator from Rhode Island has visited upon this schedule. While that Senator would like to know why this arrangement upon this product has been made, why the discrimination seems to have been against the classes where the most labor is employed, and in favor of that state of the article where the least labor is employed, I should be glad to have the Senator in charge of the bill to tell us why it was not possible to submit this schedule to the peaceful processes by which we had so easy a deliverance from the cotton schedule.

It would seem to me that we were going on in a way that might be satisfactory even to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] in the previous schedule, and that everything was lovely and that every goose hung high. It is a warm day and everybody felt that progress was most gratifying. Now, we have struck another subject-matter, where some of us fondly hoped we would continue the same pacificatory course, and we find the Senator from Rhode Island denouncing this schedule as one entirely discreditable to the committee. It seems to me the committee has not bestowed average attention to these two schedules.

If they gave so much attention to pacificate the cotton schedule and had given a little more attention to pacificate this schedule it might be that out of the general average we would have got a schedule that would have run through here in a very easy manner comparatively. But I am disheartened when I hear the denunciation the Senator from Rhode Island has resorted to upon this schedule, and I am bound to believe he is correct because he knows all about it. I should like to have some explanation why it was not submitted to the unwarlike crucible that ground out the other schedule.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The complaint of the Senator from Rhode Island at the rate of ad valorem tariff on jute yarn, it seems to me, is hardly consistent with his constant contention on the higher rate of ad valorem tax upon all other yarns.

Mr. ALDRICH. I do not mean to be understood as objecting to the high rate upon jute yarns. I am objecting to the low rate upon the products of yarn. I do not think the 300 per cent ad valorem——

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I understood the Senator to complain and say it was unphilosophical, and all that. That can be passed by so far as that goes. I was simply speaking of the fact that he is not satisfied with 40 or 50 per cent upon other yarns; that he wants the very highest possible rates on spinning and everything else except jute, and to jute is unwilling to accord 30 per cent.

Leaving that aside, the question of wide burlaps, it seems to me, is easily settled. I understand they are made to a very limited extent, if at all, in the United States, and when burlaps are admitted at 15 per cent there is no difference between wide and the narrow burlaps, except the mere question of width, and they can be made wide or narrow, about as easily one way as the other. I can see no difference in that now.

The difference suggested by the committee as to the ad valorem to be levied on grain bags was a rate that after careful examination we believed was absolutely just to the manufacturers of grain bags.

I think 2½ per cent on these bags amounts to a very small difference between the cost of the material and the cost of the bags. After all, it is less perhaps than 3 per cent. I do not know just what the amount is; I have not the calculation by me, but there seems to me to be but a reasonable difference between the two. I do not think the committee has made so grave a mistake as the Senator from Rhode Island thinks.

Mr. ALDRICH. I did not intend to criticise unfavorably the action of the committee in fixing the duties on jute yarns at 30 per cent. I think it is a fair rate. What I did intend to criticise was the fact that they put a less rate, in fact only half that rate, upon the cloth which is made from the yarn.

The Senator says that these are practically the same thing. They are not the same thing by any means. The narrow burlaps are made differently, woven on an entirely different kind of loom, are much more expensive to make, and are used for an entirely different purpose.

The narrow burlaps are used for making grain bags. The wide burlaps are used for the foundation of oilcloths, or for various kinds of cheap carpet. They are an entirely different product, made in an entirely different manner. These wide oilcloths, or wide burlaps, have been made to a very large extent in the United States. I think there is but one establishment, but I take it for granted that does not affect the claim which they have upon reasonable consideration. The present duty is 40 per cent ad valorem, as I remember it, or perhaps it is a specific rate.

The duty by the act of 1883 was 40 per cent ad valorem. I think it is not a fair treatment to that particular industry to reduce the rate from 40 per cent ad valorem to 15 per cent, as is proposed by this paragraph. From any standpoint, it is not fair to impose a rate of duty of 30 per cent upon yarns and 15 per cent upon the finished product.

Mr. VEST. Nothing could illustrate more distinctly the facility with which one can criticise the work that is done by somebody else, and the equal facility with which one can forget his own work of two or three years ago. The Senator from Rhode Island makes his argument upon the fact that there is a high duty in our bill upon jute yarn and a smaller duty upon the finished product to make which the yarns are used.

In the McKinley act, upon jute yarn the duty was 35 per cent. Upon burlaps 60 inches wide, which is the finished product, in the same law, the duty was 29.23 per cent, being a reduction from the raw material, which is the yarn, as is the case in the present bill.

But the Senator complained that there is a high rate of duty put upon the bags, on which there is very little labor, and which are made out of the burlaps. That is another criticism that he makes upon the pending bill. We find in the McKinley act that while the duty on burlaps was 29.23 per cent the duty on bags was 44.73 per cent. So that the same criticism he makes in regard to the pending measure is applicable in even a larger degree to the bill which he constructed in 1890.

Mr. President, I never pretend to conceal or avoid the force of any argument. It is a fault, possibly, with me, that I am a little too frank, even in discussion. I will say right now that I do not claim this schedule is symmetrical. I have stated frequently that we were compelled to make concessions in order to pass a bill in some shape which would reduce duties generally from the McKinley standard. But the very same argument which the Senator makes to-day against this bill is applicable even in a larger degree to the McKinley act, which the Republicans have told us was the perfection of tariff legislation, and which they propose now to keep upon the statute books if possible.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, the act of 1890 was not as inconsistent as the Senator from Missouri seems to think. The act of 1890 did impose a duty of 35 per cent upon jute yarns. It gave a rate of duty which was not protective to burlaps not exceeding 60 inches in width, as I have already stated in the presence of the Senate. The fact was that those burlaps had not been made to any considerable extent in the United States, and never have been made to any considerable extent, but it did give a much higher rate upon burlaps exceeding 60 inches in width. Upon burlaps exceeding 60 inches, if valued at 5 cents a pound or less, a certain rate was given, which was equivalent to 55 per cent ad valorem; upon goods valued above 5 cents a rate of 40 per cent was fixed.

So burlaps exceeding 60 inches in width under the act of 1890 either paid 40 per cent or 55 per cent, as they might be valued at more or less than 5 cents a pound. The duty on the finished product was higher than the duty upon yarns.

Mr. VEST. Was there not the same limitation under the act of 1890 on burlaps that there is now?

Mr. ALDRICH. Certainly.

Mr. VEST. The Senator's argument a few minutes ago was that we are now putting a high duty upon an article on which there is no labor.

Mr. ALDRICH. I was talking about the difference between burlaps and bags. I was stating that the committee in this case gives 7½ per cent additional protection to bags over burlaps, and that the cost of making grain bags from burlaps does not exceed four-tenths of a cent a pound; and that that 7½ per cent imposes the equivalent to three-tenths of a cent a pound, or about 300 per cent upon the entire cost of making those bags from burlaps in Calcutta. I am not saying that is excessive, but I am only stating the different methods by which these two different articles are treated.

I repeat, burlaps less than 60 inches in width have not been made very much in this country, and under the rates of duty which were imposed by the act of 1890 or under this bill they will not be made in this country, but burlaps exceeding 60 inches in width can be made and are made at the present time and they are entitled to a higher rate than the duty upon all yarn. That is the contention I make.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I desire to say simply one word at this point. If there is any criticism to be made upon this schedule it is that the tariff, as suggested by the Senator from Missouri, may be too high upon some particular article. Certainly it is not as low upon any of the articles mentioned in paragraph 270. The grain bags mentioned in that paragraph are utilized almost entirely upon the Pacific coast. Nearly the whole consumption occurs upon the Pacific coast, because there wheat is placed in sacks and shipped in sacks to Liverpool. The McKinley law placed a tariff on grain bags amounting, according to the report upon import duties, to between 42 and 45 per cent ad valorem.

It was a tax of 2 cents per pound and is reported at that rate. Although the committee have imposed a tariff upon this article they have done I have no doubt the best they could. They have cut the duty down, reduced it one-half, and to that extent they have relieved us of a very onerous burden. We never have seen any chance of relief, and certainly have never obtained any from antecedent legislation under other political conditions here.

In 1891, after the McKinley act had been enacted, the Legislature of California passed a joint resolution which was voted for by all the members, Republican and Democratic alike. It can be found on page 525 of the Statutes of 1891. In that joint resolution the members of Congress were requested to relieve the people from this tax, as it was called in that resolution, by Democrats and Republicans alike. While the citizens of my State would no doubt prefer these articles absolutely free, they are very grateful to the party that has reduced them 50 per cent.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, the reason for this reduction is what I supposed it was, that upon the request made by the farmers of the Pacific coast, the Government gives away by the bill about $1,200,000 of revenue. I do not know that I object to it, because I think perhaps it is worth that for an object lesson. I do not suppose the farmers of the Pacific coast will ever hear of it, but I wish now to make a prediction that under this reduced rate, which relinquishes $1,200,000 of revenue to the Government a year, they will not get a grain bag a picayune cheaper.

Mr. PEFFER. I move to amend the paragraph by striking out all after the words "burlaps" in line 21 and inserting "shall be exempt from duty."

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President, I simply desire to supplement that which has been so well stated by my colleague. If there is any one question which the farmers of the Pacific coast—of Washington, Oregon, and California—are deeply interested in, it is that of grain bags. We are differently situated in California and the other Pacific coast States than the farmers in the West. We have no grain elevators. Farmers can not take their grain to the warehouses and there have it emptied into bins and transported in bulk to market, but it must all be shipped in grain bags, in burlap sacks, to the port of shipment, where it is transported by vessel to Liverpool and other European ports.

It seems to me the different memorials from the farmers which have been submitted here from time to time, asking that they be relieved from this burden, should have found a hearing, if anything is to be placed upon the free list. Therefore it is not clear to me why the committee should raise the rate upon jute yarn from 20 to 30 per cent and increase the duty upon burlaps from 20 to 22½ per cent as the bill came from the other House. There are arguments without number which can be used why if any article should be upon the free list grain bags or the materials from which they are made should be.

California, realizing the importance of this to her farmers, made a liberal appropriation whereby grain bags might be manufactured in the penal institutions of our State, and the result is that we have at one of our State prisons burlap machinery which is turning out bags by the 10,000 or 15,000 daily. It is the only equalizer, as it were, which helps the farmers from being imposed upon by the combinations of the country which are controlling the burlap imports into the country. I feel constrained in view of these facts to support by my vote the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEFFER].

Mr. PEFFER. I wish to modify my amendment slightly. I am satisfied it will be improved in the estimation of the Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS]. I wish to modify it by striking out of the paragraph also all the words after the word "burlaps," in line 18, until we come to the words "ad valorem," in line 20, and inserting before the word "bags" the word "and"; so that the paragraph will then read:

Burlaps and bags for grain made from burlaps shall be exempt from duty.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that the first question is upon agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. PEFFER. Then I can say what I wish to say upon this point, and afterward we can take the vote.

Mr. President, grain that is shipped out of the United States from the farms is sold in a free-trade market. It has to compete with free-trade wheat. It has to compete in a gold market where all the prices are regulated by gold, and it occurs to me that it is not only reasonable, but that it is only fair, that while the farmers, the tradesmen, the merchants, and the mechanics in all parts of the country stand by their brethren of the loom and the shop, those brethren ought to stand by us, so as to cheapen as much as possible the articles which we are compelled to use in getting our surplus grain shipped to a free-trade market.

Mr. ALLISON. I should like to ask the Senator from Rhode Island whether he thinks that under paragraph 270 burlaps are likely to be manufactured in the United States?

Mr. ALDRICH. As the paragraph stands, most emphatically no.

Mr. ALLISON. As the paragraph stands?

Mr. ALDRICH. Yes.

Mr. ALLISON. Therefore, it seems to me, if the industry is to be destroyed in the United States, there is great force in the suggestion made by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEFFER] and the Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS]. I should be glad to so adjust the rate as to have the industry continued in the United States, but if that can not be done I see no objection to making it free.

Mr. HIGGINS. You do not wish to impose a tax on the farmers?

Mr. ALLISON. I do not wish to impose a tax on the farmers of California. And I will say to my friend from California we use these burlaps in Iowa as well.

Mr. PERKINS. They are used for wool bags and hop bags.

Mr. ALLISON. And for oats.

Mr. PERKINS. For oats, barley, and all other cereals.

Mr. ALLISON. Under existing law, of course where these bags are exported, largely from California, and also largely from every other portion of the country, there is a drawback equivalent to the duty, so that upon all burlaps and bags exported there is really no tax.

Mr. PERKINS. That usually accrues to the shipper, and not to the farmer.

Mr. ALLISON. I so understand. But if the result of this provision will be to import the bags and not to establish an industry and make them here, it would prevent a great deal of circumlocution and drawbacks in the way of duty to put them upon the free list, and they may as well go on the free list.

Mr. VEST. Do I understand the Senator from Iowa to say he wants to put these bags on the free list?

Mr. ALLISON. I think the Senator from Missouri must have had his attention diverted when I was making my observation.

Mr. VEST. It was.

Mr. ALLISON. I inquired of the Senator from Rhode Island if under the paragraph as it stands it would be possible to conduct this industry in the United States, he being an expert upon the subject and more familiar with it than I am, and he says it is absolutely impossible. So if that be true, it seems to me it might be wise to put these bags on the free list rather than to leave them in this nebulous state without doing any good to our own people.

Mr. VEST. I am glad to hear the Senator say it, because his party put a 44 per cent duty upon them in 1890. We propose to reduce that.

Mr. ALDRICH. That was for a protective duty.

Mr. ALLISON. I supposed then and hoped that it would be an industry in connection with the jute industry, which we were seeking to establish in the United States, and which would measurably prosper here under the duty proposed. But now it seems the industry is to be destroyed. If so, why should we tax the people of California or Iowa for this article which they must have?

Mr. VEST. That is the Democratic doctrine.

Mr. PERKINS. I understand that under the revision of the paragraph we have already adopted burlaps bags can not be manufactured at a profit in this country. If that were not true, then I should be in favor of doing what I could do to protect the American manufacturing interest in this country and at the same time do justice to the farmer.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator from California give me information on a point about which I desire to learn something, and that is as to the capacity of this country to produce the burlaps—the bagging?

Mr. PERKINS. We have not yet a sufficient number of factories to produce the burlaps required, but yearly they are augmenting, and in time, should the McKinley law remain, I doubt not that in a few years we should be able to manufacture all the bagging we desire.

Mr. CHANDLER. Is it all made from coarse hemp?

Mr. PERKINS. So I understand.

Mr. CHANDLER. I believe the agricultural product can be raised to supply all the bags——

Mr. ALDRICH. It is not raised in the United States at all.

Mr. CHANDLER. Is none of it raised here?

Mr. ALDRICH. It is jute, and comes from India.

Mr. CHANDLER. It is made from foreign material?

Mr. ALDRICH. Yes, sir.

Mr. CHANDLER. Then what is the question? Is it between the raw material and the manufactured material, or both?

Mr. ALDRICH. The motion of the Senator from Kansas is to put bags and bagging upon the free list.

Mr. CHANDLER. That is, the manufactured article?

Mr. ALDRICH. Yes.

Mr. CHANDLER. The result of which will be, then, that there will be no manufacture of them in this country.

Mr. ALDRICH. There will not be any under this bill, so far as burlap is concerned. Bags might survive, possibly.

Mr. WHITE obtained the floor.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President——

Mr. WHITE. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOAR. I have here a letter from Messrs. E. S. Halsted & Co., manufacturers of bags and bagging, 75 Pearl street, New York, in which they say that when the exportation of flour to Cuba began under the reciprocity policy we were exporting very little; that we were not exporting more than 60,000 to 75,000 barrels of flour and those in wood. They say:

The duty against our country in favor of Spain was so great as to almost exclude shipment. The first six months after reciprocity went into effect shipment of flour alone amounted to 200,000 barrels. Most of this was in sacks, and since then, in the two years or nearly two years that have elapsed, there has been from six to seven hundred thousand barrels.

Certainly a very excellent showing in favor of this present tariff. In addition to this there have gone from this market several hundred thousand sugar sacks to the West Indies, for sugar to place in shipment to this country; this is a very great innovation on the shipments from England. The reason of it is that under the present system of reciprocity these bags can be made in this country from goods manufactured in Dundee and sold from here at a cheaper rate than they can be sent from Europe.

I should like to have the whole letter printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks. I have read nearly all of it. There are one or two sentences which would not sound pleasant to Democratic ears. I ask leave to have it printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KYLE in the chair). Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Massachusetts? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The letter is as follows:

FEBRUARY 10, 1894.

DEAR SIR: Yours of the 9th came duly to hand and noted. We are greatly obliged to you for your kindness in replying to ours. We do not know whether it can be made to have any effect upon the Democratic majority now ruling, but would add to what we stated to you in our last a thing which no doubt you are perfectly familiar with, but nevertheless we can give you the information from positive knowledge and experience.

Before the present law came into existence we were doing comparatively little in the way of exporting flour in sacks. To cite one instance, we would refer to Cuba; previous to the negotiations based on reciprocity, our country was not exporting more than about 60,000 to 75,000 barrels of flour, and those in wood. The duty against our country in favor of Spain was so great as to almost exclude shipment. The first six months after reciprocity went into effect, shipment of flour alone amounted to 200,000 barrels; most of this was in sacks, and since then in the two years, or nearly two years, that have elapsed there has been from 600,000 to 700,000 barrels. Certainly a very excellent showing in favor of this present tariff. In addition to this, there have gone from this market several hundred thousand sugar sacks to the West Indies for sugar to place in shipment to this country.

This is a very great innovation on the shipments from England. The reason of it is that under the present system of reciprocity these bags can be made in this country from goods manufactured in Dundee and sold from here at a cheaper rate than they can be sent from Europe; this difference is occasioned from the fact that the duties against England on these bags are greater than those against the United States, resulting from reciprocity treaty. Give the United States a proper protection in these matters and there is no doubt but what we can command a large proportion of this foreign trade. While we have very grave doubts as to being able to preach loud enough or strong enought upon these deaf ears, yet we could trust that in the near future we may be able to recover to this country this prestige and strength again.

Yours, truly,

E. S. HALSTEAD & CO.

Hon. G. F. HOAR, Washington, D. C.

Mr. HOAR. I suppose, Mr. President, that if the reciprocity policy were retained we should have a very large exportation of these bags, with our flour and to some extent our beef, because they export the beef, and also pork to some extent, in these bags, and with the very large importation from these countries with which we have reciprocity arrangements, which would come in in these bags, that would be sent from America for that purpose—these manufacturers say that under those circumstances we would establish the manufacturing in this country and have a very large foreign trade.

I have no interest in the matter as representing any constituency interested in the manufacture, but if the Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS] and the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEFFER] think the protective system should be applied to any manufacture, I suppose the mere fact that they have a constituency who buy these things does not change their minds as to what is the proper policy. I have no doubt that retaining the present duty will result in cheapening the bags and establishing the industry in this country.

Mr. ALLISON. I think the manufacture of bags is an industry quite well established in this country. I know there is a very large manufactory at Minneapolis. I am sorry the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WASHBURN] is not here. All the flour shipped to Europe is shipped in these bags; and where the burlaps are exported the shippers receive a drawback equivalent to the duty upon the burlaps, although they make the bags in Minneapolis. This is my understanding.

Mr. WHITE. Those bags are made of a different material from the grain sack.

Mr. ALLISON. They are jute bags, and are made from jute. But I had supposed that under the duty imposed in the McKinley act burlaps suitable for these bags was actually made in the United States. I think they are, to some extent, although I do not know.

Mr. WHITE. My colleague mentioned a fact in the course of the discussion which I will call to the attention of the Senator from Iowa and other Senators. In the State of California, in order to give employment to a number of convicts in one of the penitentiaries, that of San Quentin, we have established a jute mill for the manufacture of grain bags.

The jute is imported. There is no duty upon jute, I will state, and there has not been any lately. The jute is imported from India, Calcutta, and brought directly to the San Quentin penitentiary, which is located upon San Francisco harbor, and the bags are made there. I have seen the process myself. Everything is done there. The bales of jute are brought in right there. They are delivered on board ship at Calcutta and delivered there.

Mr. ALLISON. Then the bags are made in California.

Mr. PERKINS. We also have two other jute mills in California.

Mr. WHITE. I was about to state that. We have two other jute mills in the State of California where these products are made. Nevertheless, although we are manufacturing the article there, there is not the least question that our people have always been in favor of a great reduction of duty. Before the McKinley bill became a law our people were here endeavoring to impress upon the authorities in charge of the Republican measure, or they stated that they did, that there should be a reduction, but they were unable to get it.

The Democratic party, however, as represented in the present committee, has reduced the tariff tax 50 per cent, and to that extent it is a great relief. As far as concerns the benefit which has accrued to us from the manufacture in that State, our farmers would a great deal rather take every employé and board him at the Palace Hotel than to permit the imposition of such a duty as has hitherto been upon this product. I am glad that Senators upon the other side who have heretofore found it necessary to impose almost 50 per cent duty upon this article have so radically changed their minds that they have now abandoned their original ground.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I congratulate the country and the Democratic party upon the accession we have had to the doctrine to-day. I have listened with great and unalloyed pleasure to the argument of the Senator from Iowa and the statements of the Senator from Rhode Island. We can not resist the appeals which they have made in behalf of free bags made out of burlaps. So we withdraw the amendment, and in behalf of the committee we will move to strike out that portion of paragraph 270 from the words "ad valorem" in line 20, down to the end of the paragraph, including "bags for grain made of such burlaps, 22½ per cent ad valorem." That gives free bags for grain, wool, etc., to the agricultural portion of our country.

Mr. ALLISON. I understand the Senator proposes to retain the duty on burlaps and then make bags free. Of course under such a provision no burlaps will be imported.

Mr. VEST. It will all come in in the shape of bags.

Mr. ALLISON (to Mr. ALDRICH). Is that your understanding?

Mr. ALDRICH. That is my understanding of the amendment.

Mr. VEST. I suppose some burlaps will come in for oilcloth manufacture. They use large quantities. But what we are dealing with now is the agriculturist. I am for the farmer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee, in line 18, to strike out the words "not exceeding 60 inches in width."

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In paragraph 270, after the words "ad valorem" in line 20, strike out the remainder of the paragraph, as follows;

Bags for grain made of such burlaps, 22½ per cent ad valorem.

Mr. PEFFER. Does the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri take precedence of the amendment I offered some time ago?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the arrangement of the Senate amendments offered by the committee must first be acted upon.

Mr. HARRIS. The effect of the amendment of the Senator from Kansas I understand is to make burlaps and bags made of burlaps free?

Mr. PEFFER. That is right.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Where is the motion of the Senator from Missouri is to make bags free and leave burlaps taxed.

Mr. PEFFER. I shall insist upon my amendment when the amendment of the Senator from Missouri is disposed of.

Mr. VEST. Under the amendment of the Senator from Kansas he would give to the oilcloth manufacturers free burlaps.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I am unable to vote for the amendment of the Senator from Kansas. I understand very well that the farmers, the grain producers in the great West, and the grain producers of California labor under many disadvantages, and in some respects they are perhaps entitled to peculiar and special consideration. But I do not believe that the farmers of any portion of the country wish to have any industry that is established in this country destroyed.

I do not believe that the farmers of this country are very largely demanding either free lumber or free barbed fence wire, or free binding twine, or that the farmers are educated up to the idea that it will materially increase their farm profits to destroy the business of making jute bags in this country. It seems to me that these are infinitesimal benefits which will not result in any appreciable help to the farmers, while they will destroy these industries, especially this industry which is now in this country in competition with the factories that are worked by the labor of India, where the processes are so cheap.

I say, Mr. President, that I do not believe the farmers are demanding these things. I admit that some demagogues, speaking for the farmers, or attempting to do so, are endeavoring to satisfy themselves or somebody else that the farmers want the manufacture of these articles destroyed in order that they may receive some possible benefit by it. But the farmers of this country, when they come face to face with the fact that they are demanding that there shall be convict labor in order that they may have cheaper bags, are asking something that is not reasonable.

I have had occasion already to call attention to the great danger to the industries in this country from the cheap labor of Asia. I have here a paragraph which gives the pay of the workmen in the textile mills of India. A workman in the textile mills of India earns about 15 cents a day, and he toils from twelve to fourteen hours a day, including Sunday. That is the kind of labor which is employed in the mills of India that make these bags for grain. Now, I ask the Senator from Kansas whether his people are really demanding that they shall have bags made by that labor and whether when the free raw material comes in—the jute from India—they are not willing that the bags shall be manufactured by American labor at American prices?

Mr. PEFFER. Answering the Senator's question, I say to him that the farmers of Kansas do not care who makes their bagging or who makes anything they have to use in shipping their wheat, when they are compelled to sell their wheat in competition with the very class of men to whom the Senator refers. The ryots of India who labor on the farms work for about 6 cents to 10 cents a day. Kansas farmers are worth $1.50 or $2.50 a day, and if we have to sell our products in competition with those fellows over there who receive but 12 cents a day we do not care who make the bags.

Mr. CHANDLER. I admitted that the farmers labor under peculiar difficulties, and that they may be entitled to special consideration in some respects, but I do not believe they want special consideration in this respect. The farmers ought to have protection upon their wool. They do not want to raise wool in competition with the cheap labor of Australia. They want protection upon their wool, and they ought to have protection upon their wool, and they have had protection upon their wool while the Republican party has made tariffs.

But because the tariff is taken off wool and because the Democratic party in that respect is attacking the interests of the farmer, I do not believe that the farmer wants to have the manufacture of bags for grain in this country stricken down. I do not believe the farmer wants to destroy a wire factory, or that the farmer wants any of these little things which, as the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] has well said, will not make themselves felt in the practical reduction of the price of any article which the farmer buys, any more than I believe the men who raise the cotton at the South care anything about free cotton ties.

It is all an outcry gotten up by the opponents of the protective system, and I do not think that the real interests of the farmer are promoted by this class of exceptions to the general principle of protection, any more than I think the interests of the cotton-grower are protected by giving him nominally cotton ties free. I believe the prosperity of the farmer, of the man who raises grain in Kansas and California, and the prosperity of the man who raises cotton in the South are equally to be benefited by the system of protection to be maintained as a whole upon correct principles of protection, which principles are, that by a duty we will protect everything which we can manufacture in this country by our highly-paid labor against similar articles manufactured by the pauper labor of Europe and of Asia.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, the Senator from Missouri, by the amendment which he now submits, undertakes to impose upon me a certain responsibility for his amendment which I do not propose to accept. In answer to a question asked by the Senator from Iowa I stated that in my opinion burlaps could not be made in this country with 15 per cent duty. I repeat that opinion. I have no question whatever about it.

It would not be possible, considering the different rates of wages paid in India and in the United States, with free jute to make burlaps in the United States with 15 per cent duty. I stated that so far as that industry is concerned, if that is all we are considering in this matter, the duty might as well be taken off entirely, so far as any American interest in the production of burlaps is concerned, and beyond that it is simply a question of revenue. I did not mean to say that burlaps can not be taken under this duty and made into bags in the United States, because I believe the difference between 15 per cent and 22½ per cent in this paragraph is a protective duty. I think bags consumed in the United States will be made here, if this paragraph shall become a law.

Now, the suggestion of the Senator from Missouri is to place the bags, the finished product, upon the free list and to impose a duty of 15 per cent upon burlaps. Of course that would absolutely prohibit the making of any bags in this country, and to that extent I think it would be unjust to our people engaged in the production of bags, and certainly there must be a great many in different parts of the country. Therefore I think the suggestion made by the Senator from Missouri is not a proper one to be adopted.

If we are going to put anything upon the free list in this connection it should be burlaps, with a reasonable and moderate protection upon bags. I should impose protective duties upon all these things. It was the purpose of the act of 1890 to give to the jute industry in the United States fairly protective duties for the first time in the history of the country. This might be a very important American industry. Thousands of people are engaged in the manufacture of burlaps into bags at Calcutta and other points in India and at Dundee in Scotland.

This great industry might be and ought to be transferred to the United States, but it is simply a farce to give it a duty that will not and can not be protective. That is the fault I find with the proposition of the committee. If anything at all should be put upon the free list it should be the burlaps and not the bags. A small protective duty should be given to the bag manufacturers of the United States.

Mr. VEST. Nobody understands better than the Senator from Rhode Island what will be the effect of putting bags on the free list and leaving a duty on burlaps. No burlaps will come in. The bags will come in, of course.

Mr. ALDRICH. Of course.

Mr. VEST. But there will be no necessity for bringing burlaps here, because the entire demand for bags will be supplied from abroad. But the Senator's colleague, the Senator from Iowa, made an argument and wound up by saying that these bags should be put on the free list. As that is in the direction I have been traveling for sometime, and am now traveling, I was entirely willing to agree. I hope it will not be said that it is sectional, because there is a factory in St. Louis engaged in the making of these bags and the proprietor has been more aggressive on this subject than anybody else I know of in this country.

In the next paragraph, 271, will come bagging for cotton. The same doctrine would apply there. I hope our friends will be consistent, and I will go with them, because it has been my contention all the time that these articles should be made free in order to relieve the expenses that are piled up year by year upon the farmers and planters of the West and South. We can not protect them by tariff duties. All we can do is to diminish the cost of the absolute necessities of life, both in the way of what they wear and what they use in preparing their products for market.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I do not believe it is possible to build up the burlap industry in the United States with any amount of tariff you put on. The Dundee manufacturers are being ruined by the manufacturers of India, and as long as the present monetary condition of the world continues there will be no probability of any industry of that kind being built up in this country. India receiving, as it practically does, a bounty upon all its exports of burlaps and bags that they may make, will rule the business of the world in that direction duty or no duty. I do not believe a duty on burlaps or bags made out of that material will be of the slightest benefit to anybody in this country.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 20, after the word "ad valorem," strike out the remainder of the paragraph, as follows:

Bags for grain made of such burlaps 22½ per cent ad valorem.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I desire to inquire if that is a committee amendment or one that the Senator offers originally in the Senate?

Mr. VEST. My colleague on the committee agrees to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "burlaps," in line 18, strike out the remainder of the paragraph and insert the words "and bags for grain made of such burlaps shall be exempt from duty;" so as to make this paragraph read:

Burlaps and bags for grain made of such burlaps shall be exempt from duty.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suppose the Senator from Missouri intends to follow this up by putting bags on the free list. Otherwise he has raised the duty instead of lowering it.

Mr. VEST. I have enlisted under the banner of reform led by the Senator from Iowa and the Senator from Rhode Island, and I will stay with them. If they will make the motion I will vote for it.

Mr. ALDRICH. I am not making any motion in this connection.

Mr. VEST. I am merely an humble private.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from Missouri made the other suggestion.

Mr. VEST. The Senator from Iowa made the last suggestion.

Mr. ALDRICH. The effect of the action of the Senate taken at the suggestion of the Senator from Missouri will be to increase the duty on bags.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. PEFFER. I ask for a division, Mr. President.

Mr. HARRIS. Let us have the yeas and nays. A division will not develop a quorum.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CULLOM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY]. I should vote "nay" if he were present.

Mr. GORDON. I suggest to the Senator from Illinois that we make the same transfer of pairs that we made on the previous vote.

Mr. CULLOM. That is perfectly agreeable to me. I did not see the Senator from Georgia, or I should have made the suggestion.

Mr. GORDON. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] will stand paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY], so that the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] and I will both vote.

Mr. CULLOM. I vote "nay."

Mr. GORDON (when his name was called). I vote "nay."

Mr. MORRILL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. QUAY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN].

Mr. VILAS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON]. I withhold my vote in his absence.

Mr. FAULKNER. I am paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY].

Mr. HIGGINS. I ask if the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not.

Mr. HIGGINS. Then I withhold my vote.

Mr. MILLS. I am paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER].

Mr. FAULKNER. I will make the same transfer that I made with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY] before, pairing the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY], and we will both vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. QUAY. I vote "nay."

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin. I am authorized to vote to make a quorum. I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 5, nays 40; as follows:

YEAS—5.

Kyle,	Perkins,	Power,	Teller.
Peffer,

NAYS—40.

Aldrich,	Dolph,	Jarvis,	Pugh,
Allison,	Dubois,	Jones, Ark.	Quay,
Blanchard,	Faulkner,	Lindsay,	Roach,
Caffery,	Frye,	Lodge,	Sherman,
Chandler,	George,	McLaurin,	Smith,
Cockrell,	Gibson,	McMillan,	Turpie,
Coke,	Gordon,	Mitchell, Wis.	Vest,
Cullom,	Harris,	Murphy,	Walsh,
Daniel,	Hoar,	Pasco,	Washburn,
Dixon,	Hunton,	Patton,	White.

NOT VOTING—40.

Allen,	Davis,	Jones, Nev.	Platt,
Bate,	Gallinger,	McPherson,	Proctor,
Berry,	Gorman,	Manderson,	Ransom,
Blackburn,	Gray,	Martin,	Shoup,
Brice,	Hale,	Mills,	Squire,
Butler,	Hansbrough,	Mitchell, Oregon	Stewart,
Call,	Hawley,	Morgan,	Vilas,
Camden,	Higgins,	Morrill,	Voorhees,
Cameron,	Hill,	Palmer,	Wilson,
Carey,	Irby,	Pettigrew,	Wolcott.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask that paragraph 270 be read, so that I may see how it stands.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The paragraph will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Burlaps containing not over 40 threads to the square inch counting warp and filling, 15 per cent ad valorem.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the bill will be proceeded with.

The Secretary read the next paragraph, as follows:

271. Bagging for cotton, gunny cloth, and all similar material suitable for covering cotton, composed in whole or in part of hemp, flax, jute, or jute butts, 15 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. PEFFER. I move to amend paragraph 271 by striking out in lines 1 and 2, page 69, the words "fifteen per cent ad valorem" and inserting "shall be exempt from duty," so as to read:

Bagging for cotton, gunny cloth, and all similar material suitable for covering cotton, composed in whole or in part of hemp, flax, jute, or jute butts, shall be exempt from duty.

Mr. HOAR. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry as to the time. I wish to know if it is understood by the Senate under the arrangement made taking up these schedules in their order that questions relating to the free list are taken up as the schedules are taken up, or when the free list is reached?

Mr. VEST. I will state in reply to the Senator from Massachusetts that we intended to take these matters up when we came to the free list.

Mr. HOAR. I thought that was the understanding of the Senate. I have no choice about it myself.

Mr. PEFFER. Mr. President, I wish to say in relation to this paragraph and the proposed amendment that cotton stands in the same relation to the commerce of the world that wheat and corn do; that it comes in competition with the same class of material made in other parts of the world by the cheapest sort of labor that has to be sold in a gold market in competition with the products of that kind of labor, and that it as well as wheat and corn is entitled to every possible concession from the manufacturing interests that they can extend to it, for there is no other way by which cotton or wheat or corn can receive any protection through the operation of our tariff laws.

Cotton has to be compressed and put into large bales and covered with this bagging, and if the cotton planters shall have the benefit of free bagging, free material, if you please, you may term it free raw material, because their cotton when it is in bales is the finished product—if they have the benefit of the concession to that extent the revenue laws which are intended to protect manufacturing interests will also protect the agricultural interests. With that simple statement Senators have the entire question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. PEFFER. I shall ask the yeas and nays on the amendment when we come to a vote.

Mr. PLATT. I regret that the Senator has proposed this amendment, as I understand, cotton bagging is made of jute butts and made largely in the South and Southwest. I am sorry to see him propose to strike down a Southern and Southwestern industry in this way.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. President, I hope the amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEFFER] will be accepted on behalf of the committee. We have just adopted an amendment to paragraph 270, which makes free of any tax or duty bags for grain used by the farmers of the West. In another part of the bill I find that binding-twine, used exclusively in the West in putting up the products of that region for the market, is placed upon the free list.

Now, bagging for cotton is to us in the South what binding-twine is to the farmers of the North, and what the grain bags just placed upon the free list are to the farmers in the Northwest. It is a fact that the bagging placed around cotton is an absolute loss to the cotton producer. While it is true that when a bale of cotton is rolled up on the scales and weighed nothing is deducted here in this country in the markets where cotton is sold for the bagging in which the cotton is wrapped, or for the ties that are around the bale, it is nevertheless a fact that the price of cotton grown in the United States and throughout the world is fixed in the great cotton marts of Liverpool and Manchester, and there, as is well known, a tare of 22 pounds per bale is deducted.

So, when you sift it down to the actual fact, the cotton producer of the South gets nothing whatever for the bagging and ties placed around his bale of cotton, and the price of those articles is a dead loss to him.

Under these circumstances, since binding-twine is made free, and since bags for grain have just been made free, it would seem a fair thing to do to make bagging for cotton free also. It seems we are legislating just now in the interests of the farming classes of the United States, and have extended favors just now to the farmers of one section of the country. Let us be consistent and extend like favors to the cotton producers of the South. Let us make bagging for cotton free, as we have just made bags for grain free.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, in 1866 bagging for cotton was controlled by a foreign trust. The price of it was 36 cents a square yard. In 1867 it was 31 cents, and in 1868 it was 28 cents; in 1869 it was 30 cents; in 1870 it was 31 cents. Then in 1870 we put a duty upon this bagging and commenced the manufacture in the United States, and to-day it is manufactured in nineteen different States.

There is a manufactory of it in the State of Texas. These factories make all the bags we use. Now, what has been the effect of that? Capital, induced by the duty to go into this business, has, as I say, gone into it in nineteen States. Now, let me give the price list of this cotton bagging since the duty was imposed upon it.

In 1871 it had fallen to 18 cents a square yard, in 1875 to 13 cents a square yard, in 1878 to 12 cents a square yard, in 1890 to 9½ cents a square yard, in 1891 to 8½ cents a square yard, in 1892 to 7½ cents a square yard. It has gone from 36 cents a square yard down to 7½ cents a square yard, and still the Senator from Louisiana cries out for more protection!

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. President, if the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] had taken up almost any other article mentioned in the tariff bill now pending, he would have found that exactly the same thing is true. Prices have declined all along the line on everything, just as they have on cotton bagging. But that is no reason why the same treatment should not be meted out to bagging for cotton that was meted out just now for bags for grain—make both free of any tax. If the Senator from Maine had inquired into the prices of bags for grain, I think he would have found that the decline in prices has been as great with respect to them as it has been upon bagging for cotton.

But he did not make that argument when the Senator from Kansas and other Senators were proposing to make bags for grain free of any tax. He does make it, however, when it is proposed to adopt the other amendment of the Senator from Kansas which means that the Senate be consistent and extend to the farmers of the South the same favor just now extended to the farmers of the West. If you make bags for grain free of tax, make also bagging for cotton free of tax.

Mr. VEST. The Senator from Maine is mistaken about the price of this article. If he will turn to the Treasury reports on page 249, as to cotton bagging, he will see that it was lower in 1887 and 1888 than at any other time. It was then 2 cents a pound. These bags have 2 pounds to the bag. So you must double these rates. In 1891, which is the last quotation, it was 4 cents a pound. In 1871 it was 5 cents a pound, the next year 4 cents, then 5, and 5, and 4, and 4, and 5, and then 4 again, and then 3, and then 2.

Mr. President, as I said a few minutes ago, I should be very glad if the Senator from Rhode Island or the Senator from Iowa had followed up the suggestion as to putting the bags made out of burlaps upon the free list by also putting these bags for cotton on the free list. As it is a movement in the interest of the cotton planters, I myself hesitated to make the suggestion as coming from the committee. The State of Missouri has about three counties interested in this matter. It is a very considerable interest in my State.

I believe, however, that as a matter of right these bags ought to be upon the free list, because, in the line of general observation that I have frequently indulged in here, it is impossible for us to protect the farmer and the planter. The ingenuity of mortal man can not find a way in which you can extend what our friends call the beneficent influences of the protective system to the agriculturists of this country. All that we can do is to cheapen what they use both as to their persons and in sending their products to market. Therefore whenever I can get a chance to make the burden lighter upon them I shall do so; and I make no opposition, speaking for the committee and for myself, to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. FRYE. Does the Senator from Missouri mean that the committee report in favor of the proposition of the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. VEST. The committee will make no opposition to it.

Mr. FRYE. The Senator from Louisiana says the same reason applies to this that applies to putting grain bags on the free list. I think that may be true, but there was no reason in that. In my judgment, in putting grain bags on the free list, there was no sense or propriety in it.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I did not hear the Senator from Maine argue against it.

Mr. FRYE. I was not present when it was done and did not know until this moment that it had been done. I presume that was done by some one on this side of the Chamber saying something——

Mr. VEST. The suggestion was made by the Senator from Iowa, and I accepted it.

Mr. FRYE. I presume it was done by some one on this side of the Chamber saying something or other that the Senator from Missouri did not fancy, and therefore he immediately retired from the proposition that the committee reported, and put it on the free list.

Mr. VEST. My friend is mistaken. I did fancy it. The Senator from Iowa made the suggestion, and I thought it was so fair and in the right direction that I immediately accepted it.

Mr. FRYE. I have no doubt about it.

Mr. ALLISON. I not only did not make the suggestion, but the suggestion was made elsewhere, as I did not happen to be in the Chamber when that paragraph was voted upon. The only suggestion I made was a suggestion of inquiry to the Senator from Rhode Island, in reply to which I was told that the arrangement of duties here would result in the destruction of our manufacturing industry.

After having made that slight observation, the Senator from Missouri undertakes to hold me responsible for the amendment, which I wholly disclaim. I will give it to the Senator from California now in the chair [Mr. WHITE] and the other Senator from California, who is not present at this moment, and so I absolve the Senator from Missouri from quoting me further upon that suggestion.

Mr. VEST. I would not, under any circumstances, even to pass this bill—and I do not know anything that I desire more than to get rid of it—misrepresent the Senator from Iowa. He knows that, I hope. I think I quote almost his exact words. After asking the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] whether the duty we proposed would cause the production of these bags or the making of these bags and the making of burlaps in this country, and the Senator from Rhode Island said no, then the Senator from Iowa said: "I see no reason why those bags should not go upon the free list." If he did not so state, then I never was more mistaken in my life.

Mr. ALLISON. Of course the reporters know what I did say. I inquired of the Senator from Rhode Island, who is an expert, as to whether, in the first place, these burlap bags were made in this country, and he said they were. I then inquired if the present arrangement of duty was sufficiently large for their production, and he said it was not. Then I said, "If that be true, what objection is there to putting them on the free list?"

That is all I said, and that was after the Senator from California, who is now in the chair, and the other Senator from California had suggested that it was very important to California that they should be placed upon the free list, and having made that observation, I retired from the Chamber for a moment.

Mr. FRYE. I had not completed, and had not yielded the floor.

Mr. ALLISON. I beg pardon.

Mr. FRYE. Go on.

Mr. ALLISON. I retired from the Chamber for a moment, and when I came back I was told that bags had been put on the free list. The Senator from Missouri is entitled to everything he can gather from my observation.

Mr. FRYE. The prices which I gave were taken from the New York Financial Chronicle, as given in the last debate on the tariff.

Mr. JARVIS. Will the Senator from Maine be kind enough to read those prices again?

Mr. FRYE. In 1866 the price of this covering for cotton was 36 cents a square yard, and in 1892 7¼ cents a square yard. The price ran down from 1870, when a duty was placed on this article, from 18 cents a square yard to 7¼ cents.

I want to say a word in relation to this other matter——

Mr. VEST. The prices the Senator quotes were the domestic prices, and not the import prices.

Mr. FRYE. Not the import prices, but the domestic prices.

It seems to me the putting of binding twine upon the free list is the cheapest possible kind of demagogy. If the entire duty—I think it was only seven-tenths of a cent placed on binding-twine in the McKinley act——

Mr. ALLISON. That is all. It was 6.47 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. FRYE. If that whole duty is a tax to be paid by the farmers out West, the enormous amount, by the closest calculation that they would be relieved from, would be 1 cent an acre; and yet I have heard talked of here in the United States Senate the policy of putting on the free list binding twine in the interest of the farmers of the United States, so that they might save a cent an acre!

Here is the industry of making bags established in this country, and bags are lower now than they ever were, and lower than they ever will be again, provided they are put on the free list, because we will be giving up the business, and the men who use the bags will be obliged to pay more for them in less than two years, simply because there is a little talk gotten up here in the Senate about the farmers and getting this article on the free list, and because the Senator from Missouri saw an opportunity to score one against somebody on this side, away they go in the twinkling of an eye on the free list, notwithstanding the committee has reported in favor of having them on the dutiable list—an enormous industry in the United States, an industry which has reduced the cost of the article enormously—and the proposition comes from the Senator from Kansas to put that on the free list and destroy this industry, and the Senator from Missouri rises in his place, acting on behalf of the Committee on Finance, and says that the Senator from Iowa has placed grain bags on the free list, and other Senators have placed binding twine upon the free list, and so he is in favor of putting these coverings for cotton on the free list.

I do not believe in that kind of statesmanship. We are dealing with pretty serious matters in this bill. There is hardly an item here which does not affect somebody, and nearly all of the items affect a great many somebodies, and I do not believe that a bill of this kind ought to be dealt with in that way. If there is an industry entitled to protection, and the committee believe that it is entitled to protection, and if the committees of both Houses reported in favor of it, I do not believe that that protection ought to be surrendered simply because somebody in the United States Senate says what may have been an indiscreet thing; and I do not think the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from Arkansas, representing the Committee on Finance, ought to permit themselves to do this thing.

When the lumber schedule was under argument here there were charges made that there was an enormous duty on planed lumber. The duty on planed lumber was perfectly right. It was not an enormous duty but a fair one, and the most important thing in the lumber schedule. That ought to have been protected. It afforded more protection to more men than anything else in the lumber schedule, yet because somebody charged that it was an enormous duty, and all that sort of thing, immediately the two Senators in charge of the bill permitted it to go on the free list, thus doing immense damage to hundreds of thousands of men and to hundreds of millions of capital in the United States.

Mr. President, I think we ought to deal seriously with these matters, where they have or may have such serious effects.

Mr. JARVIS. Mr. President, the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE], in reading the prices of cotton bagging for the last twenty years, omitted unadvisedly an important fact, that in the year 1889 there was a combination formed in this country by those manufacturing and selling cotton bagging, to put up the price of bagging which the farmers put around their cotton, from 7 cents a pound to 14 cents a pound, and they were enabled to do that because of the high duty by the then existing tariff law upon cotton bagging.

Against this trust and combination the farmers assembled in the country and in villages and declared that they would not submit to such an outrage. I remember well that in the South the farmers brought their cotton into town, wrapping it up in old sugar bags and in old, worn-out sacks of various kinds. They even resorted to the temporary expedient of making bagging out of pine straw, and resorted to every expedient they could devise to defeat that conspiracy and combination which had been formed under the laws which enabled this trust and combination thus to rob the farmer.

Now, sir, here is an opportunity to put this article upon the free list, so that no such conspiracy or combination can be formed in the future; and I trust the Senate will put this necessary article to the farmer upon the free list.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. If the Senator from North Carolina will allow me to interrupt him a moment, I should like to remind him of another fact in connection with this subject. The members of this organization, the manufacturers of cotton bagging, at that time appeared before the Finance Committee of the Senate, and when asked the question as to whether they had made this combination to put up the price of cotton bagging within two weeks from 6 or 7 to 14 cents, answered "Yes, we did; and what are you going to do about it?"

Mr. ALLISON. I think there ought to be just one other word said about that. The Mills bill, so called, which had passed the House of Representatives, had put practically no duty upon cotton bagging, and it was very well understood that these gentlemen were endeavoring to punish the gentlemen on the other side for what they were doing. They did admit practically, as the Senator from Arkansas says, that supposing they would be entirely struck down by what was then called the Mills bill, they thought they would get as much out of cotton bagging as they could for the moment.

Mr. FRYE. If there was such a trust as that to which the Senator from North Carolina has alluded in 1889, it was broken up before 1890, because the price of cotton bagging in 1890 was only 9 cents a square yard, and it went from that down to a little over 7 cents a square yard for domestic cotton bagging. I do not believe that there is any trust or that there has been any in the last three years, and I think the Treasury reports will bear out that statement.

Mr. DOLPH. A few days ago the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] read an Associated Press dispatch——

Mr. ALLEN. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. DOLPH. I shall only take a moment.

Mr. ALLEN. I only want to put a question to the Senator from Maine while he is on his feet.

Mr. FRYE. I am not on my feet for a speech. I only wanted to make a statement, which I have made.

Mr. DOLPH. A few days ago the Senator from Rhode Island read an Associated Press dispatch from Oregon showing the result of the election in Oregon, and showing what the farmers of Oregon thought about the Wilson bill, or the pending measure. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEFFER] was good enough to say "wait until the back counties are heard from." I then stated that the opposition had elected less than 20 out of 90 members of the Legislature. I said I thought when the back counties were heard from the opposition would not exceed 10. Full returns are given in the Evening Star of this city, of to-day, as follows:

PORTLAND, OREGON, June 11

Reliable election returns show that Hermann (Republican), for Congress in the First district, has 9,087 plurality, and that Ellis (Republican), in the Second district, has a plurality of 9,320.

The Legislature stands as follows: Senate—Republicans 19, Democrats 8, Populists 3; House—Republicans 52, Democrats 1, Populists 7. The Republican majority on joint ballot is 52.

Of the 8 Democrats in the Senate 7 are hold-overs and 2 are classed as Populists—one ran as a Populist and the other was elected on a citizens' ticket in Multnomah County. Three Populists were elected two years ago. So the total number of members elected by the opposition to the Republican party of all kinds is 1 Democrat and 1 Populist in the senate, and 1 Democrat and 7 Populists in the house, making 10 out of 90.

Mr. LINDSAY. I should like to ask the Senator a question. I ask if the paper indicates how that very large number of Republicans expect to vote in the election of a United States Senator?

Mr. PLATT. We know how they ought to vote.

Mr. DOLPH. The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LINDSAY] need not trouble himself about that. I am not troubling myself about it.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD] seems to be worried all at once about the possibility that some little inconsistency may be developed in the treatment of the different industries and interests in this bill, and therefore wants cotton bagging on the free list, because he does not want the Senate to do anything inconsistent. Having put grain bags on the free list, and barbed wire and binding-twine, for the benefit of the farmers, he now insists that the Senate must be consistent and put bagging on the free list for the benefit of the cotton-planters.

He did not say anything, I believe, about when this commenced. It began by putting cotton ties on the free list for the benefit of the cotton-planter, but when it comes to the question of consistency, that does not seem to have had a very great deal of consideration in the forming of this bill. We had a duty on rice, which was only reduced 25 per cent, which was 118 per cent before the reduction began.

Then there came up the question of the reduction of the duty on hay, the largest crop of the United States, and in behalf of the farmers who raise hay, a few of us tried to convince the Senate that the same proportional reduction only should take place which had taken place on the rice industry; but that found no supporters on that side of the Chamber.

So, as it seems to me, this question of consistency does not cut very much of a figure in this matter, and I am glad to be able to stand up and say that this ought not to be done, that the industry of manufacturing cotton bagging ought not to be destroyed, because I believe there does not happen to be one single mill of that sort in New England. Therefore I shall not be accused of any sectionalism or any desire to promote the interests of my own section, when I say that I do not think that that industry ought to be destroyed. It is an industry in the West largely and in the South considerably.

It is an industry employing a great deal of capital and a great many men. The proposition now is to turn it over to the tender mercies of foreign manufacturers and foreign trusts because of some supposed benefit which will inure to the cotton planter. It has been admitted that so far as this country is concerned all this cotton bagging is sold at a price which exceeds what the cotton planter pays for it, though it is claimed that in the cotton which goes abroad it is deducted in the way of tare.

But look at it. Whatever may have been the condition with regard to a trust in former times, that trust is broken up, and whatever price that trust may have imposed upon cotton planters, there is no longer any complaint from cotton planters of the price of this bagging. There was no complaint in 1890, and the duty on it under the present law, where it is valued at 6 cents or less a square yard, is only 32 per cent ad valorem, and valued at more than 6 cents per yard, 26 per cent ad valorem, which the pending bill proposes to reduce to 15 per cent ad valorem.

The price has gone steadily down under the manufacture in this country, and if you destroy this manufacture it will go steadily up under the manipulations and the combination of foreign manufacturers. The planter will get nothing. It will simply be the destruction of an industry which I am just as much interested in the preservation of as if it were a New England industry.

I do not know, Mr. President, that this delusion of free trade can ever be eradicated from the minds of the American people until they have had experience with it. It is possible that putting this article upon the free list may operate to give the American people a little experience of what the result of the free traders' logic is really to be. It may be that putting it on the free list will at last convince the cotton planter that when he destroys a manufacturing interest in this country he gains nothing by it, and loses something.

It may be that putting grain bags on the free list will have the effect to convince the Western grain grower than when he destroys an industry in this country the competition in which has reduced the price, he gains nothing by it, but loses something by it. If that should be the effect it is possible that the destruction which is to follow the adoption of this proposition will not have been too dearly purchased.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. PEFFER. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CAFFERY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Montana [Mr. POWER].

Mr. FAULKNER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY].

Mr. GORDON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON].

Mr. HALE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] and vote "nay."

Mr. HIGGINS (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON]. If he were present I should vote "nay."

Mr. MILLS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER]. If he were here I should vote "yea."

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY].

Mr. HIGGINS. I suggest to the Senator from Wisconsin that we transfer pairs, so that the Senator from Wyoming will stand paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON] and we can both vote.

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin. Very well. Then I vote "yea."

Mr. HIGGINS. I vote "nay."

Mr. QUAY (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN].

Mr. VILAS (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. IRBY], and vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CALL. I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. GORDON. The arrangement announced on the other vote will stand on this, and the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] will stand paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY]. I vote "yea."

Mr. BRICE. I desire to announce my pair with the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT], unless there is a question of a quorum, in which case I shall vote.

The result was announced—yeas 34, nays 19; as follows:

YEAS—34.

Allen,	Gibson,	Martin,	Squire,
Berry,	Gordon,	Mitchell, Wis.	Turpie,
Blackburn,	Harris,	Murphy,	Vest,
Blanchard,	Hunton,	Pasco,	Vilas,
Butler,	Jarvis,	Peffer,	Voorhees,
Cockrell,	Jones, Ark.	Perkins,	Walsh,
Coke,	Kyle,	Pugh,	White.
Daniel,	Lindsay,	Roach,
George,	McLaurin,	Smith,

NAYS—19.

Aldrich,	Dolph,	Hoar,	Power,
Allison,	Dubois,	McMillan,	Shoup,
Chandler,	Frye,	Manderson,	Teller,
Cullom,	Hale,	Patton,	Washburn.
Dixon,	Higgins,	Platt,

NOT VOTING—32.

Bate,	Faulkner,	Jones, Nev.	Pettigrew,
Brice,	Gallinger,	Lodge,	Proctor,
Caffery,	Gorman,	McPherson,	Quay,
Call,	Gray,	Mills,	Ransom,
Camden,	Hansbrough,	Mitchell, Oregon	Sherman,
Cameron,	Hawley,	Morgan,	Stewart,
Carey,	Hill,	Morrill,	Wilson,
Davis,	Irby,	Palmer,	Wolcott.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The Secretary read as follows:

272. Flax gill netting, nets, webs, and seines, 30 per cent ad valorem.

The Committee on Finance reported an amendment in line 3, to strike out "thirty" and insert "thirty-five;" so as to read "35 per cent ad valorem."

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I withdraw the committee amendment, and move to strike out "thirty" and insert "forty," in line 3.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 3, it is proposed to strike out "thirty" and insert "forty;" so as to read "forty per cent ad valorem."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The Secretary read as follows:

273. Oilcloth for floors, stamped, painted, or printed, including linoleum, corticene, cork carpets, figured or plain, and all other oilcloth (except silk oilcloth), and waterproof cloth, not specially provided for in this act, 30 per cent ad valorem.

The committee reported an amendment to the paragraph, in line 8, after the word "act," to insert "valued at 25 cents or less per square yard, 20 per cent ad valorem; valued above 25 cents per square yard;" and in line 11, after the word "yard," to strike out "thirty," and insert "thirty-five;" so as to read:

273. Oilcloth for floors, stamped, painted, or printed, including linoleum, corticene, cork carpets, figured or plain, and all other oilcloth (except silk oilcloth), and waterproof cloth, not specially provided for in this act, valued at 25 cents or less per square yard, 20 per cent ad valorem; valued above 25 cents per square yard, 35 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I move, in line 9, to strike out "twenty" and insert "twenty-five;" and in line 11 to strike out "thirty-five" and insert "forty."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas to the amendment of the committee will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 9, page 69, it is proposed to strike out "twenty" and insert "twenty-five;" and in line 11 to strike out "thirty-five" and insert "forty:" so as to read:

273. Oilcloth for floors, stamped, painted, or printed, including linoleum, corticene, cork carpets, figured or plain, and all other oilcloth (except silk oilcloth), and waterproof cloth, not specially provided for in this act, valued at 25 cents or less per square yard, 25 per cent ad valorem; valued above 25 cents per square yard, 40 per cent ad valorem.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The Secretary read as follows:

274. Yarns or threads composed of flax or hemp, or of a mixture of either of these substances, valued at 13 cents or less per pound, 25 per cent ad valorem; valued at more than 13 cents per pound, 30 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I move the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "substances," in line 13, it is proposed to strike out down to the word "pound," in line 15, and to insert after the word "thirty," the word "five;" so as to read:

274. Yarns or threads composed of flax or hemp, or of a mixture of either of these substances, 35 per cent ad valorem.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The Secretary read as follows:

275. Collars and cuffs, and shirts, and all articles of wearing apparel of every description, not specially provided for in this act, composed wholly or in part of linen, and linen hydraulic hose, 35 per cent ad valorem.

The Committee on Finance reported an amendment in line 17, after the word "cuffs," to strike out "and shirts," and insert "composed wholly or in part of linen, 55 per cent ad valorem; shirts;" in line 19, after the word "all," to insert "other," and in line 22, after the word "linen," to strike out "and linen hydraulic hose, thirty-five," and insert "fifty;" so as to make the paragraph read:

275. Collars and cuffs, composed wholly or in part of linen, 55 per cent ad valorem; shirts and all other articles of wearing apparel of every description, not specially provided for in this act, composed wholly or in part of linen, 50 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the words "fifty-five," in line 18, and inserting "30 cents per dozen pieces, and in addition thereto thirty."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed in line 18 to strike out the word "fifty-five" and insert "30 cents per dozen pieces, and in addition thereto thirty;" so as to make the paragraph read:

Collar and cuffs, composed wholly or in part of linen, 30 cents per dozen pieces, and in addition thereto, 30 per cent ad valorem; shirts and all other articles of wearing apparel of every description, not specially provided for in this act, composed wholly or in part of linen, 50 per cent ad valorem.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment as amended.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, we have here an absolutely protective duty, and for one I am very glad of it; we have also a duty which, to all practical purposes, is as high, or higher, than the duty in the McKinley act. I am glad of that, too. It is not a duty which affects anybody in the State of Connecticut. I am glad of that, too.

Mr. PUGH. The Senator is pleased all around.

Mr. PLATT. So I think I may be permitted, without doing any damage to the amendment proposed by the committee, to make some observations with regard to this protective McKinley duty. I do not think it will be quite prohibitory, because there were imported last year, in all, 89,000 dozen collars and cuffs, composed in whole or in part of linen, of the value of $93,000, on which there was $64,000 duty paid.

Those, Mr. President, are the collars which dudes wear, and they would be imported if the tariff were 300 per cent instead of about 60 per cent, as it will be by the pending bill. To be a little more specific, the duty in the McKinley act was 30 cents per dozen and 40 per cent ad valorem. The duty now proposed is 30 cents per dozen, and 30 per cent ad valorem. The equivalent duty under the McKinley bill was, as given, 68.54 per cent.

As it is figured, it will be under the proposed amendment 58.54 per cent, a nominal apparent reduction of 10 per cent in the duty from the McKinley law; but the changed conditions, the fall in price of collars, has been such that at the end of a year's time, when the record is made up, I have no doubt that the average ad valorem will be higher than that given by the duty under the McKinley act. But that is no objection to it, in my mind. I am quite willing that this industry should be continued in the United States.

I congratulate the Democratic Senators that they have given us an absolutely protective and high tariff and, as I believe, prohibitive duty. I congratulate the men and women and girls engaged in this occupation in Troy, that there will be no necessity for reducing their wages; that their wages can be kept up to the point at which they have been kept during the past two or three years, and that there will be no occasion even for a 10 per cent reduction of wages.

Mr. CHANDLER. May I ask the Senator how he can show that? When the duty is kept up on collars and cuffs at the old rate, and when other industries will be destroyed by the reductions which have been made, will not the people who were employed in those industries flock into this highly protected collar and cuff industry, so that the wages willbe lowered?

Mr. PLATT. I hope not. I hope that this industry will be preserved for that radically Democratic city of Troy, and that no Democratic workingman, nor his daughter, nor anybody who has been engaged in this industry, will have their wages reduced one penny.

But it was not so much to congratulate the Democratic Senators on having thus come to this protective duty that I rose, as it was to call attention to this paragraph as illustrating the evolution of tariff reform.

Immediately after the election, as before it, we heard a great deal in this country about tariff reform. It was printed on every Democratic banner before the election, and even after the election it stood in black headlines at the head of the editorial columns of almost all the Democratic newspapers; and even, indeed, when we came to this Congress, when we had this bill reported in another place, which I shall not designate, by a gentleman whose name ought no longer be connected with or attached to it, we were told that this bill embodied the real, genuine tariff reform upon which the election was won. Every speaker who advocated that bill in that place advocated it as a measure of Democratic tariff reform.

I have not heard so much about that recently, Mr. President. Indeed, until the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] to-day cautiously and incidentally mentioned it, I do not think I have heard those words in this Chamber for the last three weeks. The last time I remember to have heard them was when the Senator from Georgia [Mr. WALSH], evidently not understanding the changed condition in the Senate, beat his rub-a-dub on the drum of tariff reform.

This is a paragraph which will bear looking at as well as reading, and I am going to ask to have it reproduced in the RECORD with my remarks in the same type in which it appears in the bill under consideration. It will indeed require the explanations which are to be found on the first page of the bill in order that any reader of the RECORD may understand what represented tariff reform on collars and cuffs at the different stages after this bill reached the Senate.

The paragraph referred to is as follows:

275. Collars and cuffs, ~~and shirts,~~ composed wholly or in part of linen, [fifty-five] thirty cents per dozen pieces, and in addition thereto thirty per centum ad valorem; shirts and all other articles of wearing apparel of every description, not specially provided for in this Act, composed wholly or in part of linen, ~~and linen hydraulic hose, thirty-five~~ fifty per centum ad valorem.

Mr. PLATT. Before this bill reached the Senate, as I have said, it was tariff reform and 35 per cent ad valorem upon collars and cuffs, and a gentleman elsewhere, whom I shall not mention, when he called the roll for this bill, which put a duty on collars and cuffs of 35 per cent ad valorem, said:

This is a roll of honor. This is a roll of freedom; and in the name of honor and in the name of freedom, I summon every Democratic member of this House to inscribe his name upon it. [Loud and prolonged applause.]

That was tariff reform then; and I have heard that his associates were roused to such a pitch of exaltation by the bugle blast with which he summoned them to rally around the standard of tariff reform, that after the "roll of honor" had been made up they bore him in triumph from the Chamber on their shoulders. The Wilson bill came to the Senate, and we heard various suggestions—I shall not say suspicions— that in some way or other the duty of 35 per cent ad valorem on collars and cuffs did not after all truly illustrate the doctrine of tariff reform.

So, when the bill was being concocted in some room in this Capitol, into which we on this side of the Chamber could not get, and afterwards when a Democratic caucus was held and another printed bill, which we have not been permitted to see, was passed around among Democratic members of the Senate, it was all at once discovered that it took 55 per cent ad valorem on collars and cuffs composed wholly or partly of linen, to constitute the real, genuite, simon-pure Democratic tariff reform. So, when the bill came in on the 20th day of March, the caucus having been held some time in February, we found the bill proposed to be amended by putting an ad valorem duty of 55 per cent on collars and cuffs.

I think that would have been protective, Mr. President; but it was not protective enough for somebody. Then there were whisperings. In the meantime the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] informed the Senate that he was compelled by "political exigencies" to submit to something that he did not want to submit to, which he did not believe in and which he was going home to tell his constituents he did not believe in, but submitted to it because he must.

We are told by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] that no Republican should have anything to do with the shaping of this bill. Very frank it was. So on the 7th of May the bill came in perfected by the so-called Jones amendments, and all the Democratic tariff reform which was embodied in 35 per cent ad valorem and then in 55 per cent ad valorem duty on collars and cuffs had disappeared, and the old staff of the tariff reform banner, with the flag all tattered and torn, had graced the head of a procession of Democratic Senators who succeeded in placing a duty of 30 cents per dozen pieces and, in addition thereto, 30 per cent ad valorem on collars and cuffs.

We had just been told a little while before by the Senator from Indiana—I will not say the Senator from Indiana, but by the chairman of the Finance Committee—that this ad valorem business was true, Simon pure, genuine tariff reform, that a specific duty was practically the synonym of protective plunder. That is the way he stated it—the chairman of the Finance Committee, understand.

The object in laying specific duties like these and others is plainly manifest. It is not desirable on the part of protected wealth that the people should know how much tribute they pay, or to what extent they are plundered.

* * * * * * *

It is true that exceptional instances sometimes compel the use of specific duties, but it may be stated as a rule that tariff reform never adopts them if it can be avoided, and that the protectionist, on the other hand, shuns ad valorem rates as guilt shuns discovery.

Ad valorem rates, then, gave the true ring to tariff reform. So in the House of Representatives it was 35 per cent ad valorem on collars and cuffs. When the Democratic caucus had manipulated the bill, after its manipulation in a secret room in this Capitol, it was 55 per cent ad valorem on collars and cuffs. But when the final act comes, in which the protectionist "shuns ad valorem rates as guilt shuns discovery," we find a compound duty, partly ad valorem and partly specific, of 30 cents per dozen pieces, and in addition thereto, 30 per cent ad valorem!

Mr. President, that has been all figured out by the expert of the committee. He tells us that the compound ad valorem and specific duty together will be 58.54 per cent ad valorem; a higher ad valorem duty than is to be found upon any other article of textile manufacture; practically the same ad valorem duty which the wine and liquor schedule averages, which we discussed this morning; that is to average 58.98 per cent, and these collars and cuffs are to average 58.54 per cent.

I believe collars and cuffs, collars certainly, are worn by poor people. They are, as I suppose, articles of prime necessity, about all the Democrats wear them. I think there are few people in the land so poor, so abject, as not to wear collars and cuffs, and yet for somebody, in some way, mysteriously, this tariff reform, which fixed the duty originally at 35 per cent ad valorem, has been so stretched and enlarged that we have now a specific ad valorem duty averaging 58.54 per cent, a duty upon these articles of prime necessity higher than any duty upon any textile fabric or upon the materials made from any textile fabric in the bill.

Why this was it is best, perhaps, not to inquire a great deal. I do not want to hurt anybody's feelings, and I do not want to imperil this duty, because I want it to stand in the bill as an instance of the fact that tariff reform upon a discussed subject means McKinley duties pure and simple.

I have my own ideas about how this occurred. There is an old saying that "if you scratch a Russian you will find a Cossack," and my observation has taught me that whenever you scratch a protective amendment in this bill you find a Democrat under it. [Laughter.]

Perhaps that is enough to say with relation to how this protective duty came to be inscribed in this bill as an illustration of the beauties of tariff reform.

I should like to go into this subject a little more at length, but I have not the time this evening; I am very anxious to get on with the bill; but it would be an exceedingly instructive half hour which might be spent here inquiring what has become of the professions of tariff reform on which the election was carried. But I refrain, Mr. President, and I close with a single remark illustrative of the course of tariff reform in the Senate, a sort of a parody on those famous lines of Bret Harte:

> For ways that are dark
> And tricks that are vain,
> This tariff reform is peculiar.

[Laughter.]

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I do not wish to discuss this matter at this time, except to ask a word of explanation of the honorable Senator from Missouri as to whether articles which are covered by this provision are, in the opinion of the committee, a luxury or a necessity?

Mr. VEST. Both.

Mr. ALDRICH. In the absence of the Senator from New York, who, I suppose, would naturally be expected to understand and defend this duty, I should be glad to have the Senator from Missouri, who is now present and who for the moment seems to be alone in the protection of this bill, to state whether this is a revenue duty or a protective duty?

Mr. VEST. A revenue duty of course. [Laughter.] I am astonished the Senator should ask me that question.

Mr. ALDRICH. Imposed solely for the purpose of raising revenue?

Mr. VEST. As a matter of course—a revenue duty.

Mr. ALDRICH. Would the Senator state about what per centage ad valorem it would be upon the ordinary kinds of collars and cuffs?

Mr. VEST. Oh, Mr. President, the Senator does not want any information from me about the tariff.

Mr. SQUIRE. How much revenue will be derived from it?

Mr. ALDRICH. I received a letter to-day from a very extensive importer, in which he said this duty would amount to 150 per cent on the kind of collars and cuffs which the ordinary people of the country wear. I should be glad to have that statement confirmed or otherwise by the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. VEST. It seems to me that a Senator whose political stomach can stand 240 and 250 per cent on common wool clothing, ought not to gag at this duty on collars and cuffs.

Mr. ALDRICH. But the Senator from Missouri has a much more sensitive stomach than that, and I wanted to find out what was the limit of his endurance in this regard.

Mr. VEST. I have been associated with the Senator from Rhode Island so long that I have fallen into a few of his habits. I propose to get rid of them after this bill is disposed of; but for the present I leave him to explain this duty for himself.

Mr. CHANDLER. We are obliged to stand anything which is necessary for the other side to do to get this bill through, and once in awhile we are gratified with a protective duty and are disposed to cackle a little—to use the sweet and expressive word which the Senator from Missouri used in this debate—and we do not refrain from cackling over this vindication of Republican principles because the junior Senator from New York [Mr. MURPHY] cackles also.

I do not understand that the Senator from New York should be criticised for getting his share of what goes to the so-called conservative Senators on the other side of the Chamber. The Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] who early in this debate grouped these Senators—and I think he spoke this afternoon on this subject—will be obliged to rearrange his group, and perhaps absolve everyone of them.

Some dozen or fifteen Senators, it was rumored early in the session, had organized either to prevent the passage of this bill or to secure a modification of it, and they have gone on and secured the necessary modifications of the bill.

The Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN], who spoke so smoothly the other day about this bill and its future passage, which was soon to take place, said to us that the bill as it came from the House could not have commanded a majority of the Senate, that the bill as reported by the committee could not have commanded a majority vote in the Senate, but the Senator from Maryland took pleasure in announcing that then the Democratic party was united, and the bill was about to pass.

Then the Senator retired from the Chamber and we have not seen him since. We trust that if he is not well, that he will soon be restored to health, and that we shall see his cheerful and joyous countenance with us before this bill is put upon its passage.

The Senator from Maryland omitted to tell us, in his modesty, that the two situations of which he spoke were created by him. He omitted to tell us that the bill could not pass the Senate as it came from the House because he and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICE], as the two ringleaders of the conservative party, organized to prevent its passage. He did not tell us the bill as reported by the Finance Committee could not pass this body because he and the Senator from New York organized a conservative party in order to prevent its passage in the form in which it then stood.

The Senator omitted to tell us much history which he might have usefully given to the Senate concerning this bill. The Senators composing the conservatives of whom I have spoken, the group of Senators whom the Senator from Maine has described, went on and got what they desired.

It was first necessary, however, to capture and hold securely the Populists upon the other side of the Chamber, and they have been taken care of by free binding-twine, free barbed wire, and free lumber; and it may be that they are even now setting other traps for the Populist Senator who so pleasantly associates with Senators upon this side of the Chamber. At any rate, the Populist party was conciliated and taken care of.

Then the conservative Senators from Maryland, West Virginia, and Alabama, and the conservative Senator from Ohio were conciliated by a duty on iron ore and a duty on coal. Thus one after another the conservatives began to disappear. I do not know whether the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH], who made so brave a speech against the income tax, has been sufficiently conciliated or not, but time will tell upon that point.

Under those circumstances, however, who can blame the genial junior Senator from New York for consenting to be conciliated? Why should any one criticise if he, in the general wreck of the conservative party among the Democrats, accepted at the hands of this generous committee a duty practically prohibitive upon collars and cuffs?

Mr. President, as I understand, cotton collars and cuffs, which were dutiable under the McKinley law, have disappeared from the list; and under the duties which are now proposed, with the fall in prices which has taken place—which fall in prices upon other articles has been used by Senators upon the other side of the Chamber as some justification for reductions which they have made from the McKinley law, amounting to from one-fourth to one-half of the existing duties—the fall in prices has been such that upon the cheapest linen collars and cuffs, worth, say two and a half cents apiece, the two and a half cents duty derived from such collars and cuffs will be 100 per cent.

Then there is 30 per cent ad valorem in addition. The duties upon the cheapest linen collars and cuffs under this bill will be 130 per cent, and they will not be lower than 80 per cent in the case of any collars and cuffs which will be imported.

Mr. President, that makes the duty almost prohibitive. The present duty has practically given the manufacturers of Troy a monopoly of the collar and cuff business. There have been substantially no importations of cotton collars and cuffs, and very few importations of linen shirts, and, as stated by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT], only importations of about $92,000 worth of linen collars and cuffs under the present duty.

With the fall of prices which has taken place, the duty which is now proposed, of 30 cents a dozen and 30 per cent ad valorem, is a prohibitive duty, and the monopoly of the manufacture of collars and cuffs for this country is pretty nearly given to the city of Troy, the Senator's own home; and the Senators upon the other side of the Chamber, as well as the Senators upon this side, will undoubtedly vote to give that duty, and to present that testimonial of the protectionists in this Chamber to the junior Senator from New York as an evidence of the appreciation in which his associates hold one of the most distinguished of the conservative party to which I have alluded.

Mr. President, one other question remains. Is the last remaining conservative to be conciliated? Is the income tax to be thrown over in order to pass this bill? I sincerely hope that the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from Arkansas are making up their minds to perform the last act of conciliation. When they concede the exclusion of the income tax from this bill and everything has been made dutiable which seeks a duty, except lumber and wool, they can then perform the last acts of mercy and I hope we shall have them reconsider their action upon lumber, put a duty upon wool, satisfy the farmers of the United States, and strike out the income tax from the bill and thus conciliate us all.

If this could be done, while I think the bill would be like a leopard, spotted with a little protection here and a little destruction there, I should have a feeling that it might possibly pass the Senate. It would not be satisfactory to me and would not be a bill then constructed upon any consistent principle, such as a protectionist would advocate, or such as the Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS], who wishes to destroy all protection, would advocate; but it would be a bill which, while destroying many industries, would allow other industries to survive; the country would be saved from the Populist income tax, and, as I said, I think if all this could be done, the Senators upon this side of the Chamber would be willing to agree to fix a time when a vote might be taken upon the bill.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, I was not very successful in securing an explanation of the provisions of this paragraph from any Senator on the other side of the Chamber, and I assume, from their continued silence, that I shall not be able to obtain such an explanation.

But there is another portion of this paragraph, however, to which I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Missouri. After fixing a rate upon collars and cuffs which is amply protective, as I think Senators on the other side might be willing to admit, the paragraph goes on in this way:

> Shirts and all other articles of wearing apparel of every description, not specially provided for in this act, composed wholly or in part of linen, 50 per cent ad valorem.

Paragraph 258, which we have adopted to-day, reads as follows:

> 258. Clothing ready made, and articles of wearing apparel of every description, handkerchiefs, and neckties or neckwear, composed of cotton or other vegetable fiber, or of which cotton or other vegetable fiber——

Including, of course, linen—> is the component material of chief value, made up or manufactured wholly or in part by the tailor, seamstress, or manufacturer, all of the foregoing not specially provided for in this act, 40 per cent ad valorem.

Here is one paragraph that fixes a duty upon "wearing apparel of every description * * * composed of cotton or other vegetable fiber at 40 per cent ad valorem," and another which fixes the duty "on wearing apparel of every description * * * composed wholly or in part of linen at 50 per cent ad valorem."

Mr. VEST. I should like to ask the Senator from Rhode Island, as a matter of information in which we are all interested, whether he does not think that the words "not specially provided for in this act" would meet the criticism he is now making?

Mr. ALDRICH. Those words are used in both paragraphs. They are alike in that respect.

Mr. VEST. The provision fixing 50 per cent ad valorem, which we are now considering in the pending paragraph, is certainly a special provision.

Mr. ALDRICH. It applies, according to its terms, to shirts and all other articles of wearing apparel of every description, and paragraph 258 applies to all articles of wearing apparel of every description, and both have the limitation "not specially provided for in this act." They are both general clauses.

Mr. VEST. There can be no trouble about that.

Mr. ALDRICH. Perhaps there is no trouble about it, but it is very evident that two different rates of duty are imposed by these paragraphs upon the same articles. Under the similitude clause, I suppose, they would all pay the higher rate of duty, 50 per cent ad valorem, unless specially enumerated in either paragraph; but the only articles enumerated in paragraph 258 are handkerchiefs, neckties, or neckwear, and the articles enumerated in paragraph 275 are shirts, which would pay 50 per cent, while handkerchiefs, neckties, and neckwear would undoubtedly pay 40 per cent; but the two paragraphs are open to the same construction, and with the similitude clause operative also, these articles would pay 50 per cent. That, perhaps, may be what the Senator desires, and I am inclined to think it is what ought to be done; but certainly there is an apparent inconsistency in rates.

We have two or more paragraphs applying to the same articles—I have recited two of them—other paragraphs of the bill apply to wearing apparel composed of other material; for instance, the woolen schedule contains a paragraph fixing a rate for wearing apparel at 45 per cent, and we have also a provision in this schedule applying to miscellaneous manufactures, flax, hemp, jute, etc., of 35 per cent. So that we have in various parts of this bill paragraphs applying to similar miscellaneous manufactures of 35, 40, 45, and 50 per cent.

I suggest to the Senator from Missouri that at some time before the bill passes the Senate, these inequalities, which I suppose have arisen from the various degrees of pressure exercised by different conservative Senators on various portions of the bill, may be equalized, and that we shall have some one rate, perhaps an average rate of say 45 or 50 per cent, which will apply to all similar wearing apparel. If this is not done there will be inextricable confusion in the administration of the law.

Before I sit down, in answer to the question of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], as to whether I am satisfied with this rate, I desire to say I am perfectly satisfied. I will add, if this entire tariff bill had been constructed on the collars-and-cuffs basis, there would have been no remonstrance or criticism from this side of the Chamber as to a single item.

What I am criticising is that only a small portion of the bill is builded on the collar and cuff basis, and that portion is comparatively unimportant. We have had within the last half hour some manufactured articles put upon the free list, and upon others a rate of duty of 125 and 150 per cent placed, and the latter articles are of no more consequence than the former, and no better entitled to protective duties.

I know it is too much to expect any consistency in the preparation of this bill, but I do think that some of these manifest and glaring defects should receive attention, and at some time before final action is taken I trust that some corrections will be made.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, we do not seem to get much explanation from the Senators in charge of this bill in regard to this particular item.

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] the other day was polite enough to say in regard to this side of the Chamber that they cackled over the Oregon election. I am afraid there is a gander somewhere on the other side of the Chamber who has been sitting about twelve weeks on a cuckoo's egg, who does not seem disposed to cackle just now, or even to crow over this item.

Mr. President, this bill was introduced by the honorable chairman of the Committee on Finance with a statement of principle; and although I suppose that honorable Senator has left the detail of some of these matters to his lieutenants, yet he is still in command of his army. He used this language:

> Darkness and deception lurk in the very principle of specific rates of duty.
> * * * * * * * *
> This is the favorite device of high protection.
>
> * * * * * * * *
> That the people should know how much tribute they pay, or to what extent they are plundered.

And the Senator gave as an illustration the specific duty on shirt buttons. He said it was no consolation for an Indiana farmer who paid one-sixth of 1 cent, as it turned out to be on ciphering on the buttons on his shirt, so that he would get six buttons additional at a duty of a cent, to know that that was covered up by a specific duty.

Here it is proposed to add to the high ad valorem duty of 50 per cent on the shirt, 30 cents a dozen on cuffs and collars, which the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] says is a little over 100 per cent ad valorem, and a specific duty. I should like to know on what principle that is vindicated. I think we are entitled to some explanation, as are the American people, as to what is the reason of putting on every man's shirt in this country this plunder; what is the reason for cheating every Indiana farmer, not only a sixth of 1 cent—I believe that is taken off—but cheating every Indiana farmer to the amount of 150 per cent on his shirt and his shirt collar.

Will the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] kindly tell us? The Indiana farmer is ready for revolution against these plundering outlaws and robbers, when he pays a sixth of a cent on his shirt buttons, and yet he is going to pay an addition of 30 per cent ad valorem, over 100 per cent, on his collars and cuffs, more than thirty times as much, and he is going to be comforted by the fact that that is what his favorite statesman, the great and good Senator from Indiana recommends, the great economist of this generation, the champion of the oppressed and plundered Democracy, against the wicked robber barons, and he, indeed, is responsible for it. Will not the Senator from Texas tell us?

Mr. MILLS. With the greatest pleasure in the world.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to hear it.

Mr. MILLS. I thought you would come to me directly, and I was just waiting for you, and came over close by you on purpose.

Mr. HOAR. I am glad to see the amiable smile on the Senator's countenance.

Mr. MILLS. We found ourselves in a situation where it was necessary to make this concession in order to prevent some other barons, who were engaged in plundering the people of the United States out of about $300,000,000 on woolen goods and $125,000,000 on cotton goods, and in order to reduce that plunder about $150,000,000 on woolen goods and not so much on cotton goods—very little, I believe, on them—we thought we could afford to stand a little rise on collars and cuffs.

Mr. HOAR. Ah, Mr. President, that is not the way to state it. The Senator is not standing "a little rise on collars and cuffs;" he is doing a little cheating and stealing himself, according to his account. He takes to the highway with his bludgeon in his hand, and says, "There is a man on the highway who is plundering at large; and therefore, in order to discourage him, I will take to the byways and lanes, and do a little plundering myself."

That is the difficulty; but I should like to have the Senator go a little further. I ask him how is it that it was necessary to do this? How did it happen that his friends on the Democratic side of the Chamber, who are a clear majority, would not have voted for this bill if the principle of the Senator from Indiana had been carried out?

Mr. MILLS. Your friend from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] has been discussing all the conservatives and knows more about the matter than I do, and he knows what is the fact. The Senator had better cross-examine him.

Mr. HOAR. I do not think the Senator quite answers this cross-examination. I did not talk about the Senator from New Hampshire, who knows it and has the facts, as I dare say; but I want to get the facts out of this witness, who, when I was addressing the court on a legal proposition, stood up and volunteered his testimony, and have him say how it was necessary to get votes to pass the bill, and what votes are they?

Mr. MILLS. The Senator knows that. He asked me for the facts, and I gave him the facts, and I answered that the bill could not be passed without concessions.

Mr. HOAR. Why not?

Mr. MILLS. I do not want to go into particulars.

Mr. HOAR. Why?

Mr. MILLS. The Senator wants me to go into our family affairs, and is asking me to discuss matters he has no right to know. I deny the jurisdiction of the court to institute the inquiry. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOAR. The Senator seems to me to use Burke's phrase—I do not use it in the offensive sense—but Burke spoke of a gentleman in the British Parliament who had sneaked out of a difficulty which he had boldly strutted into. Of course that phrase of Burke is not applicable to so gallant and chivalrous a Senator as my friend from Texas. He said he would tell why it was that this thing had to be done.

Mr. MILLS. I told you why.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator gets up and asks us why is it necessary to pry into their family secrets. The American people will want to know the policy of the party which is governing this country, they will want to know why it is that they have got to be taxed and plundered, as the Senator says, and when asked the reason the answer is, it is a family secret. This is the first time I have ever heard in an economic discussion such a doctrine avowed.

Mr. President, it is not a family secret and it is not a necessity. This breach of the promise made to the New England manufacturers to put coal and iron on the free list can not be vindicated by the Senator from Texas, or anybody else, on the ground that they can not pass their bill without it, for every Senator from a coal producing State has risen in his place and declared that he should have voted for the bill which the majority of the Democratic party supported whether coal had been free or had been protected.

It is not the necessity of passing this bill, which the President in advance said he approved, and which the House of Representatives have sent us; it is the fear of popular indignation in the election and it is the hope of saving some Southern or Northern communities interested in certain manufactures which is inducing the Democratic party to put these things, which they say are crimes, robbery, and plunder—I do not say so—into this measure.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator from Massachusetts allow me?

Mr. HOAR. It is another delusion, a mistake, a pretense, that this bill is made up in this way because they can not pass a better one. It is made up in this way because they can not face the popular indignation with a worse one.

Now I yield to the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask the Senator from Texas, through the Senator from Massachusetts, the question, whether any assertion could be made—I think no assertion has been made—that any Senator sitting upon that side of the Chamber would have voted against this bill, unless this duty on collars and cuffs had been put in?

Mr. MILLS. The Senator from Rhode Island showed on the floor of the Senate some weeks ago that he knew more about this business than I did, and there is no use of him asking me questions. The Senator knows all about this thing from top to bottom, from center to circumference.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, the substance of it then is, when there is a departure in pleading, my honorable friend from Texas pleads guilty and throws himself on the mercy of the court. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JARVIS in the chair). The question is on the amendment proposed by the Committee on Finance as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The Secretary read as follows:

276. Laces, edgings, embroideries, insertings, neck ruffings, ruchings, trimmings, tuckings, lace window curtains, and other similar tamboured articles, and articles embroidered by hand or machinery, embroidered or hemstitched handkerchiefs, and articles made wholly or in part of lace, ruffings, tuckings, or ruchings, all of the above-named articles, composed of flax, jute, cotton, or other vegetable fiber, or of which these substances or either of them, or a mixture of any of them is the component material of chief value, not specially provided for in this act, 40 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I move to strike out the words inclosed in brackets in the printed bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 2, page 70, after the word "curtains," to strike out "and other similar," and in line 3, after the word "embroidered," to strike out "or hemstitched."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALDRICH. I move the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Rhode Island, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 9, page 70, it is proposed to strike out "forty" and insert "sixty;" so as to read, "60 per cent ad valorem."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. PEFFER. I move to amend the amendment by striking out "sixty" and inserting "seventy-five."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas to the amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. PEFFER. Mr. President, these are articles which are properly classified among the luxuries for which people are well able to pay if they wear them; and according to the rule which I have adopted for myself, at least, that the luxuries should bear the burdens and not the necessaries, I think 75 per cent is not too high a duty on this class of articles.

Mr. VEST. The Senator from Kansas, I know, is laboring under a mistake about this matter. These are not articles of luxury. The units of value show that they are the cheapest sort of cotton embroideries, used by servant girls and people not able to buy any better. It is as much a matter of necessity to them, considering their social rank, as any article can possibly be. These are not the fine laces of the rich and luxurious, but they are the commonest laces and the plainest articles of everyday wear by women in the lower classes of life. Some of these laces are very fine, it is true, but I speak of the large majority of them.

Mr. CULLOM. Are there no other classes of laces than those described in this paragraph in the bill anywhere? The Senator says these are common laces of the poorer people.

Mr. VEST. As a matter of course, this embraces all of them, but I am speaking of the large mass embraced in this paragraph which are not of high value. It is an ad valorem duty.

Mr. ALDRICH. The suggestion of the committee in regard to this paragraph means a reduction of over $3,000,000 in revenue to be derived from articles of pure luxury. Notwithstanding the statement of the Senator from Missouri, I say there is not an article in this paragraph which is not an article of luxury, an article of voluntary use.

Mr. VEST. And of high value?

Mr. ALDRICH. Of high and low value. Most of them are, of course, of high value. This includes all the laces, except silk laces; the finest of the high-priced cotton laces, all the high-priced linen laces, all the laces used by the rich people of the country; and if there is any article in the bill upon which a high revenue duty should be levied it is upon the articles contained in this paragraph. To reduce the revenue $3,000,000 upon articles of this kind and increase duties, as Senators on the other side propose to do, upon sugar and other necessaries of life is an outrage upon the American people.

Mr. CULLOM. I find that paragraph 301 reads:

Laces and articles made wholly or in part of lace, and embroideries, including articles or fabrics embroidered by hand or machinery, etc.

Mr. ALDRICH. Those are laces composed of silk. That paragraph includes all the other laces. Of course, cotton laces and linen laces are the most expensive laces. They are used by the rich people of the country. The finest laces in the world are included in this paragraph, and I desire to have the yeas and nays upon my amendment, which restores the rate in the existing law, which is 60 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. VEST. I am compelled to ask the Senator from Rhode Island if this is an outrage, what was the McKinley law in regard to this provision?

Mr. ALDRICH. The rate in the McKinley law was 60 per cent, which I think is a fair revenue duty upon this class of articles. I think revenue ought to be derived by an imposition of high rates of duty upon articles of pure luxury.

Mr. VEST. Does the Senator not think these duties are high enough on these very fine laces which are used by rich and luxurious people?

Mr. ALDRICH. I think we should probably collect as much revenue at 60 per cent as at seventy-five. Some of these articles are easily smuggled. If we put the duty too high, of course it would only lead to fraud and evasion of the law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs upon the amendment proposed by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH].

Mr. HALE. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CAFFERY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Montana [Mr. POWER], whom I do not see in the Chamber, but I have a right to vote to make a quorum. I vote "nay."

Mr. FAULKNER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY], but I transfer that pair to the Senator from Georgia [Mr. WALSH], and vote "nay."

Mr. HALE (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM] to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], and vote "yea."

Mr. HIGGINS (when his name was called). I announce my pair with the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. MILLS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER]. If he were here I should vote "nay."

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY].

Mr. VILAS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL]. The Senator from Delaware [Mr. HIGGINS] is paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON]. I suggest to the Senator from Delaware that we transfer our pairs, so that the Senator from New Jersey will stand paired with the Senator from Oregon, and we can both vote.

Mr. HIGGINS. That will be satisfactory to me.

Mr. VILAS. I vote "nay."

Mr. HIGGINS. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON] to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. IRBY], and vote "nay."

Mr. GORDON. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] to the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL], which relieves the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] and myself, so that we may both vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. LODGE. Under that arrangement I am at liberty to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. CALL. I announce my pair with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL]. If he were present I should vote "nay."

Mr. GEORGE. I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH].

Mr. FAULKNER. I see that the Senator from Georgia [Mr. WALSH], to whom I transferred my pair with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY], has returned to the Chamber and voted. I shall therefore be compelled to withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 22, nays 28; as follows;

YEAS—22.

Aldrich,	Frye,	McMillan,	Shoup,
Allison,	Hale,	Patton,	Squire,
Chandler,	Higgins,	Peffer,	Teller,

So the amendment was rejected.

The Secretary read the next paragraph, as follows:

277. All manufactures of flax, hemp, jute, or other vegetable fiber (except cotton), or of which flax, hemp, jute, or other vegetable fiber, except cotton, is the component material of chief value, not specially provided for in this act, 30 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. In lines 12 and 13, I move to strike out the words "flax, hemp, jute, or other vegetable fiber, except cotton," and insert "these substances, or either of them."

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask the Senator if that is not ungrammatical?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Perhaps the word "is" ought to be "are."

Mr. GRAY. I do not think so. Is the Senator from Massachusetts quite right about that?

Mr. HOAR. It is a debatable question, but I think it is better as the Senator from Arkansas now leaves it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arkansas make it "is" or "are"?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I think the word "is" is correct. Let it remain "is."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. In line 15, I move to strike out "30" and insert "35;" so as to read: "35 per cent ad valorem."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. In my absence some days ago the Senator from Arkansas was kind enough to pass over an item in regard to spectacles, which is a manufacture largely carried on in my district. I desire to address the Senate very briefly on that matter to-morrow morning, if the Senate will take it up now and let it go over until to-morrow.

Mr. VEST. I ask the Senate to go back to paragraph 258, page 66.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the paragraph will be read.

The Secretary read the paragraph, as follows:

258. Clothing ready made, and articles of wearing apparel of every description, handkerchiefs, and neckties or neckwear, composed of cotton or other vegetable fiber, or of which cotton or other vegetable fiber is the component material of chief value, made up or manufactured wholly or in part by the tailor, seamstress, or manufacturer, all of the foregoing not specially provided for in this act, 40 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. VEST. In lines 14 and 15 I move to strike out the words "or other vegetable fiber," so as to confine it to cotton.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the adoption of the amendment?

Mr. ALDRICH. There is objection, because those words will have to be put in paragraph 275.

Mr. VEST. What words?

M. ALDRICH. The words "or other vegetable fiber. I suggest to the Senator from Missouri to leave that for the present. It will need, I think, a careful comparison of the various paragraphs to arrange it properly.

Mr. VEST. It can be passed over, but I do not think that is necessary.

Mr. ALDRICH. It will be necessary to put something in its place.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The paragraph will be passed over for the present.

Mr. HOAR. I ask consent that the Senate go back to paragraph 98, on page 19, relating to spectacles, which was passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts requests that to-morrow morning the Senate shall take up the paragraph indicated. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. PEFFER. I understand that Schedule K is to be passed over until tomorrow morning. Is my understanding correct?

Mr. HARRIS. That will be the result. I will say to the Senator that it will not be taken up this evening.

Mr. PEFFER. I wish to give notice that to-morrow morning as soon as Schedule K is taken up I shall move to amend the first paragraph by inserting the provisions of the present law with relation to the duties on raw wools, excepting that the rate of duty will be decreased about 40 per cent. I shall have the figures arranged in the morning.

Mr. QUAY. I desire to announce that to-morrow when the woolen schedule is reached for consideration it is my purpose to resume the remarks on that schedule which were interrupted some four week ago.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After eight minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 6 o'clock and 6 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, June 12, 1894, at 10 o'clock a. m.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate June 11, 1894.

SURVEROR OF CUSTOMS.

Buchanan Schley, of Maryland, to be surveyor of customs in the district of Baltimore, in the State of Maryland.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEY.

W. Oscar Hamilton, of Texas, to be attorney of the United States for the northern district of Texas.

APPOINTMENT IN THE ARMY.

To be post chaplain.

Ruter W. Springer, of Illinois.

PROMOTIONS IN THE MARINE CORPS.

First Lieut. Randolph Dickens, United States Marine Corps, to be a captain.

Second Lieut. Cyrus S. Radford, United States Marine Corps, to be a first lieutenant.

Second Lieut. Thomas C. Treadwell, United States Marine Corps, to be a first lieutenant.

PROMOTIONS IN THE NAVY.

Passed Assistant Engineer Warner B. Bayley, to be a chief engineer.

Assistant Engineer Martin A. Anderson, to be a passed assistant engineer.

POSTMASTERS.

Samuel J. Tetley, to be postmaster at Farmington, in the county of St. Francois and State of Missouri.

William K. Spiller, to be postmaster at Bridgeport, in the county of Jackson and State of Alabama.

W. M. Dunklee, to be postmaster at Christiansburg, in the county of Montgomery and State of Virginia.

Joseph J. Wharton, to be postmaster at Morgantown, in the county of Monongalia and State of West Virginia.

James J. White, to be postmaster at Oakland, in the county of Alameda and State of California.

Nicholas C. Stanton, to be postmaster at West Liberty, in the county of Muscatine and State of Iowa.

William H. Morgan, to be postmaster at Northumberland, in the county of Northumberland and State of Pennsylvania.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, June 11, 1894.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by Rev. EUGENE R. HENDRIX, D. D., of Kansas City, bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church South.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday was read and approved.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. ELLIS of Kentucky, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. GROSVENOR, for one week.

To Mr. WILSON of Ohio, indefinitely, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. O'NEILL of Missouri, on account of ill health.

To Mr. PAYNTER, indefinitely.

PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH OF BETHEL SPRINGS, TENN.

Mr. ENLOE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 725) for the relief of the trustees of the Presbyterian Church of Bethel Springs, Tenn.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the trustees of the Presbyterian Church in Bethel Springs, Tenn., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $400, being for the use, occupation, and damage to said church by the Army of the United States during the late war.

Mr. ENLOE. I would like to have an amendment striking out the word "damage," and making the clause read "for use and occupation." I ask unanimous consent that the bill be amended in that way.

The SPEAKER. The question is first on consent to consider the bill. Is there objection?

Mr. COOMBS. Reserving the right to object, I would like to have some explanation of the bill, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Speaker, this is one of the claims which arose some thirty years ago, and I think it had better be considered with other claims of that class on Friday. I object to it.

Mr. ENLOE. I will state to the gentleman from Michigan that this is a Republican church, in a Republican community. The people are all loyal there, and they vote his ticket.

Mr. BURROWS. I do not care whether it is Republican or Democratic. I do not care about their politics, one way or the other.

Mr. ENLOE. It is sufficient for the gentleman that this claim comes from a Southern State.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

WILLIAM A. WINDER.

Mr. BOWERS of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill (H. R. 450) to restore William A. Winder to the Army, and to place him on the retired list with the rank of captain of artillery.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President is hereby authorized to appoint and restore to his proper rank in the Army, as captain of artillery, and to place him on the retired list, William A. Winder, of San Diego, Cal.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. ENLOE. Let us have the regular order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. I hope the gentleman will withdraw that demand. I want to ask unanimous consent for the consideration of a bill which has been pending for several years here.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ENLOE] demands the regular order.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. I hope the gentleman will withdraw that demand.

Mr. ENLOE. If I can not have a bill considered by unanimous consent once during a session, no other man shall.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. I have not had a bill considered in that way in three years.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 1950) to authorize the Pennsylvania and New Jersey Railroad Companies, or either of them, to construct and maintain a bridge over the Delaware River between the States of New Jersey and Pennsylvania.

The message also announced that the Senate had passsd with amendment the bill (H. R. 5778) to supply a deficiency in the grant of public lands to the State of Mississippi for the use of the State University; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. 2710) for the relief of Edward Morrison and Nellie Morrison, now deceased; and

A bill (H. R. 6126) to amend an act to authorize construction of a bridge at Burlington, Iowa, approved August 6, 1888, and amended by act approved February 21, 1890.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requestsd:

A bill (S. 210) for the relief of Wetmore & Brother, of St. Louis, Mo.;

A bill (S. 544) to reclassify and prescribe the salaries of railway postal clerks; and

A bill (S. 1301) for the relief of the legal representatives of Hiram Somerville.

PRESIDENTS' MESSAGES, PROCLAMATIONS, ETC.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a privileged report from the Committee on Printing.

The report was read, as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, April 3, 1894.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed and bound in cloth 3,000 copies of the complete compilation of all the annual, special, and veto messages, proclamations, and inaugural addresses of the Presidents of the United States from 1789 to 1894 inclusive; 800 copies for the use of the Senate and 2,000 copies for the use of the House. The work shall be prepared under the direction of the Joint Committee on Printing.

The committee have considered the concurrent resolution introduced by Mr. BAILEY, of Texas, into the House of Representatives on April 3, 1894, which was referred to this committee, and which provided for the printing and binding in cloth of 3,000 copies of the compilation of all the annual, special, and veto messages, proclamations, and inaugural addresses of the Presidents of the United States from 1789 to 1894 inclusive, and direct me to report the same with the recommendation that it do pass.

The committee are of the opinion that these various public documents consolidated into one publication will be of great historic value. They do not exist in such form. It is almost impossible to refer to them in their present form of publication. The demand for such a publication as a public document as is contemplated by the resolution is so obvious and manifest no argument need be adduced therefor by the committee.

The compilation provides very properly that the work shall be prepared and printed under the direction of the Joint Committee on Printing of the two Houses of Congress.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, is that resolution open to amendment?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. HEPBURN. Then I move to strike out "3,000," and insert "10,000." It seems to me that in the case of a publication of such importance an edition of 10,000 would not be at all too large. I know of no publication which would be of more general interest. Three thousand copies would hardly be enough for the public libraries of this country, to say nothing about private libraries.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. This is a valuable publication, and if the gentleman will move an amendment to make the number 6,000, 2,000 for the Senate and 4,000 for the House, I will not object.

Mr. HEPBURN. Very well; I move that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was adopted.

REPORT OF BUREAU OF ETHNOLOGY.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I desire to report from the Committee on Printing a resolution for printing the annual report of the Director of the Bureau of Ethnology. The printing of this document has not yet been ordered, although it is provided for in the printing bill passed by the House.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed at the Government Printing Office 8,000 copies each of the thirteenth and fourteenth annual reports of the Director of the Bureau of Ethnology, with accompanying papers and illustrations, and uniform with the preceding volumes of the series, of which 1,000 shall be for the use of the Senate, 2,000 for the use of the House of Representatives, and 5,000 for distribution by the Bureau of Ethnology.

The report was read, stating the estimated cost of the printing at $12,000, and recommending an amendment striking out such of the resolution as provides for the printing of the thirteenth annual report, the same having been already ordered.

The amendment of the committee to strike out after "8,000 copies" the word "each," and to strike out before the word "fourteen" the words "thirteen and," was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was adopted.

The committees were called for reports, and no reports were presented.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HEARD. This being District day, I desire to call up a bill now on the Calendar, reported from that committee——

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. This being District day, will it be necessary to postpone each of the bills which may be presented by the District Committee before it will be in order to move to go into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of appropriation bills?

The SPEAKER. Under the practice that would be necessary. This day being assigned to the Committee on the District of Columbia, that committee may call up any matter of District business which is on the Calendar, but upon each bill as called up the question of consideration may be raised.

POLICE FUND OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. HEARD. I desire to call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 7238) making permanent provision for the police fund of the District of Columbia.

Mr. HEPBURN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Two weeks ago, when we were engaged in the consideration of District business, we had a bill pending when the House adjourned. I wish to inquire whether the regular order does not require the taking up of that bill now.

Mr. COOMBS. The gentleman refers to a bill with reference to a suburban railroad?

Mr. HEPBURN. Yes, sir.

Mr. HEARD. According to my understanding of what has been the uniform practice, it is optional with the committee what bill on the Calendar they shall call up for consideration.

Mr. HEPBURN. But the House was engaged in the consideration of that bill.

Mr. HEARD. I understand that; but on the same day the House had under consideration another bill which was laid over for want of a quorum. So that, as far as that matter is concerned, the question would be as to which one of those bills would have precedence; I suppose it would be held that the bill first laid aside and with which the House had farthest progressed would take precedence.

Mr. COOMBS. But I suggest to the gentleman that the bill to which he now refers was withdrawn from the consideration of the House.

Mr. HEARD. Only temporarily.

The SPEAKER. The rule provides that—

The second and fourth Mondays in each month shall, when claimed by the Committee on the District of Columbia, be set apart for the consideration of such business as may be presented by said committee.

Mr. HEARD. The bill which I now call up will not, I think, receive one adverse vote in the House. The bill to which the gentleman from Iowa has referred will probably be contested; it may be passed or may be defeated. The bill I now call up demands immediate action. It provides for replenishing the police fund of this District which, as the Chief of Police informs us will, without this provision, be entirely depleted within a month. The immediate necessity for action on this bill and the fact that it will, as I assume, meet with no opposition is the reason I propose bringing it first to the attention of the House.

Mr. HEPBURN. Is it your intention to call up afterward the bill that we were considering the other day?

Mr. HEARD. In perfect candor I will say to the gentleman that upon consultation with the committee it is my purpose to call up after this bill is disposed of, a bill drawn by the Commissioners and approved by the committee, to provide for the extension of the Georgetown cable road to a point opposite the Aqueduct bridge, a measure which we believe will meet with no opposition, and then to revert to those bills which have heretofore been considered and left undisposed of.

I was about to appeal to the House, in view of the importance of this measure, that we may have order while the bill is being read, and the report of the committee. The report of the committee is practically the report made by the Chief of Police, Maj. Moore, covering all of the facts in connection with the matter.

Mr. DINGLEY. Should not this bill be considered in Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER. The bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. HEARD. It is on the Union Calendar, and, if the point of order is made, it would have to be considered there. I would ask, however, unanimous consent that it be considered in the House.

Mr. DINGLEY. I desire to make some observations on an opinion recently given by the attorney of the District Commissioners, and if I can have an opportunity for that I shall not object to the request of the gentleman.

Mr. HEARD. It will afford me pleasure to extend every facility that the gentleman from Maine may desire in the way of discussion.

Mr. DINGLEY. Then I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri to consider this bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall hereafter, beginning July 1, 1894, set aside and retain each fiscal year $30,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, of the moneys received for municipal licenses issued for the sale of intoxicating liquors in said District, and deposit the same with the Treasurer of the United States to the credit of the police fund, and apply the same, as far as may be necessary, to carry out the provisions of "An act making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes," approved February 25, 1885, for the relief of any policeman who, by injury received or disease contracted in the line of duty, or, having served not less than fifteen years, shall become so permanently disabled as to be discharged from service therefor, and in case of his death from such injury or disease, leaving a widow or children under 16 years of age, for their relief: Provided, That such relief shall not exceed for any one policeman or his family the sum of $50 per month, and shall not be paid to a widow who remarries; and a sum not exceeding $75 may be allowed from said fund to defray the funeral expenses of any policeman dying in the service of the District.

Mr. HEARD. I desire to have the report of the committee read, as it states the case more fully and completely than I could do it myself.

The report (by Mr. HEARD) was read, as follows:

The Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7238), making permanent provision for the police fund in the District of Columbia, having examined and considered the same, report it back to the House and recommend that it do pass.

Your committee respectfully submit herewith a statement by Maj. W. G. Moore, superintendent Metropolitan police, which fully explains the propriety and necessity for the enactment of such legislation as is proposed in this bill, together with interesting and valued information bearing on this subject. Also the report of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia recommending said bill.

HEADQUARTERS METROPOLITAN POLICE,
DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.
Washington, April 22, 1894.

SIR: The police pension fund will be depleted another month, and thereafter it will be a question as to how 19 disabled policemen, 30 widows, and 28 children will derive a livelihood. The persons enumerated have been a charge upon the fund at a monthly expenditure of $1,685. The nucleus of the fund on which they have been dependent was created by act of Congress, August 6, 1861. This provision reads as follows:

"All fines imposed by the board of police upon members of the police force, by way of discipline, and collectable from pay or salary, and all rewards, fees, proceeds of gifts, and emoluments that may be paid and given for extraordinary services of any member of the police force, except when allowed to be retained by such member, shall be paid to the treasurer of the board of police, unless otherwise appropriated by the board," and, with "all moneys arising from the sale of unclaimed goods shall constitute the 'policeman's fund.'"

The board of police was made the trustee of this fund, and empowered to invest it as they should see fit. The same law provided that "whenever any member of the police force, in the actual discharge of his duty, shall become actually disabled, his necessary expenses, during the time of such disability, on the certificate of a competent surgeon, stating the manner, cause, and condition of the injury, and approved by the board of police, may become a charge upon the policeman's fund; but the board may discontinue such allowance for any satisfactory reason."

This law being incomplete in that it made no allowance for officers who might be discharged on account of permanent disability incurred in the line of duty, the following provision was incorporated into the act making appropriations for the expenses of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and approved February 25, 1885:

"That hereafter the Commissioners shall deduct $1 each month from the pay of each policeman, which sum so deducted shall be added to and form a part of the present police fund, to be invested in the United States or District bonds by the Treasurer of the United States, and be held by him subject to the drafts of the Commissioners for expenditures made in pursuance of law, and such expenditures shall be accounted for as required by law for other expenditures of the District; and said police fund shall be used for the relief of any policeman who, by injury received or disease contracted in line of duty, or having served not less than fifteen years, shall become so permanently disabled as to be discharged from service therefor; and in case of his death from such injury or disease, leaving a widow or children under 16 years, for their relief: Provided further, That such relief shall not exceed for any one policeman or his family the sum of $50 per month; and a sum not exceeding $75 may be allowed from said fund to defray the funeral expenses of any policeman dying in the service of the District."

At the time of the passage of this law, which became immediately operative, a large number of policemen who had been on the force from the time of its organization in 1861 were eligible to retirement under its provisions. Up to that time the Department had been in existence twenty-four years. Since the law became operative ninety-one allowances have been made upon the recommendation of an impartial board, composed of the captain of police, two lieutenants, and the attending surgeon of police. These allowances range from the maximum of $50 to the minimum of $10 per month, as provided by law, and an examination of the papers submitted to the accounting officers of the Treasury in each case will reveal the fact that the highest pension was given only to those by whom it had been justly earned. Physical condition, cause of disability, length and kind of service were taken into consideration, the evidence of the police surgeon who attended the applicant during his active career or at the time his disability occurred furnishing the principal basis for the award.

In the eight years which have elapsed since the law went into effect but 19 policemen have been granted the maximum of $50, while 1 has been allowed $40, 4 $30, and 5 $25 per month. Some of these have died. One widow has been given $30, 3 $25, and 26 $20 per month; 32 dependent children have been awarded $10 a month until they should reach the age of 16 years.

Under the law approved February 25, 1885, the report of the Treasurer of the United States shows that the Commissioners had in their charge, under the original act of 1861, a total cash fund of $27,469.10, which was turned over to the Treasurer of the United States, the ex-officio Commissioner; and the same report, the first year after the Treasurer became the custodian of this fund, shows that the sum paid for the benefit of policemen amounted to $2,534.48, and each succeeding year from that time shows increasing demands upon the fund, until in 1893 the sum of $19,420 was required to sustain those dependent upon it, an increase of over 666 per cent in eight years. It must be remembered that during the period covered the Metropolitan police force was increased from a total of 267 men to 449, and the dollar apiece required to be paid by each member of the force each month, together with about $100 from fines and rewards turned in to the fund, would be far from adequate to keep up the monthly expenditure even at its present rate of $1,685 per month.

Therefore I have to urge, as one of the most important questions that now concern this Department, that Congress make immediate provision to care for those who have been heretofore dependent upon the pension fund and those who may be dependent hereafter. This matter has been considered in all its phases, and I am fully convinced, as I have already expressed myself to and urged upon the members of this committee, that the best means to provide for this emergency, and for ensuing years, is to set aside from year to year, from sums paid the District of Columbia as excise or liquor-license fees, a sum sufficient to meet such demands.

As to the amount required, I have the honor to invite your attention to my letter addressed to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia under date of October 21, 1893, wherein I asked "that the sum of $3,951.88 be included in the deficiency estimate for the ensuing fiscal year, to enable this Department to continue in effect the provisions of police-relief act of Congress approved February 25, 1885," and stated that "the current rate of expenditure is about $1,710 per month, and will be $20,520 for the year, leaving a deficiency, provided there are no further retirements and funeral expenses to defray, of $3,951.88." For the support of those now dependents, and at the same rate and under the usual conditions of retirements and funeral expenses, there would be required for the fiscal year 1895, $24,463.20.

In this connection I have to state that the police pension fund has become a permanent feature in the police institutions throughout the United States. No city, in fact, has a well-regulated police organization without a fund of some kind from which to provide for the relief of its sick or disabled policemen, or their widows and orphans. These funds are maintained in various ways. In New York City, on the 1st of January, 1891, the largest proportion of the fund was derived from excise money paid over by the comptroller, it amounting to $234,277.50, the amount disbursed being $487,727.99, making provision for 1 inspector, 16 captains, 58 sergeants, 9 roundsmen, 511 patrolmen, 25 doormen, 7 detectives, 2 surgeons, 350 widows, 58 orphans—in all 1,037.

In Brooklyn the fund for 1892 amounted to $157,304.43, of which $78,590, or 50 per cent, was derived from excise fees.

In the city of Boston legislative enactment requires compulsory retirement at the age of 65 on one-half pay. The payment on account of pensions during the year 1892 was $61,065.31, and the board of police of that city estimated that $69,500 would be required for the purpose in 1894.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, yours,

W. G. MOORE,
Major and Superintendent Metropolitan Police.

Hon. JOHN T. HEARD,
House of Representatives.

OFFICE COMMISSIONERS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
Washington, June 1, 1894.

DEAR SIR: The Commissioners of the District of Columbia recommend favorable action upon the bill (H. R. 7238) "making permanent provision for the police fund of the District of Columbia," which was referred to them at your instance for their views thereon.

Very respectfully,

JOHN W. ROSS,
President Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

Hon. JOHN T. HEARD,
Chairman Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. HEARD. All I desire to say, Mr. Speaker, in addition to what is set forth in the report is this: A fund was created—a police pension fund—for the benefit of disabled or superannuated policemen in 1861. This was added to in 1886 by the addition of a certain amount deducted from the pay of the members of the police force. This fund now is grossly inadequate, and the proposition is to add $30,000 a year, or so much as may be necessary, from moneys received from liquor licenses in the District. That is all the bill contemplates. It is recommended by the Commissioners of the District and unanimously by the Committee on the District of Columbia.

I yield to the gentleman from Maine so much time as he desires.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I understand the pending bill provides to set apart $30,000 per annum of the receipts from the excise taxes for the purpose of increasing the fund for the benefit of the disabled or superannuated policemen in the District of Columbia. This is a civil-service pension.

It appears that in 1861 certain fines that had been imposed on policemen, and also the proceeds of certain unclaimed property, were set apart as a police pension fund——

Mr. HEARD. That is right.

Mr. DINGLEY (continuing). For the benefit of such policemen as might become disabled or superannuated. Now, it is proposed to add to this fund a sum of money to be taken from the ordinary sources of taxation in the District.

Mr. HEARD. Let me say to the gentleman that again in 1886 this fund was increased by deducting $1 per month from the pay of each policeman and adding it to said fund.

Mr. DINGLEY. In 1886, as the gentleman says, a deduction of $1 per month from the pay of each policeman was authorized to increase this fund.

Mr. HEARD. Which is now found to be exhausted.

Mr. DINGLEY. That is to say, this pension fund has been a fund which came from certain fines, and from the payment by the police force themselves from their salaries, which is entirely proper, but it is now proposed to divert the receipts or revenues derived from taxation to increase the fund some $30,000 a year. I desire simply to call attention to the fact that this bill is the beginning of a civil-pension policy.

Mr. HEARD. I will state to the gentleman that if he will refer to the report accompanying this bill he will find that in New York, Brooklyn, and Boston this fund is taken largely from the proceeds of the excise taxes.

Mr. DINGLEY. It is well to take into consideration, in considering this bill, the question of policy whether or not we propose to begin the establishment of a civil-service pension under the Government; for when we set apart $30,000 at this time, probably twice that sum will be needed within a year or two, and by and by we will have the system thoroughly established, and it will begin to extend itself to other departments.

But what I rose particularly to call attention to was, since we are on the subject of excise taxes, as to whether the chairman of the Committee of the District of Columbia has any information that the attorney of the District Commissioners has recently given an opinion that a simple application for a license, while it continues as an application, and has not been rejected by the Commissioners, is a license within the meaning of the act of March 3, 1893, which prohibited the licensing of persons to sell liquor within 400 rods of a church or schoolhouse, but provided in an amendatory act that those dealers who were licensed at the time the act passed would be exempted from its provisions.

It is stated in the daily papers that the attorney of the District Commissioners has delivered an opinion that it does not require an actual existing paper license at the time, but if the application is pending it is held to be a license within the meaning of the act of March 3, 1893, and the act amendatory thereof.

Mr. HEARD. Replying to the inquiry of my friend from Maine, I will say that I have no information on the subject except what I have derived from my conversation with him a day or two ago when he directed a similar inquiry to me. I have not seen any notice of such decision in the city papers.

I will say, Mr. Speaker, if there has been any publication of that kind it has escaped my notice.

Mr. DINGLEY. I noticed the opinion published at length in the Evening Star of this city.

Mr. HEARD. If that publication gives the opinion correctly, and as now stated by the gentleman from Maine, it seems to me an extraordinary opinion, that the filing of an application for a license is equivalent to the granting of a license!

Mr. DINGLEY. That is, during the time that it has not actually been rejected by the Commissioners.

Mr. HEARD. I will say, however, that I have no information on that point. I have not even seen the publication to which the gentleman from Maine refers.

Mr. DINGLEY. The opinion was published in the Evening Star, and is to the effect that I have stated, and I agree entirely with the chairman of the committee that it is a most extraordinary opinion. It practically overrides the provisions of the act of March 3, 1893, which prohibited licenses for the sale of intoxicating liquors within 400 feet of a church or schoolhouse, with certains exceptions made by an amendatory act as to those then licensed.

It is in effect an overriding of the act of March 3, 1893, and I desire simply to call the attention of the District Committee to this extraordinary attempt of the attorney of the District Commissioners to override in this manner an act of Congress. If there is any intention on the part of the District Commissioners to act under the opinion rendered by their attorney, it is extremely desirable that some amendatory act should be immediately reported by the committee in order to make clear what Congress intended by the act of March, 1893.

Mr. HOLMAN. Will the gentleman from Maine state the effect of that act of 1893?

Mr. DINGLEY. The act of March 3, 1893, according to my recollection—I have not the act before me—prohibited the granting of licenses to liquor saloons within 400 feet of a schoolhouse or a church. There was subsequently an amendatory act passed, which excepted from the operation of that prohibitory provision those establishments that were licensed at the time the act went into effect.

Now, under that provision, designed to relieve four or five parties, as I understand, the attorney of the District Commissioners, according to a publication in the daily Star of this city, has given an opinion that any liquor seller who had an application pending for a license at that time, notwithstanding the application was rejected subsequently, but not rejected until after the passage of the act of March 3, 1893, was, within the meaning of the act of March, 1893, and the act amendatory thereof, licensed, and therefore that he may continue to be licensed, although carrying on his trade within 400 feet of a church or schoolhouse.

Mr. HEARD. I will suggest that if that is a correct statement of the opinion of the attorney, it would seem to me in substance that it establishes the fact that the only man outraged was the man whose license was rejected, for those who were licensed stood on the same ground only as those whose applications were not considered.

Mr. DINGLEY. It is an outrage that ought not to be permitted to go on.

Mr. HEARD. I think that if on investigation it be found that such opinion has been rendered, the law to which it refers ought to be amended.

Mr. DINGLEY. But what purports to be the opinion of the attorney for the Commissioners has been published.

Mr. HEARD. There may be a mistake about it, and I hope there is, but if the published statement correctly sets forth the opinion it occurs to me the gentleman is right in suggesting that the law may need some further amendment.

Mr. DINGLEY. I merely desire to call the attention of the committee to this attempt to override a deliberate enactment of Congress in the interest of these men conducting business illegally within 400 feet of a church or schoolhouse. I have nothing further to say.

Mr. HEARD. I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. COOMBS].

Mr. COOMBS. This bill is in the line of the practice of a great many cities, of contributing from the license fund toward the police pension fund.

Mr. HEARD. I will say in furtherance of the statement just made by the gentleman, that in Brooklyn in 1892 the fund amounted to $157,000 in round numbers, of which $78,000, or about one-half, was derived from excise fees, the same as proposed in this case.

Mr. REED. Will the gentleman from Missouri allow me?

Mr. COOMBS. I can not yield the floor.

Mr. HEARD. I will yield to the gentleman from Maine later.

Mr. COOMBS. There is a very general feeling at this time that it will be wise to do away with this way of providing funds for that purpose. It is beginning to be looked upon as an unwise thing to connect the police as beneficiaries with the question of licenses.

It is a part of the duty of the police to see that laws governing licenses are not violated. The plan now proposed for Washinton, and now in use in several cities, creates a relation between the two that is believed by many to be prejudicial to good order. I make that point against the bill, Mr. Speaker; and I make the further point that it is an unwise thing to divert any revenues before they are actually paid into the Treasury. This bill proposes to give the police commissioners, who collects these funds, the right to divert $30,000 before it goes into the public Treasury.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. How much does this entire fund amount to?

Mr. COOMBS. I do not know. I believe in a police pension fund; I believe in having a fund that will warrant men in taking risks when risk is necessary, but I do not believe that the fund ought to be diverted out of any money collected from taxes of any kind until that fund is converted into the Treasury. There should be no indirect appropriations; it opens the doors to unlimited abuses.

I think that the chairman of this committee will agree with me that that is good Democratic doctrine. I am sorry that I can not vote for the bill, but I shall not for these two reasons: First, it is unwise to connect the police as beneficiaries with the license fund. It brings them into a relationship with the liquor dealers which is not wise, proper, or in the interest of public order. In the second place, I think it is unwise to divert any funds before they go into the Treasury. Let the fund be paid into the Treasury and then let a regular appropriation be made if it is necessary, and I will vote for it.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman allow me one moment?

Mr. COOMBS. Certainly.

Mr. COX. Does not this question presented here involve this point in its practical application? You collect from the whisky dealer an amount of money assessed, and then you take that fund and make it a kind of trust fund for the benefit of policemen.

Mr. COOMBS. Yes; before you pay it into the Treasury.

Mr. COX. Wait a moment. I am not talking about that. Now, where is the authority to take the fund that the licensed dealer pays and appropriate it as a fund for retired policemen?

Mr. HEARD. I will say that there is no authority except it be given by this bill.

Mr. COX. When you take this fund, collected from the licensed dealer, and appropriate it in that way, do not you make the Government of the United States pay half of it? I ask you that question.

Mr. HEARD. You just appropriate that much of the collection.

Mr. COX. That results in the Government of the United States paying half of it.

Mr. HEARD. I suppose it is like any other payments. I say that the practice and the effect would be that the amount collected by the District and appropriated to this use would lessen the amount if put into the Treasury.

Mr. COX. Precisely; so that the effect is the same as if you appropriated any money out of the Treasury of the United States to pay these pensions.

Mr. HOLMAN. To pay civil pensions.

Mr. COX. That is just what it is.

Mr. HEARD. Let me say to the gentleman——

Mr. COX. Let me state that with my understanding of the bill this will be a diversion of the funds that now go into the Treasury, and which make up that which the District has collected, and one-half of the expense will have to be paid by the General Government.

Mr. HEARD. Precisely.

Mr. COX. That is what I understand to be the case.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. But, if the gentleman will pardon me, this pension fund, as I understand it, is to come out of the District revenues?

Mr. COX. No, no: it does not.

Mr. HEARD. I think, upon reflection, that the gentleman from Illinois is right, that the United States Government is obligated to appropriate only as much from the Federal Treasury as is contributed by the District for the current expenses. I did not clearly understand the position of the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. COX. Well.

Mr. HEARD. Now, this fund comes out of the money collected in the District, and it would not go into the Treasury for current expenses. The amount which the General Government would have to contribute, being equal to that furnished by the District, would, therefore, be less by that amount; and therefore we would not appropriate so much by that amount.

Mr. COX. Pardon me. Let us get down to it practically. Suppose the amount paid for the license by the licensed dealers amounts to $30,000. Suppose you take that $30,000 and pay it to the policemen under this regulation. Of course the revenues of the District would be that much less, and the Government of the United States would lose its half of that $30,000, which would require an assessment on it for the half.

Mr. HEARD. Now, the gentleman has asked me a question and I will answer him.

Mr. COX. That is what I want.

Mr. HEARD. I think the gentleman is wrong, for this reason. Suppose, for instance, you raise $2,030,000 in the District; then, under the act of 1878, the Federal Treasury would have to appropriate two millions and thirty thousand. Now, if the thirty thousand is diverted to this use without going into the Treasury, then it does not increase by a dollar the amount the Government has to contribute, but will lessen it, because then the Government will have to contribute only two millions in order to offset the two millions contributed by the District.

Mr. COX. Does not that diminish the amount of the fund?

Mr. HEARD. It diminishes the amount in the District fund. I think the gentleman is wrong in this. It does not increase the amount the Government contributes, because the limit of the Government contribution is the amount contributed by the District to the general fund. Therefore, if the District puts $2,000,000 into the District fund we have got to put into that fund just an equal amount, but we have not to put in anything for the $30,000 that has been diverted for this particular purpose.

Mr. COX. Suppose, now, that the District of Columbia diverts $30,000 of the two million and thirty thousand dollars; after that has been diverted, then, when the expenses of the District of Columbia require so much money and an assessment is made on the property of the District to raise it, does not the Government have to bear its share of that?

Mr. HEARD. The effect of that would be to lessen the amount that the Government would contribute by just the amount which was diverted to this purpose.

Mr. COX. If that is so, you had better appropriate it all.

Mr. HEARD. Mr. Speaker, the point is clear, I think, to most of the gentlemen who have heard this dialogue that the amount which the Government, under our present compact, has to put in, is the exact amount which the District contributes, and if you lessen the amount which the District puts in from taxation, you do not increase, but on the contrary, you lessen the amount which the Government has to put in. Now, if you take $30,000 of the taxes collected in the District and divert it for this purpose, that makes $30,000 less that the Government has to put in to equal what the District puts in.

Mr. COX. So your argument means this, that if the District of Columbia raises $2,000,000 by assessment the Government must meet that with two millions on its part?

Mr. HEARD. That is correct.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. The gentleman from Tennessee does not state the case correctly. The Government of the United States does not contribute an amount equal to the amount which is assessed upon the District. There is the point where he falls into error. There is a large amount over and above the amount which is expended on the District expenses which remains in the District treasury.

Mr. HEARD. But the amount contributed by the Government is equal to the amount contributed by the District for the same purpose.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. That is correct.

Mr. COX. That is my proposition.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. But the argument of the gentleman from Tennessee is based upon the idea that the Government of the United States contributes dollar for dollar the amount that is raised by taxation in the District; which is not the fact. The District of Columbia raises a certain amount of money by taxation and appropriates, out of the sum so raised, the amount which is required to pay the current expenses of the District, or rather half the current expenses.

Mr. COX. Who pays the other half?

Mr. COBB of Alabama. The Government of the United States pays the other half of the current expenses of the District. Now, it is perfectly plain that if an amount of money is collected from the taxpayers of the District which never goes into the Treasury, that amount of money will not have to be duplicated by the Government of the United States. The Government will not have to pay a dollar of it. It is just so much money over and above the current expenses of the District, and the Government has nothing whatever to do with it. It is only the money that is appropriated out of the Treasury for the current expenses of the District that the Government of the United States has to meet by contributing a like amount.

Mr. COX. Now, I have listened with great patience to the gentleman, and I ask him to yield to me a moment.

Mr. COOMBS. I will yield to the gentleman for a moment, for I believe I still have the floor. [Laughter.]

Mr. COX. I understand the point to be that if the government of the District of Columbia makes an assessment for a certain purpose, and that money does not go into the Treasury of the United States, then the Government of the United States is not called upon to pay a corresponding amount?

Mr. HEARD. That is correct.

Mr. COX. Then the gentleman's argument is that this $30,000 is paid by the District?

Mr. HEARD. Certainly.

Mr. COX. That it is an extra amount which is paid by the District of Columbia, and that the Government does not have to pay a corresponding amount?

Mr. HEARD. That is correct.

Mr. COX. Now, do not you gentlemen see at once that if that $30,000 was paid into the Treasury of the United States for the District of Columbia it would reduce the amount that the Government would have to pay toward the expenses of the District?

Mr. HEARD. No, sir; on the contrary, it would add to it.

Mr. COX. The gentleman has not met my point yet.

Mr. HEARD. I think I have.

Mr. COX. Suppose out of $150,000 of taxation raised by the District, $30,000 obtained as license tax is taken out; that reduces the District fund to $120,000, so that the Government of the United States has to meet by taxation only that amount.

Mr. HEARD. That is right.

Mr. COX. Now take your $30,000 and put it over into the District account and compare it with your expense account, and you will see the effect.

Mr. HEARD. I ask my friend to wait a moment and listen to my answer to that point. I stated in the first place, and I think it was generally understood, that the amount which the Government of the United States has to contribute to the current expenses of the District is limited to the amount contributed by the District treasury; the Government's contribution must simply be equal to that. When, therefore, you reduce the amount contributed to the District treasury, you lessen the contribution of the Government instead of adding to it. If there were an obligation resting on the Government to make up to the District treasury any deficit which might arise after this joint contribution, the gentleman would be right; but there is no such agreement; the limit of what the Government contributes is the amount contributed by the District for current expenses. Therefore, when this District fund is reduced $30,000 we thereby lessen to that extent the contribution of the Government instead of adding to it.

Mr. COX. I am sorry we do not agree on this point.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Now, if the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COX] will give me his attention——

Mr. COX. With pleasure.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. I will give him a little information as to how the moneys of the District are distributed or paid out.

Mr. COX. I think I can see how this proposition will work.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. In this connection, I think I can show to the gentleman from New York [Mr. COOMBS] the reason why in this case there is some propriety in diverting this fund before it reaches the public Treasury, although I agree in the main with the principle on which the gentleman's proposition rests.

An assessment of a certain percentage is made by way of tax on the citizens of the District of Columbia, and in that way a certain amount of money is raised which goes into the Treasury. It is no part of the law that the Government of the United States is to expend an amount equal to the amount which the taxpayers of the District have paid into the Treasury, and there is the gentleman's error. The only money which the Government of the United States pays is an amount equal to the amount required to be expended for public purposes in the District—not the amount collected from the taxpayers. Does not the gentleman see the distinction?

Here is, we will suppose, $3,000,000 collected from the taxpayers of the District, which goes into the public Treasury. The amount needed to be expended in the city for public purposes is we will suppose, $5,000,000, of which the amount paid by the District is two millions and a half, and the amount paid by the Government two millions and a half, leaving in the Treasury $500,000 collected from the taxpayers. This balance remains there for any proper expenditure that may be made under any act of Congress.

Now, here is a proposition to pay $30,000 for a specific purpose. The proposition is that the taxpayers of the District shall pay this; that the Government of the United States shall pay none of it. If this amount, $30,000, should be deposited in the Treasury and should be considered a part of the regular expenditures for District purposes, then the Government of the United States would have to pay the same amount, because the agreement by law is that the Government of the United States shall pay half of the current expenses of the District. But it is quite evident that this is an extra fund, not going into the public Treasury, not used for ordinary District purposes; and the Government of the United States will not have to pay a dollar on account of this amount raised from the citizens. This fund of $30,000, collected in a certain way and used for a certain purpose, is something outside of the ordinary expenditures of the District, and with this outside expenditure the Government of the United States has nothing to do.

Mr. GROUT. In fact the Government gains by it.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Yes; the Government gains by it. If this money going into the Treasury were considered an ordinary District expenditure, the Government of the United States would have to appropriate an equal amount; but the proposition of this bill is to take this proposition out of that category, to make it a separate fund for a specific purpose; and the District taxpayers alone contribute to this fund. It seems to me this proposition is too plain for argument.

Mr. DINGLEY. I wish to ask the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. COBB] whether the Congress of the United States is not bound to exercise the same discretion and care in making these appropriations out of the District funds that it would in making an appropriation from the United States Treasury? Is not the objection primarily here to initiating the policy of civil pensions to be paid by taxation, no matter whether the funds come from the people of the District or the people of the country at large? The principle is one which seems to me exceedingly unwise.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Very well, I shall not take issue with the gentleman on that point. I am not talking about the underlying principle, but simply endeavoring to state what this proposition is.

My proposition would be, or rather I would prefer the proposition, to let all money go into the public Treasury and let the Government of the United States pay its part in any proper expenditure, considering it as a part of the regular District expenditures. I think that would be better; but the members seem to prefer the bill in the other form.

Mr. DINGLEY. If it is to be done at all, it certainly should be done in that way.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. I say I would prefer that myself; but the proposition comes here in a different shape, and seems to be acceptable, or to meet favor with the members as to how this particular fund should be paid, that is, by the taxpayers of the District alone. If that principle is to prevail this bill carries it out and the Government of the United States is not called upon to pay a dollar. I am simply trying to get my friend from Tennessee to understand that point. I am not defending the principle on which the bill rests.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the gentleman from New York will yield to me for a few moments.

Mr. COOMBS. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HOLMAN. I simply rise for the purpose of calling attention to the fact that this discussion is, after all, a mere abstraction. The United States Government has to carry on the District government, and this proposed pension system of the District police is simply a diversion of a certain amount from the sum raised by taxation for a specific object; but the burden, after all, of deficiencies falls on the Federal system.

But I rose mainly to call attention to a fact that was mentioned on the floor a few years ago when the subject of the civil pension list was under consideration. The fact was stated—I have not looked over the journals of the proceedings of the Convention which framed the Constitution of the United States, to see for myself if it was correct or not—but it was stated that during the sittings of that constitutional Convention, some gentleman, possibly Robert Morris, proposed a provision prohibiting Congress from creating a civil pension list, a subject with which the men of that period were well acquainted. One of the causes of the hostility to the British system of government at that time was the extraordinary expenditure induced by the civil pension list, which was impoverishing that country; and very naturally a proposition was made to incorporate into the Federal Constitution, a provision against granting pensions for any civil service whtaever.

Mr. COX. They were right there.

Mr. HOLMAN. John Rutledge or Ben. Franklin, I am not sure by which member of the Convention it was, said that the provision was unnecessary; that with the experience of European governments before the American people and which would be always before the American people, if they should ever reach that condition of affairs that they were willing to tax themselves—the whole people—to pay pensions for civil services rendered by the few, with sufficient salaries, the spirit of liberty and of equal rights would have so completely died out that no constitutional provision against special privileges would be of any avail.

For one I protest against entering upon or extending that policy. I admit that we did take a step in that direction some years ago in relation to the Federal judiciary at a time when the subject could not receive proper consideration. It was during the period of reconstruction. But I implore the House not to go beyond that. It is discouraging to the friends of free institutions that Federal judges and army and navy officers, after a comparatively brief public service, with ample salaries, are retired to private life with pensions enormously exceeding the pensions you pay to men disabled in the conflicts of arms. Gradually the favoritism of classes common to all monarchies is creeping into our system of government. For one, while deploring the favoritism to classes already expressed in our legislation, I protest against going a tithe of a hair further.

I have always favored liberal pensions for patriotic services in war, in the Army or Navy. No one can doubt the justice of this policy, but I protest against the granting of civil pensions. I denounce a civil pension list as un-American. It is easy to see how such a system, if once inaugurated, will grow and expand until in the progress of time it shall have impoverished the masses of our people for the benefit of the few. I enter my protest against a civil pension list as not only un-American, but as a most unmanly and discreditable imitation of the ideas of monarchies of Europe, from which our fathers hoped they had forever emancipated our country.

Mr. COOMBS. I yield a few moments to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COX].

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, the proposition that I have been discussing lies in this direction. If you take $30,000 (and I use that sum merely as an illustration of the revenues of the District) and appropriate it for this special purpose, to say the very least of it, you will have levied a special tax of that amount on the District for the purpose of creating a fund for civil-service pensions. There is no doubt of that. There is no dodging that proposition. Now, whether you would increase the taxes of the General Government or not, I stop for a moment just simply to ask when you undertake to legislate for the District of Columbia and the city of Washington, to tax the people of the District of Columbia for the creation of a special fund for the purpose of paying special pensions for certain officers in the employ of the District, I ask, gentlemen, where it is to end?

Mr. HEARD. I will say to the gentleman, if he addresses that inquiry to me, that he has now stated the case exactly right. He is correct in that statement.

Mr. COX. Well, I am very glad to know that I am correct anyhow.

Mr. HEARD. And I am glad to be able to congratulate you upon the fact.

Mr. COX. Very well; I will proceed now, if the gentleman will allow me.

Mr. HEARD. I shall not occupy but a moment of your time. The proposition is that this is to levy this tax practically on the people of the District themselves, by themselves, and for a special purpose. That is true.

Now my response to the gentleman is this, that the people of this District are alone interested, and they come and ask Congress, which can alone make the provision, that they may pay their own taxes and provide a fund for these superannuated and crippled policemen. They ask permission to do this thing, and Congress holds the purse strings of the District. They can not get the authority except from Congress. If Congress does not authorize the people here to set apart this fund it can not be done. We are not taking a dollar out of the Treasury of the General Government, but simply authorizing the people of the District to make the fund and foot the bill.

Mr. COX. But you are taking all my time. [Laughter.]

Mr. HEARD. I will give the gentleman more time if he wants it. But putting this question fairly before the House it is simply a proposition to allow the people of the District to pay out of their own funds a certain tax to be applied to taking care of disabled and superannuated policemen and their families. Application is made by this bill to Congress for authority to do this thing. That is all there is of it.

Mr. COX. Now, I ask the gentleman in all candor, if he has heard a single taxpayer make an application here in behalf of this, outside of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia?

Mr. HEARD. Mr. Speaker, the District Commissioners sent this bill to us. As I have stated here repeatedly, they are in my judgment the immediate representatives of the people of the District, and I will say to the gentleman that probably fifty taxpayers in this District have spoken to me favorably about this matter, and there has not been a single protest, and I am advised that the public press and the people of the District unanimously approve it. This is not a new proposition. It is simply to add to a fund established first in 1861, and again added to in 1886 by a Democratic House, on an appropriation bill, and it is simply a proposition to add to that which is now inadequate.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman pardon me for an interruption?

Mr. HEARD. Certainly.

Mr. COX. If that principle is correct, that the taxpayers of the District of Columbia ask Congress to apply a special fund for the purpose of paying pensions upon a civil-service list, I ask gentlemen in all candor and honesty, when a man serves the Government of the United States in a civil capacity, and after a lapse of years is worn out by age and infirmities, does not the same argument apply with all of its force in favor of putting him on a pension list?

Mr. HEARD. Not at all.

Mr. COX. What is the reason it does not apply? Is not a man who is working in the Capitol here just as much entitled to the respect of the Government as a man who is working on the police force in this city? And if a policeman is to be retired on account of his age or infirmities, or on account of some accident, then I say, take the whole civil-service list and apply the same principle. When I vote to put a tax upon the District of Columbia for a purpose of this kind, I will vote to put a tax upon the people of the United States for the same purpose, because Congress is legislating for both upon the same lines.

Mr. HEARD. Will my friend allow an interruption?

Mr. COX. I am done with the subject.

Mr. HEARD. I want to give the gentleman a reason why I think there is a very material difference.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York [Mr. COOMBS] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. COOMBS. Yes.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. I just want to say one word in answer to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], and also in answer to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COX], in regard to this pension business. I am as much opposed to a civil pension list as anybody can possibly be, but this matter does not come under the principle of a civil pension list by the Government of the United States. We are here not only as a Congress, attending to the business of the whole country, but we are practically the common council of the District of Columbia, and in regard to this matter we are doing that which the civil authorities of every large city in the United States are in the habit of doing for their police officers.

Mr. STOCKDALE. Suppose this bill should pass, and then the Capitol police should come in and ask that they be put in the same attitude?

Mr. COBB of Alabama. That would be a question for Congress to determine when it came up.

Mr. BRETZ. Are you not setting a precedent for it?

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Not at all, because this matter, as I said before, is in line with the action of every large city in the country, if I am correctly informed, or if not, it should be made so. I understand that the cities of New York, Brooklyn, Cincinnati, Chicago, and others, have the same system.

Mr. COOMBS. I am not sure about that.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. They have a fund for this purpose, if my information is correct.

Mr. HEARD. The report shows that the cities of New York, Brooklyn, and Boston have similar funds.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. It is not, strictly speaking, a pension.

Mr. HOLMAN. In most cities, I understand, a portion of the monthly salary of each policeman is set apart and applied to this fund. But I wish to ask my friend if the Government of the United States, at a moment when legislation can be fairly conducted, in deliberate assembly, establishes the principle that pensions for civil services are proper, how can you answer that large class of people whom you have in your employment as postal clerks, the great mass of people you have in your employment in connection with the river and harbor system—engaged in perilous employment—how can you answer the argument in favor of granting them pensions, after accepting the principle that it was proper as applicable to the District of Columbia? If it is proper here, it is proper in every other Department.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. If it is proper in New York, is it not proper everywhere else?

Mr. HOLMAN. We are not legislating for New York.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Of course not; and we are not legislating now for the people of the United States. We are legislating for the people of the District of Columbia, along a line which is followed in every large city of the country.

Mr. HOLMAN. I want to say to my friend that if this step is taken it will be invoked year after year, in cases that are much stronger than this. I am willing to pay these gentlemen ample salaries where they render public service, but not a dollar beyond. Why, a member of Congress claims that he is worn out by the public service, and under this British system they would come in here for aid. Would my friend tolerate that idea?

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Do you believe a large city does wrong to make provision for this class of men?

Mr. HOLMAN. My only theory about the matter would be this: The salary should be sufficient, and a portion of the fund, just as in the case of your army establishment up here, the military home, should be set apart for their use under just such circumstances as it is now desired to appropriate this fund. That is the principle of your National Home; and I see no impropriety in that.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. I just want to say, in conclusion, in answer to the gentleman who took my time, that I am not advocating a civil pension list, nor do I propose to go further in this legislation than the District authorities would, if they had a government of their own, be authorized to go in the direction of the practices which obtain in the various cities of this country.

So far as the bill provides for civil pensions it should be amended. I will consent to go no further in the direction of aid to policemen than to provide a plan which, avoiding the idea of granting pensions, will give such temporary relief as the exigencies of their service demand.

Mr. COOMBS. Do I understand the gentleman from Maine desires to address the House?

Mr. REED. I would like a moment or two.

Mr. COOMBS. I want to say about ten words.

Mr. HEARD. The gentleman from New York has the floor.

Mr. COOMBS. How much time does the gentleman from Maine desire?

Mr. REED. A few moments.

I think the gentleman from Missouri made some mistake in his opening statement in regard to this question, as he spoke of it as a mere extension of existing law. To my mind it is very different from that. The existing law provides that fines which are inflicted upon policemen for neglect of duty and money which arises from the sale of unclaimed goods and money which has been bestowed upon the body for meritorious services are to be appropriated for a particular purpose; and it having been discovered that that was not a sufficient fund, the law went further and provided that the policeman should pay $1 a month out of his own salary, to become a part of this fund.

Mr. HEARD. Will the gentleman allow a correction?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. HEARD. I think you will find my remark to be that it was proposed to increase the fund established by existing law.

Mr. REED. Very well; I am glad the gentleman did not say what I supposed, but I think the impression made was——

Mr. HEARD. I then went on to explain how this fund had been increased.

Mr. REED. I think the impression made was that it was a mere extension of the existing law.

Mr. HEARD. That was not my intention at all.

Mr. REED. Anyone will see that this is more than a mere extension of existing law; for, instead of being a fund which the policemen, with a slight exception, themselves directly contribute everything, it is now proposed to make a fund which shall be paid by the people of the District of Columbia, and possibly by the people of the United States. Now, whether it is paid by the people of the District or the people of the United States is a matter that interests me very little. I am perfectly willing that the people of the United States shall pay one-half of the expenses of the District of Columbia, for reasons which are very simple and plain. But whether we should adopt the plan of a pension for disabled policemen is another question; and it is a question the importance of which can not be overestimated; because if we do pension the policemen, I fancy that I hear in my ear the tones of some gentleman saying, "Having pensioned policemen, ought we not to be fair towards the rest? It may be that it was not proper to pension policemen; but having pensioned policemen, why not pension other equally deserving men?"

Why, I have seen the whole "leave" system extend over the civil service, until the Government pays one-twelfth more than any other employer, simply because of this system, and as my mind extends back over the service, I find that owing to the adoption of the civil-service plan, unless men can be hunted out they are kept in office through their lives. Now, you observe at once there is going to be a very heavy pressure brought to bear upon Congress, and that pressure is going to take this form, that the old men are going to be objects of charity.

Government employés, as a rule, spend their entire salary; and when they get old the alternative is presented to the man who has the appointing power, at the head of a department, to either keep that man in when he has become useless, on full pay, or discharge him and throw him upon the charities of the cold world. That he is not likely to do; and there are services already clamoring here for action on the part of Congress, on the score of economy, that it would be better to put these men on the retired list at one-half pay and get vigorous men to fill their places.

Now, you want fully to comprehend that. To my mind, if there is going to be any solution of that problem which is at all sensible it has got to be a solution so radical that I despair of seeing it reached upon an appropriation bill conducted through the House in the usual fashion. It ought to commence at the beginning. Instead of paying twelve hundred dollars a year, we ought to commence at five hundred. Instead of stopping at eighteen hundred or two thousand, we ought to stop at thirty-five hundred or four thousand, and from the money saved in that way we ought to establish a superannuation fund with which to provide for the superannuated and the disabled, so that a man who is useless shall not be kept on full pay on the ground of charity.

But until we take hold of this matter in a thorough and systematic fashion we run the risk of paying the large salaries that we now pay, and at the same time having to provide a superannuated fund to keep these public servants in decent condition in their old age, when, properly, they ought to have saved enough for that purpose out of their abundant salaries; for the salaries paid to the clerks and other departmental employés of the United States are large compared with the nature of their employment, and they were made large because, under the old system, a man gave five or six, or seven or eight of the best years of his life to the service, and then quit it, and it was reasonable that he should be highly paid for those years. But if you are going to keep men in the service during their lives, then you ought to arrange the salaries so that if the men will not save what will keep them in their old age, you can save it for them. Otherwise you do in that branch of the public service what you are doing in the Revenue Service to-day.

There are many men there who are entirely unfit for sea duty, and yet who are receiving the same pay as if they were active, vigorous men, while the young men in the service are being delayed in their promotion and prevented from receiving the pay to which they are properly entitled. I freely admit that there is one strong reason why something special should be done for policemen. Their occupation may at times become dangerous, and a man ought to have the consolation of knowing, when he goes into a fight in the performance of his official duty, that he does not risk the sustenance of his family by so doing. Consequently, I say there is a certain propriety in doing something of this kind for policemen, but the law has already struck the true plan, which is to make the force contribute to a superannuation fund in such fashion as to provide that disability or superannuation shall not be followed by poverty and suffering. In other words, when these men will not save from their salaries, we as public officers ought to adopt some plan or system by which a portion of their salaries shall be saved for them.

Now, what effect that has upon this particular pending measure I leave for the House to consider.

Mr. HEARD. The gentleman from Maine understands, of course, that the District of Columbia has no means of making any provision of this kind unless as it may be authorized by Congress?

Mr. REED. I understand that.

Mr. HEARD. Then it comes to this: The gentleman concedes the propriety, and even the necessity, of establishing such a fund as this?

Mr. REED. What I say is that, if we are going to establish such a system, we ought to establish it upon a sound principle, and to my mind this is not exactly the right way to do it. If we are not paying these policemen enough so that we can take out of their salaries a fund which will save from suffering and want those who become superannuated or disabled, then we ought to pay them more, but we ought to make the job a complete one, and a proper precedent as well.

Now, look at the situation. Here we have freed our office-holders from the danger of being turned out by unmeritorious persons—except, perhaps, in the Treasury Department and a few other places [laughter], and the result is that those gentlemen are forming associations so as to impress upon us their views with regard to their own salaries, and we are impressionable people. [Laughter.] We are moved by the cry of distress, especially when it is backed up by a considerable voting power. [Laughter.] It seems to me that civil-service reform has reached that point when it ought to be taken hold of in the right spirit, and with due regard to the change of attitude of the Government toward its civil employés, in order that two things may be accomplished: In the first place, that the Government shall receive the faithful service of trained men, and in the second place, that the Government shall pay them fairly. I will add another point: that it shall pay them in such manner as will justify them in devoting their lives to the business, so that they may find themselves with a reasonable compensation during their active days and with reasonable support in their nonactive days.

Mr. HEARD. With the permission of the gentleman from New York [Mr. COOMBS], I want to say just a word in reply to the gentleman from Maine. The gentleman concedes, if I understand, the propriety of having some provision made for superannuated policemen, firemen, and those who are engaged in such risky avocations in the public service.

Mr. REED. And in other kinds of business.

Mr. HEARD. So that we go so far together. Now, the question in this case arises not upon the ground suggested by the gentleman from Maine. He has inveighed against the system of pensioning civil servants as a general rule, against the principle of providing pensions for people who ought to provide for themselves.

Mr. REED. No. It is quite evident that I have not made my meaning clear. I say that if we are going to adopt another method than that of paying men for their day's work, then we ought to go into it upon a principle which is uniform and which is justifiable upon the idea that men earn during their active life an amount which ought to be spread over their active and their inactive life.

Mr. HEARD. I come now directly to the point to which attention has been called, and I think there can be no misunderstanding about it. The gentleman insists that, however commendable the object may be, this method of accomplishing it is not perhaps the best. Now, let us see about that. The gentleman, in his elaboration of the plan which he would set up as counter to this, suggests that the proper thing would be to deduct a certain amount from the salary of each policeman and thus make a fund—a plan provided for by the act of 1886 and which has proved to be inadequate.

Mr. REED. Inadequate in amount, but not inadequate as to principle.

Mr. HEARD. Well, of course, you might deduct half the salary of these policemen so far as that is concerned; but in point of fact the amount realized from that source is not sufficient. The question then is, what is the better way to increase this fund, and I ask the gentleman's attention to this plan. The proposition is to divert certain excise taxes——

Mr. REED. That does not make any difference.

Mr. HEARD. I think it does: I think I can convince the gentleman that it does. The proposition is to divert a certain fund collected in the District by excise taxes, and apply it to this specific object. Now, the diversion of that fund in this way would not, I still insist, tax the citizens outside of the District to the extent of one dollar. I insist that gentlemen are bound to concede that point, because the fund is diverted before it goes into the Treasury, and the Government is not obliged to place dollar for dollar against that $30,000.

The question, then, is (and I know this is the controlling question with some members on this floor) whether this provision can be made in accordance with the wishes of the people of this District without taxing people outside the District is not a just and a wise one. The plan here proposed, would, I think, effect that object; whereas if we should adopt the plan suggested by the gentleman from Maine, and first increase the salaries of policemen so as to make them adequate to stand the necessary deduction for the creation of this fund, then any increase of salary made for the police fund would come partially out of the United States Treasury, because this fund is paid half by the Government and half by the District.

Mr. REED. We entered into an understanding with the District that we were to pay one-half. There were good reasons in favor of that policy——

Mr. HEARD. All right; I am not objecting to that.

Mr. REED. And I do not think it creditable to us to be trying every piecemeal method of evading the obligation we assumed.

Mr. HEARD. I agree with the gentleman on that point. That compact was made; whether it be entirely fair or not we find it existing and should respect it so long as it does exist. But that does not obscure the point I make—that any tax levied upon the salaries of these policemen, which would call for an increase in their salaries, would be borne in the proportion of one-half by the Federal Treasury and one-half by the District; whereas a tax levied in the way here contemplated would be paid by the people of this District for a purpose applicable alone to the District, in accordance with the application made by citizens of the District for the carrying out of an object which can not be authorized by any other body than ourselves.

I am opposed to a civil pension list except when paid by the citizens themselves, voluntarily, as they would in this case, and in accordance with their votes when they have suffrage, as in Brooklyn, New York, Boston, and other cities. I am opposed to ingrafting the principle of a civil pension list upon the practice of the United States Government. But here is an application from the people, for whom, as the gentleman from Alabama has said, we are by the laws made a common council, for authority to pay their servants out of their own pockets. They ask that we appropriate out of their funds a certain amount for a specific purpose, which they believe to be a worthy one and which we concede to be worthy. If there is any better way, in fairness to the Government and to the District, in which this purpose can be accomplished, I want to adopt it. But I want to say distinctly that I am opposed to the principle of giving pensions to persons engaged in the civil service outside of occupations like that of policemen, and in such cases only when it is sanctioned by the citizens whose money is to be thus expended, as has been done by the common councils of Brooklyn, Boston, etc., and as I fully believe is the case here.

Mr. STOCKDALE. I wish to ask the gentleman a question which I tried to have answered by the gentleman from Alabama. When this plan is accomplished (if it should be accomplished) and the Government's policemen in this city make application for similar provision, what answer will the gentleman make to them?

Mr. HEARD. I will say to those Government policemen that the people of this country, who have their bills to foot, have made no application for such a measure and that I had no assurance that those people would sanction any such law.

Mr. STOCKDALE. But suppose that application is made?

Mr. HEARD. We would have the right to reject it, of course.

Mr. STOCKDALE. Is not the principle the same?

Mr. HEARD. Not at all; for this reason: that the present proposition affects only the people of this District, who, I believe, are unanimous in its favor.

Mr. STOCKDALE. Why, then, do they not make provision for taxing their own property in order to carry out this measure?

Mr. HEARD. They do tax their own property; they have got to pay the taxation levied; and if there is a deficit they have got to pay increased taxation in order to raise their half of what is necessary to meet the required public expenditures.

Mr. COOMBS. I now yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HUTCHESON].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has seven minutes remaining.

Mr. HUTCHESON. I would like to occupy about ten minutes.

Mr. HEARD. I shall be glad to yield to the gentleman any time he may desire.

Mr. COOMBS. I may want five minutes.

Mr. HEARD. I shall be glad to yield also to the gentleman from New York [Mr. COOMBS].

Mr. HUTCHESON. Mr. Speaker, I think the greatest opportunity ever presented to Congress is presented right here. From the foundation of the Government until now we have never taken the step which this committee proposes we shall take. We have never had an aristocracy in this country, and in my opinion it is a thing which we very much need at this time—if for no other purpose than to illustrate to a Republican Government what an aristocracy should be.

Now, the gentleman from Missouri says very properly that he wants to limit this to the city of Washington. That suggestion is entirely correct. If this system should be extended to other portions of the country, the policemen of this District would not be any better than the policemen anywhere else, and you would not have your aristocracy.

Mr. HEARD. My friend does not want to put me in a false attitude. He wants to be fair. I undertook to distinguish between the policemen here and policemen elsewhere, because the people of this District, who contribute the money we are proposing to expend, have applied to our committee for a measure of this kind.

Mr. HUTCHESON. I understand all that, and do not blame the gentleman at all. I know the committee have acted upon the matter as it came to them. But, Mr. Speaker, if I were amongst the people of Washington, and there was to be an aristocracy established in this country, I would insist that we should have our full share of it. I would want our policemen pensioned and nobody else's.

If you want immigration to come to this country, just pass this bill, and all the ships that plow the sea will not be able to bring the numbers that will want to come in. You will have immigration from every part of the earth, men of all nationalities, coming here and running for policemen in the District of Columbia. [Laughter.] Why, there is not a man in this country who can tell who his great-great-grandfather was, but there are a great many men who would be relieved from the necessity of doing so if he were able to say "I do not know who my great-great-great-grandfather was, but I do know that my father is a pensioned policeman and lives in the District of Columbia." [Laughter.]

Any man under the sun who is anxious to rise to distinction in this world has nothing to do but take a club in his hand, come to Washington, spend his life here as a policeman, and then retire on the aristocratic pension list. [Laughter.] Any man who has a daughter who wants to distinguish herself will find that she has nothing to do but to marry a young fellow 25 years old with a blue suit and brass buttons and with the distinct understanding that he is to be a pensioned policeman after he becomes too feeble to knock a Coxeyite on the head who chances to tramp on the grass. It is the grandest opportunity ever presented to this country, and that man in the Fifty-third Congress who votes against it votes against the chance of his life and the privilege of making a class which has not heretofore been provided for under the laws of the United States. I hope, of course, that such an important measure will prevail if we are to have an aristocracy anywhere in this country, and the committee seems to think we are.

Mr. COOMBS. Mr. Speaker, a great deal has been said in the parenthesis intervening between my opening and closing remarks, much of which I shall not indorse or object to. I want to express, however, going back to the original proposition on which I started, the opinion that I believe it to be unwise to connect the policeman, or the police pension fund, or bring him in contact with the local liquor dealer in any way except to enforce the law. That is one proposition, and the other is that I think it undemocratic and improper to divert funds before they get into the Treasury.

And I want to express in closing my sense of appreciation of the fairness and courtesy of the chairman of the District Committee for the impersonal manner in which he has considered and discussed the purposes of the bill which we now have under consideration.

Mr. HEARD. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN].

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, there are two or three objections to this bill, it seems to me, which have not been considered. One, that this amount asked for is unnecessary. It is more than or quite 50 per cent larger than can be expended this year. This bill provides for $30,000. Now, the total expenditure estimated for this year is about $25,000. The fund, from the method now in use for its collection, will be about $10,000, so that there exists only a deficit of $15,000 for this fiscal year, and yet $30,000 is appropriated for in the pending bill.

I want to call your attention to the extraordinary rapidity with which the necessities for this fund have increased. We find 666 per cent of increase since 1885, or in other words this pension fund has grown at that rate. I desire also to call your attention to the extraordinary expenditure necessary for this fund in the city of New York. The amount needed as a pension fund for about 4,000 men is $485,000. More than $120 per capita upon the policemen of that city would be required to make good the pension fund if raised by contribution from the force. Apply that to the two and three-quarters millions of men that were in the Federal army, and if the same ratio was observed, your pension list, now $145,000,000, would be increased to $350,000,000 a year.

It is entirely safe in my judgment to continue the method of raising this fund now in vogue. Let there be appropriated a sum, whatever it may be, from the monthly pay of each of these men necessary for the requirements of this fund. It will be carefully scrutinized then, there will not be the extraordinary growth which is now apparent, and the expenditure of the fund will be limited to what is absolutely necessary. It may be that it will be required eventually to increase the pay, and some would say that that was tantamount to an appropriation of this character. But it would not be, in my judgment; because there would be a careful scrutiny and examination of every expenditure, there would be an interest on the part of all the force in seeing that there were no abuses in the fund, and that it was being applied to necessary and legitimate purposes only.

I think, too, Mr. Speaker, that there is very much force in the objection raised by the gentleman from New York [Mr. COOMBS]. If the liquor license fund of this city is set apart for this special purpose, it gives policemen an interest in that business and in that fund and the profits arising from it, that they otherwise would not have. Instead of being watchful and careful with regard to what is going on in the saloons, they will have a direct, or if not a direct, certainly some interest in having the largest possible returns from that business, so that the fund from which their pensions are to be derived shall in no instance be jeopardized. I do not think that the police force of this city should be forced into a copartnership with the liquor-dealing interest of the city. The policeman ought to be the enemy of the saloon and not its sponsor. He ought to have his eye on the saloon at all times, because all men recognize the fact that the saloon is the nursery of crime here, as well as elsewhere, and there should be no relation between the police and that interest to make it his pleasure or interest to look leniently on the saloon, the chief of all the enemies of society.

Mr. HEARD. Mr. Speaker, I only care to say a few words. Directing my attention to the remarks made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HUTCHESON] for a moment, I will say that instead of this being an attempt to create an aristocracy, or an attempt to create a new class, that is not the case. The police pension fund exists in this District to-day, as has been explained fully. It was inaugurated by an enactment in 1861, and later in 1886. That fund is now inadequate, and this is a method which is suggested by the Commissioners for the increase of that fund. Whether this is a proper method of raising that money or not, is for the House to determine.

I have put the case fairly before the House, and have submitted with the report a statement which shows that this plan is in force in Brooklyn, New York, Boston, and perhaps other cities. I do not know of any better plan for raising the necessary money here. There may be a better plan. This plan, I insist, however, has this merit: That it is designed to provide that the money shall be raised not from the people of the United States, but from the people in the District; and as I say, this bill is here in response to an application on the part of the people for this legislation, for their benefit, to be paid for out of their money, and not from the Treasury of the United States. I have responded to their demand as best I could, believing it to be right, and realizing that this is the one legislative body to which they can appeal for authority to expend their own money for such public purposes as they may think right.

Mr. BYNUM. I should like to ask if the gentleman has ever made any investigation as to what rules have been adopted by this board that passes on the question of disability? I ask that for the reason that I have also noticed the same point made by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN], that this appropriation has grown so enormously that it does seem to me that it is being squandered.

Mr. HEARD. I will say to the gentleman that, as I understand it, the provision is explained in the statement made by the chief of police.

Mr. BYNUM. My question is whether you have made any investigation as to the rules regulating the determination of disability. Unless the matter is properly conducted there would be danger of a man being put on the pension list to get rid of him, or something of that kind.

Mr. HEARD. I have never had occasion to examine that question in detail. The police force stands in the same relation as the firemen, the school board, and others of that kind. These matters of detail are supervised by the District Commissioners, and I have never had my attention specially directed to this, because no occasion required it. I am not able to give any more detailed information than the report presents.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I want to say that I have read this bill with some care since it was called up this morning, and also the report.

Under the law of 1861 and the law of 1885, as has been stated, the pension that goes to disabled policemen goes substantially from their pay. Certain fines for breach of discipline are levied against policemen from time to time, when they ought to be, and those fines go into this pension fund, and a dollar a month is taken from the salary of each policeman, of whom I believe there are about four hundred, and this sum goes into the pension fund.

As now constituted, every man on the police force is interested in seeing that no one gets there improperly, because the policemen themselves pay the bills. They not only police the city, but they police this fund; and the same principle applies to appointments. I apprehend that it would now be pretty difficult to get a man upon the police force who in fact is disabled, because the members of the force would naturally watch that matter narrowly to see that no man was appointed who would be likely soon to become a charge upon that fund, which the members of the police force pay.

I am not opposed to payment of disabled policemen, but I believe that the law should be amended increasing their pay somewhat, if proper, and increasing the amount taken from their monthly pay to go into this fund. Therefore, I shall vote against this bill in its present shape, with the hope and expectation that the Committee on the District of Columbia will mature a proper bill and report it to the House at an early day. A policeman now gets, I believe, $900 a year to begin with, and the highest pay that the privates can get is $1,080. I have no doubt, as the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] has well said, that they might properly commence at a smaller rate, perhaps at $600, and the age be fixed a little younger than it now is for them to go on the force, and then let length of service and fidelity give the gradual increase of pay.

As to the public service being treated in this way all along the line, that will come later. The gentleman from Texas may talk about the aristocracy of office-holders from a tenure during good behavior. It is very easy to talk about that kind of thing. We are all talking about it. Yet we have already taken the step, and you can not get rid of it, either. You can not repeal your civil-service law; and the result is that we take a callow youth, who could not earn, as a rule, $400 a year in private employment anywhere in the United States, and we start him in a clerical position under the civil service, at a thousand or twelve hundred dollars a year. Once in, if he gets his backing, he is promoted up to $1,800 for the maximum in the classified service. That starts our civil employés at a higher rate than Great Britain pays when her employés go off the roll at the age of sixty-two on half pay.

These things will have to be looked to after awhile, as the gentleman from Maine has so ably said, and as I believe every thinking man will acknowledge.

But, as I understand, we are not going to look after that to-day; but we can look after this to-day, namely: we could refuse to divert $30,000 a year from the District revenues for this pension fund. When you divert it, if you pass this bill, I fear it will be twice as easy to become a policeman and twice as easy to be pensioned as it is now, because the pension will be paid out of the District revenues instead of being paid by the policemen. That is about all I want to say.

Mr. MCNAGNY. Will the gentleman pardon me for asking him a question?

Mr. CANNON of Illnois. Certainly.

Mr. MCNAGNY. I would like to have the gentleman's opinion of this phase of the question—whether or not civil pensions are not wrong in principle, because they sap the independence and self-reliance of Americans, which is the best capital of all our men and women?

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I will say to my friend I have had, in the past fifty years, the experience which most men and boys throughout the length and breadth of the country have had, who have had to make their own way. I have had the ambition and experience that the ordinary boy has had, taught at the country school, and all that sort of thing, and I will grant that years ago it was perhaps a good thing for an American citizen to get office under the Government. But I want to say now, in light of the experience I have had, the same industry and ability that command place, if a man rests upon his merit in the public service, will yield fivefold in private service.

We have entered upon a new era, and I can not stop it, and you can not stop it; we had just as well march up and look it squarely in the face, and say we have adopted a system, and are not going to repeal it, that does away with the necessity for the salaries that were paid heretofore, and that we had better revise our salaried list and make it lower, for without law in most cases and with it in some cases we practically give a civil pension in many instances. When a member of Congress dies we give his widow not to exceed $5,000; when an employé of the House dies we bury him and give his widow six months' pay. All Federal judges can retire at the age of 70, after ten years' service, on full pay. In the classified service employés incompetent from age or disease remain in service at full pay when they should retire on half pay or no pay.

I have stood here for many years, and sometimes when my fellow-members thought me ungracious, and by the mere right to say no, have kept considerable amounts of money from being paid that seemed to me to look like establishing in effect a civil pension. I did it for the reason that it seemed to me that we ought not to go further in that direction until the whole matter was taken up and intelligently considered. I have in mind two cases where I objected, and made, or helped to make, the fight.

One was the case of Justice Miller, the other of Chief Justice Waite. They were great men, and served their country well; and the proposition was to pay $8,000 or $10,000 to each of their widows. It was a little ungracious, my friends thought, and I was not quite clear myself whether I should not consent to it, on account of the service of their distinguished husbands, deceased; notwithstanding that, I knew that seated about the floor of this House there were many men ready to make the same motion for the widow of every United States judge who had died for the last twenty-five or thirty years, and later on as other judges should die.

Now, all of these things grow on us; and we will not only have the tenure in the civil service of the United States that is to last during good behavior and life, but we will have it upon the most extravagant terms, unless we wake up at an early day and take the matter in hand and regulate it. However, I will again apologize for having spoken in this matter; perhaps I should not have done so had not the gentleman from Maine so ably and clearly called attention to the matter; but I will say again, as to this specific bill, for the reasons assigned my vote shall be "no;" and if it is defeated I trust that the Committee on the District of Columbia will properly investigate and at an early date report a bill by which this pension fund can be increased, and increased from the earnings of the beneficiaries themselves and their fellows.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I want to ask my friend, if he will make any suggestion, from what source this increase can properly be made for an increase of the pensions of the policemen.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. In my judgment if you will provide that no man shall be appointed a policeman who is over twenty-four years of age, that his salary should begin at about $700—I am not particular as to the exact amount—and that it should increase every year of faithful service $50 or $100, as the case might be, until it reached the maximum of a thousand or a thousand and eighty, which is the present maximum, then, as you have four hundred of these men, if you would deduct three or four dollars instead of $1 a month from each, you would have a fund which would be large enough to take care of the disabled, a fund that four hundred men would be interested in policing to see that it was not pirated.

Mr. DINGLEY. What is the salary of these policemen now?

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. The minimum is $900 and the maximum $1,080.

Mr. DINGLEY. And only $1 a month is deducted for this fund. Now, there would be no difficulty in increasing the deduction to $50 per annum, which would furnish a most abundant fund and the compensation would still be very liberal.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Well, the committee ought to investigate the whole matter. Of course it is impossible for me to suggest what the details of such a bill should be, but I think the bill ought to be constructed on that principle.

Mr. HEARD. I hope the District Committee will have the benefit of the gentleman's suggestions. I see that one of these acts was passed on an appropriation bill when the gentleman from Illinois was a member of the Appropriations Committee, and it might be well that the result of that committee's investigation should be brought to bear to supplement the labors of the District Committee.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. The act of which the gentleman speaks is the one passed in 1885, the first year of Mr. Cleveland's first Administration. I had not the honor at that time to be in the majority on the committee, but the provision put upon that act was that there should be a dollar a month deducted from the salary of each policeman to make up this fund. That, I think, was in the line of correct legislation, and while I ought not have the credit of it, having been in the minority, I was on the committee, and I have no doubt that I indorsed the proposition at the time.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. That was before President Cleveland came in.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Well, just as President Arthur went out.

Mr. HEARD. Mr. Speaker, I am somewhat surprised to see so much opposition manifested to this bill, but it may be that a better method of providing this fund may be devised, either in a bill presented by some individual member of the House or by the committee. It has been suggested to me that it might be well to withdraw this bill, but I do not see any reason for doing that.

The committee have presented this as the plan approved by the Commissioners. The discussion that we have had this morning has doubtless been profitable to the committee and to us all, and may prove to be so to the Commissioners also, and to the police department. I am in favor, however, of letting the House pass its judgment upon the bill, and, therefore, I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER. General debate is concluded.

Mr. HEARD. Mr. Speaker, since this bill has been before the committee, in fact within the last thirty minutes, there has been brought to me a report of the Commissioners upon this subject. They recommend favorable action upon the bill, as they do in the report which has been read here, but in this they also suggest an amendment which, in deference to their views, I now offer.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Add the following words, after the word "District," in line 26: Provided further, That th efurther sum of $6,000 per annum, or so much thereof as may be necessary, of the moneys received as aforesaid shall be applied to carrying out the provisions of the act approved February 25, 1885, entitled, "An act making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes," which establishes the firemen's relief fund.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, before that question is put, I would like to ask the gentleman from Missouri whether there is any pension fund now for firemen in this District?

Mr. HEARD. This amendment recommended by the Commissioners would indicate that there is.

Mr. DINGLEY. Does the gentleman know whether any deduction is made from the pay of firemen for the purposes of that fund?

Mr. HEARD. I have no further knowledge than is contained in the amendment just read, but the gentleman from Indiana beside me [Mr. HOLMAN] says that there is a fireman's fund.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is my recollection.

Mr. HEARD. Mr. Speaker, upon consultation with some of my colleagues upon the committee, and at their suggestion, I ask that this bill be recommitted to the committee.

Mr. COOMBS. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. If that is agreed to will it do away with debate upon the bill in case it is brought forward again by the committee?

The SPEAKER. Not at all.

Mr. HEARD. I assure the gentleman that he shall have ample time to discuss this or any other measure that the committee may report.

There being no objection, the bill was recommitted to the committee.

WASHINGTON AND GEORGETOWN RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. HEARD. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill H. R. 6953, the purpose of which is to authorize and require the extension of the cable road from its present terminus at Thirty-second and M streets to a point opposite the end of the Aqueduct Bridge, and to authorize the company to acquire land there and build a station.

The SPEAKER. This bill ought to be considered in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HEARD. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. PERKINS. I object.

Mr. HEARD. Then, Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of this bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. O'NEIL of Massachusetts in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the bill which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Washington and Georgetown Railroad Company be, and it is hereby, directed and required to extend its tracks and run its cars thereon as follows: Beginning at the present terminus of its tracks in Georgetown; thence west on M street to or near Thirty-fourth street; thence northerly and westerly, on a private right of way to be acquired by said company to a point to be designated by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, between M and Prospect, Thirty-fourth and Thirty-sixth streets.

SEC. 2. That all plans relating to the location and construction of said railroad extension and of the passenger houses hereinafter mentioned shall be subject to the approval of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia; the said company shall furnish at the western terminus of its route a passenger house within such reasonable time as may be required by the said Commissioners, and shall maintain such passenger house and permit its use by connecting lines of street-car companies for the safe, convenient, and comfortable transfer of passengers, upon terms mutually agreed upon by said railway company and the connecting line or lines, or, in default of agreement, as may be fixed by the said Commissioners. Any violation of the requirements of this section as to passenger house shall be punished by a fine of $50 for each day such violation is continued and maintained, said fine to be recovered in any court of competent jurisdiction at the suit of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

SEC. 3. That the said company shall bear all the expenses of necessary changes to underground construction incident to the construction of the extension of its roads herein directed and required, and shall deposit with the Treasurer of the United States, before commencing work on said extension, to the credit of the Washington Aqueduct, such sum as the Secretary of War may consider necessary to defray all the expenses that may be incurred by the United States in connection with the inspection of the work of construction of said extension, and in making good any damages done by said company, or its works, or by any of its contracting agents, to any water mains, fixtures, or apparatus, and in completing, as the Secretary of War may consider necessary, any of the work that the said company may neglect or refuse to complete and that the Secretary of War may consider necessary for the safety of said mains, fixtures, or apparatus; and the said company shall also deposit, as aforesaid, such further sums for said purposes at such times as the Secretary of War may consider necessary: Provided, That the said sum shall be disbursed like other moneys appropriated for the Washington Aqueduct, and that whatever shall remain of said deposits at the end of one year after completion of the said extension shall be returned to said company, on the order of the Secretary of War, with an account of its disbursement in detail: And provided also, That disbursements of said deposits shall, except in cases of emergency, be made only on the order of the Secretary of War. And the said company shall also deposit with the collector of taxes of the District of Columbia such amounts as may be deemed necessary by the Commissioners of said District to cover the cost of inspection, supervision, pavement, and repairs incident to the said extension of its road; any unexpended balance of such deposits remaining after the completion of the said extension shall be returned to said company with an account in full of the disbursement of such deposit.

SEC. 4. That the said company shall commence the construction of the extension of its road, herein directed and required to be made, within three months and complete it, with cars running thereon, within six months after the date of the passage of this act: Provided, That this time limit shall be waived in case of unavoidable delay in securing the right of way herein authorized. Any violation of the requirements of this section shall be punished by a fine of $50 for each day such violation is continued and maintained, said fine to be recovered in any court of competent jurisdiction at the suit of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

SEC. 5. That in the event the said railroad company shall be unable to come to any agreement with the owner or owners of any land required for the extension of its road, as herein provided for, and for a passenger house, as contemplated in section 2 of this act, the said company is hereby authorized to institute proceedings in the supreme court of the District of Columbia, in accordance with existing law for the taking of private property for public use, for the condemnation of so much land as may be required for said purposes, said proceedings to be under such rules and regulations as to notice as said court may prescribe.

SEC. 6. That said railroad company is authorized to furnish and maintain a passenger house at Pennsylvania avenue between the tracks of the Navy Yard and the Baltimore and Ohio depot branches of said company's railroad.

SEC. 7. That this act may at any time be altered, amended, or repealed by the Congress of the United States.

The amendment reported by the committee was read, as follows:

Strike out the following:

"SEC. 6. That the said railroad company is authorized to furnish and maintain a passenger house at Pennsylvania avenue between the tracks of the Navy Yard and the Baltimore and Ohio branch of said company's railroad."

Mr. HEARD. The proposition contained in this section, which the committee disapprove, is to give the railroad company authority to build a shed down here in front of the Peace Monument between the two tracks. That provision we propose to strike out.

Mr. COOMBS. Is there a report on this bill?

Mr. HEARD. There is.

Mr. COOMBS. I should like to hear it.

Mr. HEARD. I ask a vote on this amendment of the committee. I do not think any one will oppose it.

Mr. DINGLEY. General debate must take place before any amendment is voted upon.

Mr. HEARD. There is no further amendment we wish to offer.

Mr. DINGLEY. This amendment can be voted upon with the understanding that it shall not interfere with general debate.

Mr. HEARD. Certainly. No advantage will be taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will put the question on agreeing to the amendment, with the understanding that the vote on the amendment will not interfere with general debate.

Mr. HEARD. That is right; that is perfectly well understood.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment will be again read.

The Clerk again read the amendment.

Mr. HEARD. For the benefit of gentlemen who may not have heard my previous statement, I will say that this section proposes to authorize the company to put a shed between their tracks down here in front of the Peace Monument. The committee disapproves that proposition and moves to strike out the section.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. One word on this question, because you are legislating in regard to my carriage. I ride on it back and forth daily, paying the usual price, six tickets for a quarter. It is the only carriage I have. I do not know whether the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] who sits before me has any other kind.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I ride on it every day on the same terms.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Gentlemen understand that when we start for the Capitol on a yellow car we are obliged to change cars near the Peace Monument at the foot of the hill. To-day we do not need any shed there, because we can stand the sunshine; sunshine is healthy; but during the winter or in stormy weather the transfer can not be made without waiting a minute or two, sometimes five minutes; I suppose the time will average a couple of minutes. Now, why should there not be a shed (constructed under the direction, if you choose, of the Commissioners, so that it may be ornamental and as little in the way as possible)—why should there not be a shed at that point which would keep off the rain and the sleet from women and children, saying nothing about the men?

Mr. HEARD. I will answer my friend's question; and that is all the argument I have to make on this proposition. The reason the committee objected to putting this shed at the place proposed is that they thought it would obscure the view of the monument, and while it might afford some shelter, would be regarded as a detriment to the appearance of things, and that it could better be placed elsewhere. The company is perfectly willing to erect a shed, and the Commissioners recommend that permission be granted; but the committee had an aversion to locating the shed there, believing that the opposition which has been made to a shed used for a similar purpose on Fifteenth street, in front of the Treasury Department, would be intensified against a shed erected in the place here proposed. The whole question is whether the House prefers to have that shed put there or not. If the shed is such a desirable thing, let us vote down the amendment and accept the bill as it stands.

Mr. GROUT. Why not put the shed on the sidewalk?

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. It seems to me if the District Commissioners were authorized to superintend the erection of a shed, we will say on the south side of the avenue, at the curb, it might not be objectionable. It would not materially obstruct the view from down the avenue. And I would rather have a little less view and a little more protection from the elements.

Mr. HEARD. I understand the gentleman from Illinois to uggest a shed on the south side of the avenue?

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Yes, sir; by the curb.

Mr. HEARD. That is a different proposition from the one contained in the section we move to strike out, which proposes to locate a shed between the railroad tracks, in the middle of the Avenue, directly in front of the Peace Monument. That is what we object to. If my friend wishes to offer an amendment to locate this shed on the south side of the Avenue, that proposition can be considered by the House. But we are not in favor of having this shed in the middle of the street in front of the monument.

Mr. PERKINS. It was that proposition that the committee very properly, I think, objected to.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I would sooner have it there than not at all.

Mr. HEARD. If my friend from Illinois desires to have a shed on the south side of the Avenue, let him offer an amendment to that effect. But there is no proposition of that kind in the bill. We simply propose to strike out the section in its present form, which we think objectionable.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Then, Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out and insert what I send to the desk.

Mr. BINGHAM. Let me ask the chairman of the committee where this road is to run?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. This is simply an extension of the Washington and Georgetown road, in Georgetown, from the end of the present line up to or near the Aqueduct bridge. The road ends now at Thirty-second street, and this authorizes the extension of the road some three or four blocks further on the same street.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I offer the amendment I send to the desk as a substitute for the amendment recommended by the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. That the said railroad company is authorized and required to furnish and maintain a passenger house at Pennsylvania avenue near the tracks of the Navy-Yard and Baltimore and Ohio branches of said company's railroad, over the sidewalk, on the south side of Pennsylvania avenue.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the substitute.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, before the vote is taken on the substitute I suggest that the gentleman ought to add, so as to make this harmonious with the rest of the bill:

To be constructed under the direction of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I accept that modification, Mr. Chairman.

The substitute, as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. HEARD. Now, Mr. Chairman, I have nothing further to add in presenting this bill to the House. It is simply a proposition to extend the tracks of the Washington and Georgetown Railway Company about three or four blocks from its terminus on M street between Thirty-second and Thirty-third streets, to a point that has been recommended by the Commissioners between Thirty-fourth and Thirty-fifth streets, which will give railroad accommodations for three or four blocks beyond the present terminus, and allow them to land their passengers close to the Aqueduct Bridge. In addition, it requires the company to buy a block of land between M street and Prospect avenue, which is back of the bridge, and to construct thereon a passenger house for the accommodation of the passengers now transported over the present road; and it is the plan proposed by the Commissioners that other roads may run into the same passenger house, and make transfer of their passengers under cover. That is all there is of the bill.

Mr. TAWNEY. I would like to ask the gentleman from Missouri a question.

Mr. HEARD. Certainly.

Mr. TAWNEY. As I understand the gentleman, the proposition here is to authorize the Washington and Georgetown Railroad Company to buy a block of ground. Is it not a fact that the company owns now more than a block of ground west of Thirty-fifth street, and that you propose to clothe the company with the right of eminent domain for the purpose of acquiring title to a half block of land that they have not been able to buy, and that in doing so they will take and destroy the home of Mrs. Morris? And is it not also true that this lady requested a hearing before your committee, in opposition to the project as embodied in the bill, and was denied a hearing?

Mr. HEARD. I am very glad to be able to set my friend right. We will get through after awhile with having our friends imposed on by false statements of interested parties outside. That statement is absolutely false. Of course my friend is not to blame; but the statement is without foundation, and he has been imposed on. I do not know what this company owns beyond Thirty-fifth street, or whether they own a square, as the gentleman suggests.

Mr. TAWNEY. They do, or rather it has been bought in their interests.

Mr. HEARD. I do not know that they own a foot. But I know that this statement about Mrs. Morris having been denied a hearing before the committee is without foundation. The fact is this: The bill was before the committee for some time and was considered. About three weeks ago the committee, without a dissenting voice, directed a report to be made and without any opposition in the District, except Mrs. Morris through her attorneys.

Mr. TAWNEY. Permit me there. The reason you did not hear a dissenting voice was because the company bought up the property west of Mrs. Morris, and hope to buy enough on the east side of her property to accomplish the purpose they seek to accomplish.

Mr. HEARD. Then what do they want of Mrs. Morris's property at all?

Mr. TAWNEY. Because that lies between the two lots which they possess or hope to acquire by purchase.

Mr. HEARD. Well, Mr. Chairman, to continue what I was saying. After the bill was directed be reported the Commissioners of the District found, on attention being called to it, that one or two suggestions had been made in their report, and which brought in some irrelevant matter, notably some suggestions about the propriety of ultimately allowing other roads to come across the river over the Aqueduct bridge, which we knew would be prejudicial to this bill and which have no connection with its object. They were suggestions that did not pertain to the bill, and would be so considered in this House. The Commissioners saw that it was better to reform their report so made to the committee, and they did so. As soon as that was done, and that was the only reason of the delay, the committee made their report of the bill to the House.

Now, on the day of our last meeting, which I believe was last Wednesday, I received a note from the attorney of Mrs. Morris asking permission for a hearing before the committee. As I say, the matter had been considered three weeks before, and, as I advised him by letter, had already been unanimously ordered to be favorably reported.

Now, about the Morris proposition. This bill authorizes the condemnation of that property under existing law in the District, and the company can not take a dollar's worth of her property without paying for it, and the same is true as to the property of anybody else.

Mr. TAWNEY. If this is a public corporation, and if the use to which this company seeks to put this property is a public use, why is it necessary to authorize the condemnation proceedings which you authorize here by section 5? Why can they not come in under the general law and institute condemnation proceedings without this provision?

Mr. HEARD. They have no authority under the general law to condemn private property.

Mr. TAWNEY. Why have they not that authority?

Mr. HEARD. Because it is not given to any corporation in the District of Columbia, except by special action of Congress. Now, the gentleman misapprehended me. I said they would proceed, under existing law, for the condemnation of property, as for highways and so forth, which general law protects every property holder in the District. That is the situation.

Mr. TAWNEY. But is it not a fact that this is not one of those corporations entitled to invoke the power of eminent domain, under existing law?

Mr. HEARD. This corporation has no power to condemn property, except when the power is given by an act like this.

Mr. TAWNEY. Nobody ever heard of a street railway company being clothed with the power, especially when it would operate to deprive a person of their home.

Mr. HEARD. I suppose not, and therefore this is the proper manner in which to proceed. If Congress in its judgment feels that the good of the public may be met by authorizing the exercise of that power in a particular case, it is competent for Congress to do it, and that is what Congress proposes to do in this case, if it acts favorably upon the bill.

Mr. TAWNEY. Then we are to pass upon the question whether or not this is a proper corporation to clothe with that power, and whether the use to which the company is going to put this property is a public use.

Mr. HEARD. Most assuredly.

Mr. TAWNEY. And in order to pass upon that question, I say the owners of the property have a right to be heard.

Mr. HEARD. I do not know what hearing they had before the District Commissioners.

Mr. TAWNEY. None whatever. They were never notified.

Mr. HEARD. If they had made an application before our committee before the bill was considered and ordered to be reported, they could have got the hearing, although they had no right to claim it except as a matter of courtesy which the committee always gives.

Mr. TAWNEY. Do you say they have no right to a hearing, when you propose to pass a law which will take from them their private property?

Mr. HEARD. I say it is a courtesy always extended by the committee to anybody who asks it under reasonable conditions, but they have no right to complain. There is only one proposition in the bill which the Commissioners recommend, and I think wisely recommend, and that is that we require this railroad company, which is a rich one, to buy a block of ground for which they must pay, and put a passenger house there, where they can decently accommodate the public, and in that way give the public the right to the use of the street.

The company should take care of their passengers under a decent cover, to be constructed at their expense. Not a dollar of Mrs. Morris's property or of anybody else's property can be taken without full compensation. Everybody knows that where a jury sits upon a case on one side of which stands a corporation and on the other side of which stands a private citizen, no private citizen's rights are sacrificed. If there is any tendency to be partial, it is a tendency to be partial to a private citizen. That is the way it should be, and the way it is.

I apprehend nobody will doubt that this property can not be taken for this meritorious purpose without full compensation being made for it. That is the entire purpose of this bill, and I hope it will be favorably considered.

I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that two years ago, when this company was about to put in this cable plant, they were perfectly willing, on the suggestion of our District Committee, to extend their line up to the point now contemplated, and we presented to the House a bill for that purpose, which was bitterly fought on this floor. I thought then that the opposition to it was unreasonable, and said to the House at that time that it would not be more than two years, that during the life of the then next Congress, the public would demand that these people make that change, and that it would cost forty or fifty thousand dollars to remove the terminal p'aat, which they should have been permitted then to locate at the right place. But that is a burden which the bill puts upon the company, and which the company is ready to assume, because they know that in order to get a good service they must do it, and that the demands presented in this bill are not on that account unreasonable.

Mr. EVERETT. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HEARD. Certainly.

Mr. EVERETT. When a bill is pending before the committee, and before it has been reported, how are property owners who are interested to ascertain that it is pending, so that they may apply to the committee to extend to them the courtesy of a hearing? Until it is reported to the House, how can they know that it is pending?

Mr. HEARD. The gentleman is surely advised of the fact that all these bills relating to the District of Columbia are always reported in the newspapers. It is a matter of general report that they are pending; and I will state further to the gentleman that every bill that comes to the Committee on the District of Columbia, except such as come from the Commissioners themselves, is referred to that body for information and recommendation; and they, as I am advised, invariably advertise the fact that it is there and give hearings to those who are interested.

Mr. EVERETT. Has the Chairman investigated the subject sufficiently to be able to state whether this property owner did have a hearing by the District Commissioners?

Mr. HEARD. I am not advised as to that. I do not know that she was before the Commissioners when this bill was under consideration; but I know that the newspapers stated that this property holder did apply, through her attorney, to the Senate committee for a hearing. I think they had a hearing before the Senate, but whether she did before the District Commissioners I do not know.

Mr. EVERETT. I understand she did have a hearing before the Senate committee. It is, I understand, a great security that property owners shall be duly heard; and as I understand the gentleman, they have a chance to be heard by the Commissioners.

Mr. HEARD. I am advised that it is the practice of the Commissioners in every instance where there is notice of any opposition, to advertise the fact that the bill is there, and that hearings will be given.

Mr. EVERETT. And it is fair to assume that such hearing is given in every case.

Mr. HEARD. It is entirely fair to assume that any property holder applying will have a hearing, and in every case when it comes before the committee, before a case has been considered and acted on, I never knew of it being declined. I will say that courtesy is always extended by the committee wherever application is preferred before the bill is considered.

Mr. TAWNEY. I desire to move to strike out section 5 of this bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I submit to the gentleman that the motion is not in order until general debate is closed.

Mr. HEARD. I ask that general debate be closed on this bill.

Mr. TAWNEY. I give notice that at the proper time I will move to strike out this section. My principal object is this. The primary purpose of this bill is to extend the line of the Georgetown and Washington road to the Aqueduct bridge from its present termination.

Mr. HEARD. Not to the bridge, but to a point north of the bridge.

Mr. TAWNEY. To a point opposite the end of that bridge.

Mr. HEARD. That is correct.

Mr. TAWNEY. Now, coupled with that proposition is another proposition to purchase or to condemn private property for the purpose of erecting and maintaining a station, a transfer station. Now, the gentleman from Missouri says that this station is absolutely necessary to the public in using that road, notwithstanding the fact that the road has been used——

Mr. HEARD. I used no such language. I beg the gentleman's pardon. He does not certainly wish to misrepresent me. I used no such language as "that it was absolutely necessary." All I meant to state was that it would be an accommodation to the people which we should provide.

Mr. TAWNEY. I understood the gentleman very clearly to say that the use of this property was essential to the public accommodation and for the benefit of the company.

Mr. HEARD. The gentleman will allow me to say that my purpose was to argue that it would be for the benefit of the public that this erection be located at this point. And in order to enable these people to accomplish that end it is required that they should be authorized to condemn that property if they can not purchase it at a fair price.

Mr. TAWNEY. Now, then, the purpose is to erect and maintain a station there for the accommodation of the people. Mr. Chairman, that road now terminates about five blocks from the point proposed for its termination in this bill, and for a good many years they have had no station and have needed no station terminus. Why? Because the cars are standing there, and people desiring to go east simply get on the cars. Those people who wish to go west go on to their destination. The only way in which there could arise a necessity for a transfer station is by connecting that line with some line going beyond the Aqueduct Bridge, and this is the scheme contemplated, when taken together with the bill passed two weeks ago, giving another railroad a charter on Prospect street north of M street, on which the Washington and Georgetown line is located.

Now, this company has bought a large amount of property west of Thirty-fifth street, between Prospect and M streets. There is one half block, however, which it has not been able to secure. It is owned by Mrs. Morris, a native of my State, but who has resided on this property for a great many years; first with her parents and afterwards with her husband, until his death. That property is valuable. It is the lady's home, the only home she has. It fronts on Prospect 150 feet, and 120 feet on M street; the distance between the two streets is 240 feet, and the difference in elevation between M street and Prospect street is 75 feet. Now, how does this company propose to maintain a transfer station on property of that character without excavating the entire bank? They do not propose to take only a part of Mrs. Morris's property, but the whole tract; 150 feet on Prospect street and 240 feet deep, or the entire half block between the two streets.

Mr. HEARD. Your purpose, as I understand, is to strike out section 5, which authorizes condemnation proceedings?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. HEARD. It is not your purpose, however, to strike out the requirement that the company shall build a station there?

Mr. TAWNEY. No, sir.

Mr. HEARD. Therefore you ought to move to change the title of the bill to "A bill for the benefit of Mrs. Morris," by compelling the railroad company to pay her her price for her ground.

Mr. TAWNEY. She has set no price upon the land. It is her home, and she proposes to live there; and because this street railroad company is not one of those corporations that can invoke the right of eminent domain, you propose to give it that right by this act, which is wrong, and ought not to be done, especially in view of the fact that there is property just west of this that can be obtained for this purpose. If the company will extend their terminus one block further west they can get the necessary property without invoking the aid of a special act of this kind. They can go there and buy property as they have done heretofore. They own the block, or part of the block, west of this, and also part of this block adjoining Mrs. Morris's property.

Mr. HEPBURN. Suppose these condemnation proceedings take place and the company acquire the title to the two blocks between Thirty-fourth and Thirty-sixth streets and between Prospect and M streets and then grade those two blocks to the level of M street, what becomes of Thirty-fifth street between Prospect and M streets? Will it not be absolutely destroyed?

Mr. TAWNEY. Certainly.

Mr. GROUT. How?

Mr. HEPBURN. By reason of the difference in grade.

Mr. WASHINGTON. You can hardly walk up or down there now.

Mr. TAWNEY. Oh, yes; you can.

Mr. WASHINGTON. If you are a billygoat you can. [Laughter.]

Mr. TAWNEY. Well, perhaps the gentleman has tried it, and I have no doubt he has succeeded. [Laughter.] In fact, Mr. Chairman, there is a street there dedicated to the public and open to the public. Now, I submit that this Congress ought not to clothe a quasi-public corporation with the powers that this corporation would be clothed with under this section, and I submit that under the circumstances this lady ought not to be deprived of her home. There is no necessity for the company taking that property, none whatever.

This is simply part of a mammoth scheme of persons interested in suburban property. This House passed the other day a charter for a road that will connect with the Washington and Georgetown road running up the Potomac River from the Aqueduct Bridge, where they hope in the distant future to have occasion for a transfer station, but there is no present necessity for it and no public demand for it. The Washington and Georgetown road now connects with no other road at that end, and the people who come from that direction are accommodated by the cars on the track, and the people who go in that direction go to their destinations without stopping at this point, and would not stop even if there was a transfer station there.

Mr. HEARD. I desire to say only a few words in reply to the gentleman from Minnesota. I repeat, Mr. Chairman, that the extension of this road would accommodate the people on three or four blocks on either side of M street where there is now no railroad accommodation. The gentleman refers to this as a part of a scheme to connect this road with other roads, but he should be fair enough to say that that scheme is one that is recommended by the District Commissioners.

Mr. TAWNEY. Is there any demand for it by the public?

Mr. HEARD. Yes, sir. It is the judgment of the committee and it is my judgment that the public greatly desire it.

Mr. TAWNEY. Have the committee received any petitions or anything of that kind in favor of it?

Mr. HEARD. Mr. Chairman, I state what I believe to be true, that this extension is demanded by the public, and there is only this one property-holder, so far as I have ever heard, who has made objection to the proposed extension to the Aqueduct Bridge. So far as the railroad company are concerned, they would get no more fare for carrying passengers on to this proposed terminus than they receive now for carrying them to their present terminus, and this extension will put them to large cost in moving their terminal plant up there, but they are willing to do it, for they know they have to go there ultimately.

Now, sir, one word about this scheme of another railroad to which the gentleman has referred.

The railroad company to which the gentleman from Minnesota has referred, a suburban road, came into Congress with a bill, not asking for this transfer station but on the contrary asking to be permitted to come down Prospect street and to connect with this road over the Tennallytown track at its present terminus. When the Commissioners reported upon their bill, and proposing a union railway station at this point, they required the bill to be amended, which was done on this floor by the committee, so as to permit the road to run to a point opposite this spot between Thirty-fourth and Thirty-sixth streets, with a view to using the station there when built, and requiring them to use it when the plan should be carried out. Now, in all fairness, if this road is to be extended as a public benefit to accommodate those people beyond its present terminus, the railroad company ought not to be required to go to work and purchase ground and build a station without having the power to protect themselves against exorbitant prices.

Mr. TAWNEY. How many people are there west of the terminus of this road?

Mr. HEARD. I never took any census of them, but there are several blocks. But I wish to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that this extension is not only a matter of accommodation to those people, but it concerns everyone who may want to go to Arlington by that road, or to any point beyond the Aqueduct Bridge. Such persons have a right to be put down at the point nearest to the bridge consistent with the public good.

Now, if you want to authorize the extension of this road, saying nothing about the use of the station, I shall not object, though I think the company ought to be compelled to buy ground and erect a station. I do not think they ought to be placed at the mercy of Mrs. Morris, however, or anybody else who may wish to oppress them by demanding three or four prices for their property. The general law of the District in regard to the condemnation of property, under which these people would have to proceed, sufficiently protects everybody whose property it may be necessary to take.

Mr. GEAR. Why was it that these parties in interest were denied a hearing?

Mr. HEARD. They were not denied a hearing. I contradict that statement on this floor. They made their application two or three weeks after the bill had been considered and ordered reported to the House.

Mr. GEAR. I have seen a letter stating that a hearing was denied them.

Mr. HEARD. No, sir; you saw my letter, and I wrote no such letter as the gentleman states. I wrote a letter stating why a hearing could not be granted at that time because the bill had been considered two or three weeks before. Let the gentleman bring that letter here.

Mr. GEAR. I saw the letter.

Mr. HEARD. The gentleman, when he states to the House a matter affecting the standing of other members, ought to be very careful to state the truth.

Mr. GEAR. I am not stating anything against the gentleman or his committee.

Mr. HEARD. I say that the statement affects me as a member of the committee; and it is not the truth.

Mr. GEAR. I am making no charge against the gentleman.

Mr. HEARD. The gentleman does make a charge, whether he intends it or not.

Mr. GEAR. A reputable gentleman told me this morning that he had such a letter; he took it out of his pocket and showed it to me. I did not read the letter——

Mr. HEARD. That will do. I excuse the gentleman.

Mr. GEAR. He said that letter showed that these parties had been denied a hearing.

Mr. HEARD. It is absolutely untrue, except under the conditions I have explained. Those people applied to us for a hearing two or three weeks after the bill had been considered and ordered reported, and while we were waiting simply for an amended report from the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to accompany our report.

Mr. TAWNEY. Do you know whether the owners of this property were notified of the pendency of this bill?

Mr. HEARD. I do not know; I never heard. Why, Mr. Speaker, those people are all immediately represented by the Commissioners who, as I am advised, advertise these hearings when notified of opposition before them. I never heard of Mrs. Morris till I heard through the papers she was before the Senate committee in regard to this bill; and when her lawyer wrote that letter to me, I stated to him in reply why the hearing could not be granted to him. If my friend from Iowa had brought that letter here and read it, there would have been no need for any further explanation about the matter. It would establish the facts as I have stated them. The bill has already been ordered reported, and we were merely waiting the return of the amended report of the District Commissioners in order that the bill might be presented to the House, and we had that when the attorney's letter was received.

Mr. TAWNEY. Just one word. Mrs. Morris went to the Commissioners and they told her there was no proposition pending for the condemnation of her property. Then she went to the president of the Washington and Georgetown road, who evaded her question as to what they proposed to do by this bill. Then application was made to the committee.

Mr. HEARD. Let me ask my friend this question: If she made that application to the Commissioners, why did she not follow it up then with an application to the committee? If she had done so she would have had a hearing.

Mr. TAWNEY. I understand that she did——

Mr. HEARD. She did no such thing.

Mr. TAWNEY (continuing). Through her attorney.

Mr. HEARD. She did nothing of the kind at that time. The Commissioners had the bill there, for we sent it to them, and her attorney should have been able to see the provision in the bill about the condemnation clause and called her attention to it.

Mr. TAWNEY. She went in person and they told her that there was no proposition to condemn the property.

Mr. HEARD. Well, I do not know what the Commissioners may have told her. I was not there. If they misrepresented the matter to her then they ought to be held responsible for it and not the committee, but I apprehend there must be some misunderstanding about their statement to her. I am stating exactly the facts as far as they concerned the committee.

Mr. BYNUM. Let me ask the gentleman from Missouri a question: I understand that at the time this application was made, the bill had not been reported?

Mr. HEARD. No, sir; but the committee had ordered it made.

Mr. BYNUM. Please state then what urgent necessity existed for reporting it so hurriedly without giving her an opportunity to be heard?

Mr. HEARD. Well, Mr. Chairman, this bill had been considered and ordered to be reported to the House; and I suppose there is no committee of the House which ever held up a bill on any such ground as that. I never knew a committee to do it. The bill was considered by the committee, was ordered to be reported, and the report was made, and I do not know any reason why it should have been held up because of such an application. This bill contains but one proposition, it must be remembered. All persons in interest had notice, I presume, from the Commissioners of the District of Columbia that the bill was being considered by them; and I know, and I presume all the members of the committee know, that we have considered the matter thoroughly, and that if this party had a dozen hearings upon the facts here stated by her friends it would not have changed the views entertained by the committee. I am frank to say no amount of evidence to show the facts claimed here would have changed my view, and I presume that is true of the other members of the committee.

Now, the facts are before the House for your action. Here is a proposition to authorize this railroad company to extend its line of road to accommodate the traveling public. It can be voted down or voted up; I do not care a penny. There is a proposition, in addition to the bill, allowing this company to buy more land for the purpose of building a transfer station. That is a matter for the determination of the House. Strike it out if you desire; vote the bill down if you will. But the bill is a good one, the Commissioners say so; the Committee on the District of Columbia believe it ought to be passed. It is for the House to vote as it pleases in regard to the matter.

Mr. GROUT. This land is wanted for the purpose of establishing a passenger station upon it, as I understand?

Mr. HEARD. Yes, sir.

Mr. GROUT. Well, a statement has been made that other land has been bought adjoining this on the west side by this company.

Mr. HEARD. I know nothing whatever about that. I have no such information.

Mr. GROUT. That is stated as a fact.

Mr. TAWNEY. It is a fact.

Mr. GROUT. I was wondering if the other land was purchased why they might need this also.

Now, I want to say with reference to this bill that I would like to see the road extended to connect with any proposed line for Great Falls.

Mr. HEARD. Or all lines.

Mr. GROUT. Or any other lines extending anywhere else into the country, wherever they may choose to run. I do not altogether share the objection which has been raised here by gentlemen to condemning private property for such purposes, although it is a little outside of the purpose indicated by the name given a street railway, for that is supposed to cling to the street. Yet I can see no real absurdity or impropriety, if necessary for the proper exercise of that franchise for the accommodation of the public, for private property to be condemned for this purpose.

Mr. BYNUM. Will the gentleman answer one question?

Mr. GROUT. Yes, sir.

Mr. BYNUM. When this company was required to change its motor power was a condition put into the law allowing them to condemn private property for the establishment of a power house?

Mr. GROUT. I think not.

Mr. BYNUM. Was it ever granted any such right, or any other street railroad?

Mr. GROUT. I am not able to say.

Mr. TAWNEY. Not anywhere in the United States.

Mr. BYNUM. Did not they purchase this square of ground down here at what they claimed to be an excessive cost, some six hundred and odd thousand dollars, because they could not have the right to condemn it?

Mr. GROUT. Oh, they have no right of condemnation under the general law, as I understand it. It must be expressly conferred.

Mr. HEARD. They have no power of condemnation, of course, unless it be expressly granted.

Mr. GROUT. And it has never been specially conferred, I believe.

Mr. BYNUM. I think not.

Mr. GROUT. But granted that it has not the power, wherein lies the objection, if it be for the convenience of the public?

Mr. BYNUM. I say to the gentleman that this power ought not to be conferred upon a corporation of this character. I do not believe it is such a public corporation as brings it within the rule authorizing the exercise of the principle of eminent domain.

Mr. GROUT. But why not on this, if on others? It is certainly given steam railways.

Mr. GEAR. It should not be granted to any.

Mr. BYNUM. No street railway corporation in the District should have that right.

Mr. GROUT. Do you mean simply because it is called a street railway and not a steam railway?

Mr. BYNUM. I do not believe this corporation should have that right. It has no public station at the other end of the line. Why is one more necessary at that end of the line than at the other end of the line?

Mr. GROUT. On account of its connections beyond.

Mr. BYNUM. Is not there something behind this, that they want to get this property for some other purpose?

Mr. GROUT. Of course that should be guarded against. But I can not understand why this corporation should want to build a passenger house there unless it is for the accommodation of the company and the accommodation of the public. I can not imagine any other reason. Its self-interest can be trusted to regulate this.

Mr. HEARD. I will explain to the gentleman that it is a scheme of the District Commissioners——

Mr. GEAR. "Scheme" is the proper word.

Mr. HEARD. A plan of the District Commissioners, absolutely. It originates with Maj. Powell and the District Commissioners, and they made their first suggestion of it in connection with the Great Falls road, when that matter was here.

Mr. GROUT. I do not care where it originated. Let us look at it as a practical question. That is all we have to do with it.

Mr. TAWNEY. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that there are scarcely any people residing west of the terminus?

Mr. GROUT. I suppose it does go pretty well out to the city limits, but it connects with other lines beyond.

Mr. TAWNEY. There are no other lines beyond.

Mr. GROUT. Well, projected lines beyond.

Mr. TAWNEY. In the future, when this suburban property is developed, there may be some necessity for a connection, but at the present time there is no other road there to connect with and there are no people to travel on the road, if they had one there.

Mr. GROUT. There are people up the valley toward Cabin John, and pretty much all the way to Great Falls, to be accommodated by the proposed line there.

Mr. HEARD. It is a mistake to suppose there are no people there. There are people on that street along which this line runs.

Mr. GROUT. I have been up as far as the Great Falls. I went in a carriage, at the expense of another man. Now, if a company want to build a railway there which will take me up, I am willing that they should, and I am willing that they should have the trolley up in that section. Then, when the line is built, I may take it sometime on my account, not being able to support a carriage. And this illustrates the convenience it will be to the general public. I have no objection to corporations building railways for the accommodation of the public. I am in favor of it, heartily in favor of it; but let us come back to the question. Wherein lies the reasonable objection to giving this company the right to take private property for a passenger house, provided that passenger house is for the accommodation of the public? I am unable to see any reason for objection. I can see no difference in principle to have a street railway and a steam railway. The fact that no street railway company has ever had the right before, if that be true, is not a sufficient reason. Before I can concur in this objection something must be suggested to distinguish a street railway from a steam railway, for which it is granted in every State and Territory.

Mr. WARNER. Will the gentleman allow an interruption?

Mr. GROUT. Certainly.

Mr. WARNER. I wish to ask a question. Possibly it would be more pertinent to ask the chairman of the committee, but I think the gentleman from Vermont is informed on this subject. I understand from what has been said that this road proposes to extend its line only about five blocks, and that the neighborhood where this land is to be condemned has been suggested as being peculiarly appropriate for a passenger station, because it may hereafter be a place where very much more important transportation lines from outside will center. Now, may I ask, what there is in this bill which, when that time comes, will prevent this company—which is given the opportunity to acquire this land when it is not specially needed—from becoming a dog in the manger to prevent the public from being well served by the other companies which will then need the land, and which will find this company in possession of the point of vantage?

Mr. HEARD. There is ample provision in the bill to guard against that.

Mr. GROUT. It is provided for in the bill.

Mr. HEARD. And this plan is proposed by the Commissioners of the District.

Mr. WARNER. As I read the bill, it did not seem to be very well provided for.

Mr. HEARD. It is provided for.

Mr. GROUT. It is satisfactorily provided for in the bill as I read it. If the corporations can not agree among themselves, the Commissioners are to determine.

Mr. HEARD. That is the fact.

Mr. GROUT. But, to come back to the question, I can see no reason why a street railway company may not be allowed to take private property for the convenience of the public, the same as a steam railway company may. I should want, of course, to know that it was absolutely necessary for the purpose assigned, and for no other purpose.

Now, in reply to the suggestion of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] that notice was not given these parties, so they might have a hearing, let me say: If there be any suggestion of any matter which should have been presented to the committee, which can not with equal fullness and certainty be presented to the House, that objection would be a good one, undoubtedly. But I can hardly imagine what matter of that kind there could be. The objection stated by my friend from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY], that the company have no right to condemn private property, is an objection which the House would have to consider ultimately, even if it had been passed upon by the committee, after argument before committee by counsel in behalf of the person heard.

Mr. TAWNEY. But they had a right to be heard.

Mr. GROUT. They have a right to be heard and are being heard now, it seems to me; so that that objection is not a good one. But I wish to be sure, as has been suggested by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BYNUM], that it is necessary to take this private property for this purpose; and I want to know, too, that it can not be misapplied or afterward appropriated to any other purpose. So I have drawn an amendment which I will submit when the time comes, provided the section is not stricken out. I will read the amendment for the information of the House and will send it to the Clerk's desk to be called up in due time. It is as follows:

Add to section 4 the words:

"Provided, That no land shall be condemned under this act unless it be absolutely necessary for the construction of the passenger house hereinbefore provided; And provided also, If said land is ever put to any other purpose whatever it shall revert to the owner."

Mr. HEARD. That is right.

Mr. GROUT. Now, very likely it might take that course under the law, but we want it expressly provided.

Mr. HULL. Is it proposed to provide that the Commissioners may determine the necessity?

Mr. GROUT. No; let that go to the courts. The courts have control of the condemnation proceedings, and I want to leave that to the courts, to be determined by them when the proceedings are instituted. The company should be compelled to show that it is necessary to take this land before they can have it, and when they do establish that fact and take the land, then they must not divert it to any other purpose. When these conditions are complied with I shall be satisfied.

It does seem to me a little strange, if it be true, that they have been buying other blocks in that neighborhood, and it naturally raises the question whether there is not some other scheme in contemplation, and I do not propose to further any plan to buy land, or to acquire land for any other purpose; but if we can be sure that it will be applied to that purpose and that alone, then I am in favor of allowing them to do it. This provided for and I am in favor of the bill.

Mr. HEARD. I think the gentleman's amendment is altogether proper. I have no earthly objection to it.

Mr. GEAR. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to this bill. I happen to know the parties who own this property and have known them for many, many years. I took a carriage and rode there this morning and went all over this ground. The south half of this block has been bought by private parties, as I am informed. I oppose the bill on that account. I oppose the bill because the parties interested were not given a hearing. I further oppose it upon the ground that I do not believe it is right to give to a street railroad company the right of eminent domain so as to enable it to condemn other people's property. I recognize as much as anyone the importance of having these street railroads, and street improvements to furnish the people with facilities for travel, but I do not believe in granting at will franchises worth $100,000 to $200,000 out of which they can make money at the expense of the people.

Mr. HEARD. If the gentleman will permit me, I will state that this railroad company, if it extends its road, will collect no more fare.

Mr. GEAR. That is an altogether different question.

Mr. HEARD. Then how does it add to the value of their franchise?

Mr. GEAR. Now, there is other property beyond that, and as the gentleman from Vermont stated, there is very little population west of this place. Why, they have selected to put their station at this place, 70 feet above, taking a beautiful homestead and confiscating it for the interests of the parties who bought the south half of that property. I never will vote the right to condemn and destroy property at random. The original act chartering the road required them to procure proper stable and station grounds, but it does not give them the right of eminent domain to which Congress alone can give the right, and I earnestly hope the members will pause before they will grant this particular road the right to confiscate this property.

Mr. GROUT. I would like to make an inquiry of the chairman of the committee. I do not understand from what you said, and I did not hear every utterance and presume it has been stated, but I want to ask if the proposition is to take in the dwelling place of this woman and not merely the land in connection with it?

Mr. HEARD. I say to the gentleman from Vermont that I have no information on that point.

Mr. GROUT. I was not aware that it went further. I am not clear about that.

Mr. GEAR. The lot on which this building stands extends 150 feet from north to south.

Mr. TAWNEY. Two hundred and forty feet.

Mr. GEAR. And 150 feet from east to west. All south of that property, including all the buildings to the west of the property, have been bought by certain parties, who, I understand in a general way, though I do not know anything positive about it, are connected with this road. Presumably it has been bought, as many other pieces of the property have been bought, where a gentleman buys it and turns it over to the corporation.

Mr. GROUT. And all of this is abutting this private property to the west.

Mr. GEAR. All west of it is abutting the whole length.

Mr. GROUT. Well, Mr. Chairman, if that is the fact——

Mr. GEAR. One moment. If you confer the right of eminent domain—if you give them this right to take the property—they can take the whole block from this lady.

Mr. GROUT. The language of my amendment is—

Unless it is absolutely necessary for the purpose of erecting this passenger station.

And if there is open land beyond, no court in the world will say it is absolutely necessary, especially if owned, as is stated, by this company. I think she is protected under my amendment.

Mr. HEARD. I am perfectly content to accept the amendment of the gentleman from Vermont.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment can not be accepted at this stage of the proceedings, as the committee is still proceeding to consider the bill under general debate. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. Chairman, I believe it will be conceded by every member——

Mr. GEAR. I want to say to the gentleman from Tennessee——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York has the floor.

Mr. WARNER. I yield to the gentleman for a moment.

Mr. GEAR. I want to say that this block or building and property is between Thirty-fifth and Thirty-sixth streets. The residence is 3508, and it is a very charming and lovely home.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. Chairman, I believe it will be conceded by every member present that this is a most extraordinary power, for the granting of which to a similar corporation there is absolutely no precedent in the District; and I say, even if there were precedents innumerable, we should be most careful of the extent to which we grant it.

And now, sir, when it is proposed to grant this extraordinary power of the condemnation of land for the purposes of stations, etc., to a railroad which only proposes to extend its road for five blocks, I submit that such is scarcely a case to call for the exercise of any such extraordinary power as is now proposed to be given.

Again, sir, if the chairman of the committee has stated the matter correctly—and I have no doubt he has—this power is proposed to be given to provide accommodation not so much for what this railroad now needs, or for it will need after it has completed this extension, as for what may be needed by the development of other roads, which are expected to open up new traffic demanding such additional accommodations. If that be so, sir, it seems to me that what we should do is to wait until those needs have developed, and then, if we are going to confer this extraordinary power at all, confer it upon the corporations which shall then have need to exercise it.

But that is not my main objection to this proviso giving the right of eminent domain to this company. I have not examined the statutes of the District of Columbia in this regard, and if I am mistaken the chairman of the committee I know will correct me, but unless there is some peculiar provision in them which is not contemplated by any reference in this bill, the fact is that when this railroad shall have completed these condemnation proceedings it will become the owner in fee simple of the lands thus taken and they will not be subject to forfeiture in case the company shall afterwards wish to use them for other purposes.

Mr. HEARD. That will not be so if the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GROUT] should be adopted.

Mr. WARNER. I did not hear that.

Mr. HEARD. The gentleman from Vermont has proposed an amendment providing that if any land taken under this right is ever used for any other purpose, then it shall revert to the original owner.

Mr. WARNER. If that is the tenor of the amendment of the gentleman from Vermont, I am in favor of that amendment. But, even if that amendment were adopted and the company were thereafter kept from appropriating for its own benefit and not for the public advantage the result of the exercise of this power of eminent domain now proposed to be given, there would still remain a serious defect in this bill. The land that is proposed to be condemned is confessedly the land that would be needed for a passenger station for what the chairman of the committee has stated will probably be a great development of suburban travel and traffic.

Mr. HEARD. I want to say at this point, for the information of the House, that in connection with another bill recently under consideration here the Commissioners of the District recommended the establishment of a union transfer station at this point. I think they had elaborated a plan in which they had named six or seven such stations, which they proposed to recommend to Congress, and this is among them.

They propose to establish a station at that end of Washington into which suburban roads may come, including roads which are expected to cross the river. The scheme originated with the Commissioners, and it is not confined at all to this particular case.

Mr. WARNER. I am glad the gentleman has so far explained the matter; and his explanation simply goes to show that it is one of even greater importance than, upon his former statement, I had imagined, In so far as he has explained it, it seems to me a matter of the very greatest importance, for it is practically the provision of a general center for the whole of the great suburban traffic on both sides of the river that may be expected on the north and west of the District of Columbia, and for that reason, if there were no other, it would seem to be preposterous that at this time we should put the power to acquire in fee simple all the very extensive property which in such a case would be proper and necessary into the hands of a single railroad company which does not now need it even for its own purposes.

But that is not my only objection. In section 2 of this bill—which I presume is the section to which the gentleman referred when he mentioned the guaranties provided by the bill against this road standing like a dog in the manger after it should have exercised this right of eminent domain and acquired this property—the only provisions of that character that I find, are practically, first, that this company shall allow other lines to use its station, under such arrangements as the Commissioners of the District of Columbia may prescribe; and second, that if it does not do this, it shall forfeit $50 per day for the days that it does not do it.

Now, sir, to allow a company to have the power of eminent domain to acquire a considerable tract of land—and the gentleman himself intimates that the tract ought to be large enough to provide a central station for all the suburban traffic in that direction—to confer such a power upon a corporation and then simply to provide that, as to the passenger house which it may put upon that property, it shall allow the use of that passenger house by such other corporations as the Commissioners of the District may direct, but that if it does not do so, the only penalty shall be the payment of $50 per day for the days when it refuses to permit such use, seems to me to be legislation which, however well intended, would be effective in enabling this company to stand as a dog in the manger, by protecting it from being called upon to respond in damages in the ordinary way upon the ground that Congress had already prescribed the penalty in this act.

In other words, sir, a little experience, and a very painful experience, in watching the proceedings of roads which have obtained rights of way and vantage ground in competition with others, has convinced me that if any serious attempt is to be made, after granting this unwarranted power, so to restrict it as to make it as little hurtful as possible, some other method must be adopted than that which is here provided.

Mr. HEARD. I will ask the gentleman from New York whether the objection he has last made in regard to the inadequacy of the fine would be met by increasing the fine, or by providing for a forfeiture?

Mr. WARNER. Nothing short of a forfeiture would be any deterrent whatever; and to a company which employs good counsel in this District, even a threatened forfeiture, as experience has shown, has no terrors.

Mr. HEARD. The gentleman has made some suggestion in regard to a recommitment of the bill. That, of course, if meant honestly by the gentleman, as it doubtless is, would mean to reform the bill. Now, since the House has the bill before it for consideration, why should we not adopt such amendments as may be necessary to put it in acceptable form if that can be done?

Mr. WARNER. I suggest to the gentleman an amendment which I believe would put the bill in perfectly acceptable form as regards the only matter to which my criticisms have referred; and that is an amendment leaving out all provision for giving this company the right of eminent domain. It does not need to use this right; it is not pretended that it will be used mainly for this company; and as for any other company, it will be very easy to confer that right, if necessary, whenever the occasion may arise.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HEARD obtained the floor.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. I suppose it is not absolutely necessary that the company should have this particular property?

Mr. HEARD. I apprehend not. The Commissioners recommend the location of a union transfer station at this point, between Thirty-fourth and Thirty-sixth streets. It seems to me this might be limited to ground between Thirty-fourth and Thirty-fifth streets, if that would remove any objection.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. Then why make such a contention on this point?

Mr. HEARD. We are acting in accordance with the recommendation of the District Commissioners, including the Engineer Commissioner, who is supposed to be familiar with the requirements in this regard. I will say, however, to the gentleman from South Carolina and to the gentleman from New York, that so far as I am concerned as a member of the committee and as a member of the House, if it is desired to strike out the condemnation proceedings altogether and also the provision requiring a transfer station to be built, while I think that the only sufferers will be the general public (and would be inclined to object on that account), still if it is the choice of the House that those provisions should go out, let them go.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. That was my suggestion, in order that all difficulty might be obviated and the bill passed.

Mr. HEARD. Then the bill would provide simply for extending the line of the road up to the point named, which I think ought to be done, even if nothing further is.

Mr. TAWNEY. I have no objection to the bill in that form.

Mr. HEARD. I think that in the interests of the public we ought to require the erection of a decent structure to accommodate passengers; but that can be done hereafter. If such is the wish of the House, I should have no objection to asking permission to withdraw the bill and recommit it to the committee for the purpose of reforming it in that direction.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Why not amend it here in the House?

Mr. HEARD. As my colleague on the committee [Mr. RICHARDSON] suggests, we might by an amendment in the House strike out that provision authorizing the company to acquire property by condemnation or purchase, and also the provision requiring the building of a transfer station. In that case the company would take their chances about getting the ground. Hereafter if the District Commissioners should make it appear to the satisfaction of Congress that there is need for clothing the corporation with power to acquire ground for this purpose, it can be done. Two years ago I stood here insisting that this corporation should extend their line to this point for the public benefit. I am perfectly willing that those provisions be stricken out, retaining only the portion of the bill which directs this company to extend its line to the point named. That would leave to further legislation the question of the establishment of a passenger station. I understand this arrangement will obviate the objection of gentlemen who have opposed this bill. But I wish to state that I think the bill would be better as it is.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the Chair will regard general debate as closed, and the bill will be read by paragraphs, with the understanding that when the provisions referred to have been reached amendments shall be offered striking them out.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc. That the Washington and Georgetown Railroad Company be, and it is hereby, directed and required to extend its tracks and run its cars thereon as follows: Beginning at the present terminus of its tracks in Georgetown; thence west on M street to or near Thirty-fourth street; thence northerly and westerly, on a private right of way to be acquired by said company, to a point to be designated by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, between M and Prospect, Thirty-fourth and Thirty-sixth streets.

Mr. GROUT. I do not see that it is specified what kind of power shall be used over this extended line—I presume the cable.

Mr. HEARD. The cable, of course.

Mr. GROUT. Then, why not amend by inserting in the fifth line the words "to be operated by cable?"

Mr. HEARD. There is no objection to that.

Mr. GROUT. Without such an amendment, if there should be a steam railway up there it might undertake to pass its steam cars over this line of road.

Mr. HEARD. There is no objection at all to the amendment the gentleman suggests.

Mr. GROUT. I move to amend by inserting after the word "follows," in the fifth line, the words "to be operated by cable."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That all plans relating to the location and construction of said railroad extension and of the passenger houses hereinafter mentioned shall be subject to the approval of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia; the said company shall furnish at the western terminus of its route a passenger house within such reasonable time as may be required by the said Commissioners, and shall maintain such passenger house and permit its use by connecting lines of street car companies for the safe, convenient, and comfortable transfer of passengers, upon terms mutually agreed upon by said railway company and the connecting line or lines, or in default of agreement, as may be fixed by the said Commissioners. Any violation of the requirements of this section as to passenger house shall be punished by a fine of $50 for each day such violation is continued and maintained, said fine to be recovered in any court of competent jurisdiction at the suit of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

Mr. HEARD. Mr. Chairman, in accordance with the understanding with gentlemen of the committee, I move to strike out of this section, beginning with line 2, after the word "extension," down to and including the word "mentioned," in line 3, the following words: "extension and of the passenger houses hereinafter mentioned;" so it will read:

That all plans relating to the location and construction of said railroad shall be subject to the approval of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, etc.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. COOMBS. I object and ask for a vote upon it.

Mr. HULL. I object, Mr. Chairman.

It seems to me that one of the very things that should not be adopted is proposed in the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri. Every man who has gone to Arlington by that railroad line will agree with me, first, that it should be extended to the Aqueduct Bridge; and second, that some provision should be made for the care of the people who are compelled to wait on the street at the end of the route either for a carriage or some other conveyance to get to Arlington.

I am one of those who believe that this company should be compelled to erect a passenger station there, and I am opposed to the motion of the gentleman from Missouri, for the reason that every Sunday hundreds of people are going to Arlington, and if it is raining they are compelled to stand in the rain or else seek shelter in private doorways until carriages come along to take them to the national cemetery.

I do not believe that the railroad company is specially interested in this extension. I believe that the people are directly interested in it, and the course adopted upon this bill has been largely, in my mind, the erecting of a "man of straw" to fight. The Commissioners recommend the bill; the railroad does not ask it. The company does not get a cent more for carrying passengers to the end of the line than it gets for carrying them to the present terminus; and this is a great, rich corporation, carrying more people than any other company in Washington, having a valuable franchise, and they ought to be compelled to provide some means to take care of their passengers at the end of the line.

You adopted an amendment compelling it to provide a little station here at the foot of the hill to accommodate the few people who transfer from the main line to the Baltimore and Ohio branch. Now, there are a hundred that take the cars out to the terminus of the road for one that is transferred at the foot of the hill here.

Mr. HEARD. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HULL. Certainly.

Mr. HEARD. I do not know whether the gentleman was present during the course of this debate or not.

Mr. HULL. I have been here all the time.

Mr. HEARD. Then you understand the objections which have been made to the acquisition of the property at the place suggested by the Commissioners for the erection of this station. The object of the committee now is to get rid of these objections, if possible, and yet authorize the extension of the road, leaving the question of the acquisition of property for the construction of a passenger station to be determined hereafter.

Now, if my colleague will prepare an amendment providing for the erection of a passenger station there, drawn up in proper terms, I am perfectly willing to accept it. The only effort now is to meet the wishes of those gentlemen who have objected to that provision of the bill.

Mr. HULL. I am opposed to striking out the section that has been discussed, and I wish to say that I favor the amendment of my friend Mr. GROUT, that this property shall be used exclusively for a passenger station, or revert to the original owners.

Mr. HEARD. I agree with that. I am not opposed to it. I would much prefer not to strike out the provision in the bill. I am satisfied with the amendment of the gentleman from Vermont, but I believe it avoids very much of the confusion and objection that has been raised if the provision for this passenger station is stricken out; so I have moved to strike it out in accordance with the understanding which I supposed had been reached.

Mr. BURROWS. Let us test it by a vote of the committee.

Mr. HULL. If the House agrees to strike it out, let it do so, but let the matter be tested by a direct vote. I am not willing to sacrifice what I believe to be right merely to meet the objections of some gentlemen who do not agree with me. I would prefer to leave the matter to the judgment of the House rather than accommodate myself to the views of some other member of the House who differs with me.

Mr. TAWNEY. Let me ask the gentleman why is it not as necessary to have a station at the present terminus as it is if the road is extended three blocks farther?

Mr. HULL. I think it is necessary.

Mr. TAWNEY. Why is it necessary at all? When people are coming this way there are cars to get in at the terminus. If they are going west, when they get to the terminus of the line, if they are going beyond there, they have got to walk or wait for a conveyance.

Mr. HULL. They should have provision made for a passenger house there of some kind now to shelter people.

Mr. TAWNEY. Is it the duty of Congress to provide shelter for the people?

Mr. HULL. It is the duty of a corporation, receiving the money of the people, to provide proper accommodations for them, especially when they are enjoying a valuable right that costs them nothing. It is necessary that they should provide a depot for the people, and I think they should be compelled to erect one there. If you extend the road up to the Aqueduct Bridge you are beyond the reach of the private shelter which people have been compelled to seek in doorways, because you strike that part of the street where one side is practically a wall of rock, and where you can get no shelter. For that reason I am insisting that they should be compelled to put up a passenger house there.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. In reply to the remarks just made by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] I wish to read, for the information of the committee, part of a section of the act by which the Washington and Georgetown Railway Company was originally incorporated. The first part of section 10 reads as follows:

And be it further enacted, That said company shall procure such passenger rooms, ticket offices, stables, and depots, at such points as the business of the railroad and the convenience of the public may require.

That was passed on the 17th of May, 1862. So this is not a new question, but is a requirement of the original act of incorporation, which for more than thirty years has not been carried out; and I presume that the gentleman's objection would be disregarded in the same way.

Mr. HULL. We can put it in the law, all the same.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HEARD].

Mr. HEARD. I want to say that I agree perfectly with the remarks of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] that these people ought to be compelled, whether they want to or not, to extend that line, and they ought also to be compelled, under proper conditions, to provide accommodations for the passengers. That is my view. Yet, in view of the opposition to the bill as it stood, I was content to have this matter go out of the bill.

Believing as the gentleman does about the matter, having made the motion, I myself shall vote against it, because I believe that they ought to have the power to secure that property and to build a station there. With the consent of the House, I will withdraw the amendment which I have offered.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the withdrawal of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HEARD]?

Mr. GEAR. I object.

Mr. HEARD. Then let the amendment be voted down.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. HEARD. Let the amendment be again reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2, section 2, line 2, after the word "extension" strike out the words "and of the passenger houses hereinafter mentioned."

Mr. HEARD. I will simply suggest to the members of the committee that whether we subsequently adopt the provision about the building of the station house or not, that amendment would not materially interfere. If you by a subsequent provision require the construction of the house you withdraw the supervision of its construction from the District Commissioners if you strike this out; but that can be put in to such amendment if adopted.

Mr. BURROWS. It would be better to leave it in.

The question was taken on the amendment, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. COOMBS. Division.

The committee divided, and there were—ayes 9, noes 39.

Mr. COOMBS. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. COOMBS] makes the point of no quorum. The Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. HEARD, and the gentleman from New York, Mr. COOMBS.

Mr. HEARD. Owing to the probability that there is not a quorum present, I think it is my duty to the committee to ask to withdraw the bill and to give the committee authority to report a substitute, if in the judgment of the committee it deems it best.

Mr. DINGLEY. The gentleman can move to recommit.

The CHAIRMAN. That can only be done in the House.

Mr. COOMBS. I move that the committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HEARD] has the floor.

Mr. HEARD. I will move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. O'NEIL of Massachusetts, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 6953) to amend an act entitled, "An act to incorporate the Washington and Georgetown Railroad Company," approved May 17, 1862, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. HEARD. Mr. Speaker, I desire now to withdraw the bill from the consideration of the House for the present.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the gentleman can withdraw the bill from the further consideration of the House.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HEARD. I now desire to call up the bill which was before the House on the last District day, and which was withdrawn from the House because of the fact that no quorum voted upon the amendment which was pending. I now call up the bill H. R. 6596.

Mr. HEPBURN. I submit to the chairman of the committee that it is scarcely fair to do that. We understood from the gentleman a little while ago, when objection was made to the consideration of another bill, that as soon as the committee disposed of two bills, naming them—the two that have been disposed of—he would then call up the bill we were considering when the House adjourned two weeks ago—not the L-street bill.

Mr. HEARD. The gentleman misunderstood me clearly, for on the contrary I told the gentleman that I felt that, the L-street bill having progressed further than the other, debate having been closed and the bill having been withdrawn because no quorum appeared on the amendment which was offered, that bill was entitled to precedence, and that I should call it up first.

Mr. HEPBURN. That is not the understanding. I certainly understood the gentleman clearly to say that the measure that we were considering two weeks ago would be called up as soon as we had disposed of those two measures.

Mr. HEARD. I clearly intended to say a different thing. The gentleman very clearly misunderstood me.

Mr. HEPBURN. I did not misunderstand you; you misunderstood yourself.

Mr. HEARD. I beg the gentleman's pardon. The gentleman misunderstood me, because I am sure I stated a different thing.

Mr. GROUT. The gentleman from Iowa asked what bill it was understood we would return to.

Mr. HEARD. Well.

Mr. GROUT. Designating the one that we left off upon the other day, when a quorum was lacking, which was the suburban railroad, and I understood the gentleman, maybe unintentionally, to state that that was the bill we would return to after two bills were disposed of.

Mr. HEARD. Of course I do not pretend to infallibility, and it may be I said what I did not intend to say; but I desire to say to the gentleman from Vermont now, that I had stated to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], who came to me and asked about the other bill, that it would not be taken up until the Belt Line bill was disposed of; and I had so stated to my colleague [Mr. RICHARDSON] and others who asked for the consideration of that bill.

For the reason I stated before I asked to call up this bill. As I say, Mr. Speaker, I have no desire to take any advantage of the House, nor do I see how it can make any difference, not the slightest. The L street road bill that was before the House before had progressed to that stage where general debate had been closed, the first section had been read for amendment, an amendment had been offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN], and a substitute by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON], and upon the pendency of that substitute the vote was being taken when no quorum was developed. It was my belief that it was the proper thing to return to that bill, it having been abandoned because on a vote no quorum appeared to be present.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I raise the point of order against the consideration of this bill. My point of order is that the measure that was pending, and which the House was considering at the time of adjournment two weeks ago, that being District day, is now the proper measure to be considered by the House. That it is the regular order. I understand the gentleman to say that he seeks to have this other matter disposed of.

The SPEAKER. What disposition was made of it? What was the order in relation to the bill when it was up before?

Mr. HEPBURN. None. It was under consideration when the committee rose, pending consideration.

Mr. COOMBS. If the Speaker will look at the RECORD, on page 6419, he will find this:

> Mr. HEARD. I desire to withdraw the bill from the consideration of the House.
> The SPEAKER. The gentleman withdraws the bill.

Then, after that, the House considered the bill in relation to the Great Falls Railroad, which passed the House; then came the Suburban Railroad bill, which went over on account of lack of a quorum. The House was dividing, and that bill was before the House. That is the way it stands in the RECORD, and that is the true statement.

Mr. HEARD. It is not the purpose of the committee to be put in the attitude of taking advantage of any misunderstanding on the part of the gentleman from Iowa or anybody else, so far as I am concerned and as the committee is concerned. We thought that that bill had the right of way, for the reason I have stated: that it had passed the stage of general debate. I will not, however, call up that bill for the present. If the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] is here I will call up the suburban bill, but having made the statement to him that said bill would not be called up next, I will not call that up at present.

Mr. HULL. He is not here.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, upon the question of order, if I may be heard, this is a matter which is entirely in the discretion of the Committee on the District of Columbia. While I would be perfectly willing to take up the suburban bill, it seems that the chairman has made an arrangement with the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], who is not here, and who is not here possibly by reason of that arrangement, and it might be considered as bad faith to take that up in his absence; while I would not object if he were present, I do object to be deprived of the right to call up another measure.

It is a matter entirely within the discretion of the committee to decide what measure it will take up. While the chairman has very properly stated that he would not take up the suburban bill, because there appears that some misunderstanding has been created, by reason of some statement he made, inasmuch as that can not be done, I insist we ought to take up the other and dispose of it. We have an hour, and I think we can dispose of it in that time.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. You can not do it.

Mr. HEARD. Mr. Speaker, I do not like to take any issue with my colleague. I aimed to state exactly to the gentleman from Iowa what I stated here, and in consequence of what I stated to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], and because of that statement, perhaps, he has probably absented himself, and while I do not feel that the District should lose the balance of the day, and I do not much like withdrawing absolutely from the field, yet I am not willing to assume a position which might be considered unfair to anybody concerned.

I suggest to the gentleman from Tennessee, my colleague, that if we call up this L-street road bill now, the first proposition will be a vote on the pending amendment, and if that develops the want of a quorum, then the bill will have to be withdrawn again. I am advised, Mr. Speaker, that my friend, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], is now here, so that the embarrassment on that account no longer exists, and I now move to take up the suburban railroad bill, which was under consideration in the House two weeks ago.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6416) to amend the charter of the District of Columbia Suburban Railway Company.

The SPEAKER. The pending question is upon the amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], which the Clerk will now read:

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all of lines 6, 7, 8, 9, and 10 on page 1, after the word "that" in line 6; and strike out line 1 on page 2, and also the words "and assigns are hereby created" in line 2 of the same page; and insert after the word "company" in line 4, page 2, these words:

"Is hereby created to consist of such person or persons as shall at public auction, to be held at such time and place as shall be prescribed by the District Commissioners, after notice of not less than thirty days by publication in a Washington, D. C., newspaper, bid the highest percentage of annual gross proceeds of said railway business, for a term of not exceeding twenty years."

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I do not want to say anything on this amendment except to call the attention of the House to the character of it lest some gentleman should not know what they are to vote upon.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, does not this bill require to be considered in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. GROUT. It is being considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. COOMBS. I suggest to the gentleman from Tennessee that he did not ask to have it considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. It is being so considered, if I am not mistaken. I am informed that the Journal shows that the bill is being considered in the House as in committee, and one section of it has been read.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I do not feel well enough to make any remarks on the subject of this amendment, even if I had the inclination to do so, and if the necessity existed. Upon last District day I undertook to present the merits of the amendment to the House to the best of my ability. It involves merely putting up this franchise for sale to the highest bidder, the bids to be based upon a percentage of the gross proceeds of the business to be carried on. I merely wish to call the attention of the House to the character of the amendment, so that all may know what they are called to vote upon.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Only a word in reply, Mr. Speaker. I do not think this amendment ought to be adopted. It is a proposition to sell a railroad franchise. The adoption of it would be a complete revolution, a complete departure from the course of proceeding in reference to street railroads that has ever prevailed in the District of Columbia, and I see no reason why this new method should be applied to this little suburban road, which merely wants to get into town from the neighborhood of Bladensburg. I hope the gentleman will not insist upon the amendment.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I understand, Mr. Speaker, that for this suburban road the adoption of the amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi would be equivalent to striking out the enacting clause of the bill?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. The gentleman from Illinois is mistaken and so is the gentleman from Tennessee. This amendment does not strike out any enacting clause. All it does is to strike out the names of the persons mentioned as incorporators. Instead of saying that A, B, C, and their associates shall be a body politic, it simply gives the name of the corporation and says that it shall be a body politic, to consist of such persons as shall bid the highest percentage of the gross proceeds for this franchise. The amendment strikes out the names and leaves the corporation to consist of persons who shall buy the franchise in the manner prescribed.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. And limits the grant of the franchise to twenty years.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Yes; but in order to bring the matter up fairly, I will say that I am perfectly willing that the limit shall be extended to fifty years, and, if it is parliamentary to do so, I will now modify my amendment in that way. All that I want is to guard against granting these corporate privileges in perpetuity. I append to my remarks an article on this subject from the Evening Star of this city:

STREETS, STREET RAILROADS, AND PROPERTY OWNERS.

To the Editor of the Evening Star:

In the discussion of the bill for the extension of the tracks of the Belt Line Railroad, the question has arisen as to the right of property owners to damages. Citizens who are interested do not think Congress will let their homes be destroyed and the market value of their property, whether for their own use, for rental or sale, be seriously injured by the destruction of the trees and the parking, which now give to the street the shade and beauty and repose which are so highly prized, without at least making the railroad corporation liable for actual ascertainable damages.

The United States dedicated the street and beautified it with trees and appropriated the spaces for roadway, sidewalk, and parking. The planting of the trees was a pledge that the dedication was made in good faith, and that if the citizen bought land abutting on the street so dedicated and appropriated and spent his money in building a residence, the Government which had induced him to build would not allow the character of the street to be radically changed and its eligibility for residence destroyed without compensation.

To say that the Government owns the fee of the street and can do with it as it chooses, without regard to the interests of the abutting owners, whom it induced to establish their homes where they are, is to say that the Government may be like a heathen god—a greater scoundrel than any of his worshipers.

It has been held by the highest courts of the different States that the right of an abutting owner to damages does not depend upon his ownership of the fee of the street. At one time the supreme court of New York took the view that this right did so depend, but the court of appeals, in the Story case (90 N. Y., 122), and the subsequent elevated railroad cases, held that damages could be recovered for an injury to an easement as well as to a fee. The reason and right of the thing have been well stated by the supreme court of Colorado, in the City of Denver vs. Bayer (7 Colo., 113), as follows:

The position taken in some of the cases is, that if the adjoining owner have not the fee of the streets, and the value of his property be diminished by 50 per cent by the construction of a railroad therein, he has no redress; while if he be the fortunate owner of this fee, he may recover not only for the taking or appropriation of the streets, but also for the interference with his easement, and the decrease occasioned in the value of his premises. Yet, whether he own the fee or not, his rights in connection with the street, while it remains a street, are practically the same. His possession of his fee in no special way contributes to the use or enjoyment of his lot, and enables him to exercise no greater control over the street than he would have without it.

The distinction as to the fee seems to rest upon the fact that in one case there is a wrongful incumbrance of his freehold, while in the other there is not. The actual injury is about the same in both. But while, if the fee rests in the city, there may be no wrongful incumbrance of his estate in the sense of these cases there is under our Constitution at least a damaging thereof, for which he is entitled to compensation.

Congress can be trusted to eventually recognize a right which is now guarded by the constitutions or statutes of so many of the States, and to enact some general law under which such franchises may be acquired, under proper conditions, for their fair market value. What may be accomplished in this direction has been signally illustrated in the city of Glasgow, as shown in an article entitled "Street Railroad Franchises," published in last Wednesday's Star.

C. K.

The question being taken on the amendment as modified, the Speaker declared that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 14, noes 47.

Mr. WILLIAMS. No quorum.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and Mr. COOMBS and Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee were appointed tellers.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 92, nays 67, answered "present" 3, not voting 190; as follows:

SENATE.

TUESDAY, June 12, 1894.

The Senate met at 10 o'clock a. m.

Prayer by the Rev. E. B. BAGBY, Chaplain of the House of Representatives.

The VICE-PRESIDENT being absent, the President pro tempore took the chair.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on motion of Mr. CHANDLER, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (R. R. 6500) to define and establish the units of electrical measure was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

The bill (H. R. 7293) regulating the procedure in criminal causes in the district of Minnesota was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The joint resolution (H. Res. 172) granting full permission to the State of Maryland and to the several State courts to occupy the old United States court-house in the city of Baltimore for the period of five years was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. PEFFER presented the petition of H. W. Cadott and sundry other citizens of Jackson County, Kans., praying that fraternal beneficiary societies, orders, or associations, operating upon the lodge system and providing for the payment of life, sick, accident, and other benefits to the members, and dependents of such members, shall be exempt from all the provisions of this bill requiring taxation in any form; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. ALLEN presented a memorial of Hastings Saddle and Harness Makers' Union, No. 41, of Hastings, Nebr., remonstrating against the present system of convict labor; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a petition of the McCook Coöperative Building and Loan Association, of McCook, Nebr., praying that mutual loan and building associations be exempted from the proposed income-tax provision of the pending tariff bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also persented a petition of sundry citizens of the State of Washington, praying that section 2324 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to mining claims, be amended so as to suspend for the year 1894 the performance of $100 worth of labor; which was referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

Mr. PASCO. I present a joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Florida, in the nature of a petition, praying that the Fort Jupiter military reservation be not sold at public sale, but that it be opened to homestead entry. Without taking the time of the Senate to have it read, I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD, and the bill on the subject having been reported, I ask that it lie on the table.

The petition was ordered to lie on the table, and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

House joint resolution requesting the Secretary of the Interior not to cause the Fort Jupiter military reservation to be sold at public sale; and to urge the Senators and Representatives from Florida in the Congress of the United States to secure the passage by Congress of an act opening the said reservation to homestead entry.

Whereas the Fort Jupiter military reservation in Florida was established, by order of the President, May 14, 1855, and not being longer required for military purposes it was relinquished by the War Department, March 16, 1880, and placed under the control of the Secretary of the Interior; and

Whereas, by an act of Congress, July 5, 1884, entitled "An act to provide for the disposal of abandoned and useless military reservations," the Secretary of the Interior was empowered to cause the lands embraced in said reservation to be sold at public sale to the highest bidder for cash; and the said lands never having been sold under the said act; and

Whereas there are many residents on said reservation who have in good faith settled upon the same and made extensive and valuable improvements thereon, who would suffer great loss if the said lands were sold at public sale: Therefore, be it

Resolved by the Legislature of the State of Florida, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, requested not to cause the lands embraced in the Fort Jupiter military reservation in Florida to be sold under the act of July 5, 1884.

And be it further resolved, That our Senators and Representatives in Congress be, and they are hereby, requested to use every effort to secure the passage by Congress of an act opening the Fort Jupiter military reservation to homestead entry under the laws of the United States.

And be it further resolved, That the secretary of state is hereby directed to send copies of this resolution to the Secretary of the Interior and to our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

Approved June 3, 1893.

Mr. PALMER presented a petition of sundry employés of the Haish and J. L. Elwood manufacturing companies, and a petition of the Superior Barbed Wire Company, all of Dekalb, Ill., praying that the Senate reconsider its action in placing fencing wire on the free list, and that the import duty of 1¼ cents per pound be restored on that article; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented memorials of F. Madelener and sundry other citizens of Illinois, remonstrating against an increase of the internal-revenue tax on whisky, and also against an extension of the bonded period; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. HOAR presented the petition of James W. Gifford and 1,163 other citizens of Massachusetts, praying that in the passage of any law providing for the taxation of incomes the funds of mutual life insurance companies and associations be exempted from taxation, and also that the premium paid for life insurance by individuals who are subject to taxation shall be deducted from their taxable income in the same manner as such premiums are exempted under the income-tax laws of other countries; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. VILAS presented the petition of A. J. Frame and sundry other citizens of Waukesha, Wis.; and the petition of Theodore Kersten and sundry other citizens of Wisconsin, praying that mutual life-insurance companies and associations be exempted from the proposed income-tax provision of the pending tariff bill; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CULLOM presented a petition of Lagrange Council, No. 861, Royal Arcanum, of Lagrange, Ill., and a petition of sundry citizens of Fmma, Ill., praying that fraternal beneficiary societies, orders, or associations be exempted from the proposed income-tax provision of the pending tariff bill; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. LODGE presented petitions of George H. Newhall and 12 other citizens of Lynn; of L. U. Francis and 8 other members of Bristol Council, No. 158, Royal Arcanum, of Staunton; of Joseph E. Ober and 15 other citizens of West Medford, and of Fannie T. Leonard and 24 other members of Siloam Commandery No. 360, of Haverhill, all in the State of Massachusetts, praying that fraternal beneficiary societies, orders, or associations be exempted from the proposed income-tax provision of the pending tariff bill: which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. FRYE presented a petition of 14 citizens of Pembroke, Me., praying that fraternal beneficiary societies, orders, and associations be exempted from the proposed income-tax provision of the pending tariff bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. MILLS presented a petition of the Commercial Club, of Albuquerque, N. Mex., praying for the enactment of legislation authorizing citizens of the United States to go upon grants of land made by the Spanish and Mexican Governments and mine for precious metals; which was referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

Mr. CULLOM presented sundry memorials of wholesale and retail liquor dealers of Illinois, remonstrating against an increase of the internal-revenue tax on whisky, and also against an extension of the bonded period; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. COKE presented a memorial of the members of the bar of El Paso, Tex., remonstrating against the passage of the bill creating a court at Laredo, Tex.; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

REPORT OF A COMMITTEE.

Mr. VILAS, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2065) to prevent the carrying of obscene literature and articles designed for indecent and immoral use from one State or Territory into another State or Territory, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report thereon.

SENATORIAL INVESTIGATING COMMITTEE.

Mr. GRAY. I submit a partial report from the special committee to investigate certain matters ordered several weeks ago, and ask that the report may be printed.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator from Delaware be kind enough to state what the nature of the report is?

Mr. GRAY. It is a report from the investigating committee appointed some two or three weeks ago by the Senate to investigate certain alleged attempts at bribery and alleged connection of the sugar trust with legislation. It is a report of the testimony of a witness and of the refusal of that witness to answer certain questions which the committee thought pertinent to the subject then under examination before the committee.

Mr. HOAR. My object in asking the Senator's attention to the matter is to ascertain whether a similar report was printed in the RECORD.

Mr. GRAY. I do not recollect whether the previous report was printed in the RECORD, but I ask that this report be so printed.

Mr. HOAR. I suggest that if the other report was printed in the RECORD the whole history of the matter should be inserted in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FAULKNER in the chair). The Chair will state that the former report having been read, it was made a part of the RECORD.

Mr. HOAR. I suggest that as a part of the history of the transaction has been put in the RECORD, the Senator from Delaware had better obtain leave to have this report, without being read, put in the RECORD.

Mr. GRAY. If the report is printed in the RECORD it will answer every purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware asks unanimous consent to have the report printed in the RECORD. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The report is as follows:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. GRAY, from the Special Committee to Investigate Attempts at Bribery, etc., under resolution of the Senate of May 17, 1894, submitted the following report:

The special committee, under and in pursuance of a resolution of the Senate of May 17, A. D. 1894, as follows—

Whereas it has been stated in the Sun, a newspaper published in New York, that bribes have been offered to certain Senators to induce them to vote against the pending tariff bill; and

Whereas it has also been stated in a signed article in the Press, a newspaper published in Philadelphia, that the sugar schedule has been made up as it now stands in the proposed amendment in consideration of large sums of money paid for campaign purposes of the Democratic party: Therefore,

Resolved, That a committee of five Senators be appointed to investigate these charges and to inquire further whether any contributions have been made by the sugar trust, or any person connected therewith, to any political party for campaign or election purposes or to secure or defeat legislation, and whether any Senator has been or is speculating in what are known as sugar stocks during the consideration of the tariff bill now before the Senate, and with power to send for persons and papers and to administer oaths.

Resolved further, That said committee be authorized to investigate and report upon any charge or charges which may be filed before it alleging that the action of any Senator has been corruptly or improperly influenced in the consideration of said bill, or that any attempt has been made to so influence legislation—have attended to their duties so far as they have been able, because of the matters hereinafter stated, and ask leave to report in part as follows:

In pursuance of said resolution the said committee met in the Capitol on the 21st day of May, 1894, at 10 o'clock a. m., and after the examination of certain matters embraced in the first paragraph of the said resolution, the committee proceeded to investigate further the matters submitted to them by the said resolution, and on the 8th day of June, A. D. 1894, the committee being duly assembled, one Elverton R. Chapman, who had been duly subpœnaed and summoned as a witness to appear before said committee, then and there appeared and submitted to be examined as a witness. The witness was duly sworn by the chairman of said committee.

After certain testimony had been given by him, his examination was at his request continued until the 9th day of June, A. D. 1894, at which date he appeared, and the testimony of the said Elverton R. Chapman having been resumed, the following proceedings were had before the committee, and he was asked the following questions, to which questions he made the following answers and refusals to answer:

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Chapman, you were asked yesterday whether your firm is a large dealer in sugar stock, and you were told by Senator DAVIS that in connection with this question, which was to be considered as preliminary to inquiry of the witness into dealings he or his firm may have had in sugar stocks during the pendency of the present tariff bill in the Senate, in which dealings Senators were, or are, directly or indirectly interested. That was the question in regard to which you said yesterday that you would like, before answering, to consider. What do you say this morning in answer to that question already put, and I put it to you again?

Mr. CHAPMAN. With reference to the first part of the inquiry, as it is matter of public notoriety among our associate members of the New York Stock Exchange, I state that we have handled large quantities of stock of the American Sugar Refining Company during the pendency of this bill.

Senator LODGE. You have bought and sold?

Mr. CHAPMAN. Bought and sold. Perhaps is better bought and sold than handled.

The CHAIRMAN. Were any of those transactions in sugar stock or certificates, so called, transactions in which any Senators of the United States were interested, either directly or indirectly, during the pendency of the present tariff bill or the consideration of the present tariff bill?

Mr. CHAPMAN. With all due respect to this honorable committee, I decline to answer that question or any question relating to the business of the firm of Moore & Schley, of which I am a partner.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you finished your answer?

Mr. CHAPMAN. I have.

The CHAIRMAN. You have? Do you decline to answer that question on the ground that its answer may tend in any way to criminate yourself or expose you to a criminal prosecution of any kind whatever?

Mr. CHAPMAN. I decline to answer that question for the reason that we are brokers, and as such are engaged in the business of buying, selling, and carrying stocks, bonds, and other securities dealt in on the New York Stock Exchange for the account of our customers, who are the principals. In transactions we are simply their agents, and as such have neither a moral nor a legal right to divulge the details of business with which we are intrusted. Our relations with our clients are those of the closest confidence, and should we violate this confidence, even at the demand of this honorable committee, we should justly forfeit the respect of those upon whom we must depend for our business.

The CHAIRMAN. You have given a reason for declining to answer the question before the last. My last question was whether you decline to answer for the reason that an answer might expose you to criminal prosecution or tend to expose you to such in any way.

Mr. CHAPMAN. I do not.

The CHAIRMAN. You do not for that reason.

Senator LODGE. You decline to answer for the reason that you have just stated?

The CHAIRMAN. And not for the reason that I have just asked?

Mr. CHAPMAN. That is correct.

Senator DAVIS. You have been summoned to appear before this committee as a witness, have you not?

Mr. CHAPMAN. Yes.

Senator DAVIS. And you appear pursuant to that summons?

Mr. CHAPMAN. I do, sir.

Senator DAVIS. Mr. Chapman, you are asked whether the firm of Moore & Schley have bought or sold what are known as sugar stocks during the month of February, 1894, and after the first day of that month, for or in the interest direct or indirect, of any United States Senator.

Mr. CHAPMAN. I decline to answer that question

Senator DAVIS. Has the firm of Moore & Schley during the month of March, 1894, bought or sold any stocks or securities known as sugar stocks for or in the interest, direct or indirect, of any United States Senator?

Mr. CHAPMAN. I decline to answer.

Senator DAVIS. Has the firm of Moore & Schley during the month of April, 1894, bought or sold any stocks or securities known as sugar stocks for or in the interest, direct or indirect, of any United States Senator?

Mr. CHAPMAN. I decline to answer.

Senator DAVIS. Has the firm of Moore & Schley, during the month of May, 1894, bought or sold any stocks or securities known as sugar stock for or in the interest, direct or indirect, of any United States Senator?

Mr. CHAPMAN. I decline to answer.

Senator DAVIS. Has the firm of Moore & Schley, during the month of June, 1894, bought or sold any stocks or securities known as sugar stock for or in the interest, direct or indirect, of any United States Senator?

Mr. CHAPMAN. I decline to answer.

Senator DAVIS. Is the firm of Moore & Schley at present carrying any sugar stock for the benefit of or in the interest, direct or indirect, of any United States Senator?

Mr. CHAPMAN. I decline to answer.

Senator DAVIS. Mr. Chapman, has your attention been called to, and have you considered, sections 102, 103, and 104 of the Revised Statutes of the United States upon the subject of refusal of a witness to answer a question pertinent to the inquiry when addressed to him by a committee duly authorized to investigate?

Mr. CHAPMAN. In a general way, yes.

Senator DAVIS. You have read the statute?

Mr. CHAPMAN. I have not read it.

Senator DAVIS. I show you the sections to which I refer. Just cast your eye over them.

Mr. CHAPMAN (after reading). I have now read the statute.

Senator DAVIS. After reading that statute, do you still persist in your refusal to answer the several questions which have been addressed to you?

Mr. CHAPMAN. I do.

Senator ALLEN. Mr. Chapman, Hon. NELSON W. ALDRICH is a United States Senator from the State of Rhode Island, now engaged in discharging his duties as a member of the Senate, and has been since the 1st of February, 1894. You may state if he has purchased or sold any sugar stock, such as are mentioned in this resolution, through your firm during the period I have mentioned. I speak of the period from the 1st day of February, 1894, to the present moment, during all which time the tariff bill has been under discussion in the Senate.

Mr. CHAPMAN. I decline to answer.

Senator ALLEN. You decline to answer. WILLIAM V. ALLEN is a United States Senator from the State of Nebraska, and has been during this period. You may state if during that time he bought or sold or had been concerned in buying or selling sugar stocks through your firm.

Mr. CHAPMAN. I decline to answer.

Senator ALLEN. I want to state to you, in connection with this question, Mr. Chapman, that I am the WILLIAM V. ALLEN whose name is embraced in the preceding qusetion, and I give you full liberty, and make personal request of you, to testify before this committee if I have had any business transactions with your firm, or through your firm, in the purchase or sale of sugar stocks or any other stocks during that period. I hope you will waive your privilege, as you look at it, to that extent.

Mr. CHAPMAN. I decline to answer.

Senator ALLEN. You decline to answer that. The Hon. WILLIAM B. ALLISON is a United States Senator from the State of Iowa, and has been during the period I have mentioned. State whether he has been concerned in buying or selling any sugar stocks during the period I have mentioned. I am going to take you through the list of these names, and you may answer as rapidly as I can proceed with them.

Mr. CHAPMAN. I decline to answer.

Senator ALLEN. I put to you the same question in reference to Hon. WILLIAM B. BATE, a United States Senator from the State of Tennessee.

Mr. CHAPMAN. I decline to answer.

Senator ALLEN. I put to you the same question with reference to Hon. JAMES H. BERRY, a United States Senator from the State of Arkansas.

Senator ALLEN. Also Hon. JOHN W. DANIEL, a United States Senator from the State of Virginia.

Mr. CHAPMAN. I decline to answer.

Senator ALLEN. Also the Hon. CUSHMAN K. DAVIS, a United States Senator from the State of Minnesota. He is a member of the committee, and may speak for himself.

Senator DAVIS. Mr. Chapman, I request and insist that you answer that question.

Mr. CHAPMAN. I decline to answer.

Senator DAVIS. Do you wish to put me in the position of appearing to have speculated in sugar stocks through your firm?

Mr. CHAPMAN. I do not; I simply decline upon general principles.

Senator ALLEN. Also the Hon. NATHAN F. DIXON, a United States Senator from the State of Rhode Island.

Mr. CHAPMAN. I decline to answer.

Senator ALLEN. Also Hon. JOSEPH N. DOLPH, a United States Senator from the State of Oregon.

Mr. CHAPMAN. I do.
Senator ALLEN. As dealers in what are known as sugar stocks, pending the present tariff bill, since February 1, 1894, to the present time?
Mr. CHAPMAN. I do.
The CHAIRMAN. And also as to whether any of the persons named have had any dealings or not?
Mr. CHAPMAN. I decline.

The subpœna by which said witness was commanded to appear and testify before the committee at the time and place aforesaid, together with certificate of service thereof, is hereto attached, and marked "Exhibit A:"

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.
Congress of the United States.

To E. R. Chapman, New York City, greeting:

Pursuant to lawful authority, you are hereby commanded to appear forthwith before the special committee of the Senate of the United States, appointed under the resolution of the Senate of the United States of May 17, 1894, at the room of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, then and there to testify what you may know relative to the subject-matters under consideration by said committee.

Hereof fail not, as you will answer your default under the pains and penalties in such cases made and provided.

To Richard J. Bright, Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate of the United States, to serve and return.

Given under my hand, by order of the committee, this 6th day of June, in the year of our Lord 1894.

GEO. GRAY,
Chairman Special Committee.

SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES,
Office of the Sergeant-at-Arms.

I do appoint and hereby empower B. W. Layton to serve this subpœna, and to exercise all the authority in relation thereto with which I am vested by the within order.

R. J. BRIGHT,
Sergeant-at-Arms of the United States Senate.

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 7, 1894.

I made service of the within subpœna through my deputy, B. W. Layton, by the within-named E. R. Chapman, at No. 80 Broadway, New York City, at 10 o'clock a. m., on the 7th day of June, 1894.

R. J. BRIGHT,
Sergeant-at-Arms, Senate of the United States.

Your committee further report that during said examination the said witness, Elverton R. Chapman, refused and declined to answer sundry other pertinent questions duly and properly put to him, as manifestly appears from a full copy of all of his testimony taken before said committee, and of all proceedings had in connection therewith, which copy is hereto annexed and is hereby made a part of this report, as fully as if it were incorporated therein. (Exhibit B.)

In the opinion of the committee each of the questions put to said witness was a proper question, and pertinent to the question under inquiry before the committee, and was necessary to make the examination ordered by said resolution of the Senate, and that said witness is in contempt of the Senate and merits to be dealt with for his misconduct; and that said witness, by his various refusals to answer the questions as herein set forth, has violated the provisions of that certain act of Congress in such cases made and provided, being chapter 7 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, which chapter is as follows:

SEC. 102, Revised Statutes. Every person who, having been summoned as a witness by the authority of either House of Congress to give testimony or to produce papers upon any matter under inquiry before either House or any committee of either House of Congress, willfully makes default, or who, having appeared, refuses to answer any question pertinent to the question under inquiry, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, punishable by a fine of not more than $1,000 nor less than $100, and imprisonment in a common jail for not less than one month nor more than twelve months.

SEC. 103. No witness is privileged to refuse to testify to any fact or to produce any paper respecting which he shall be examined by either House of Congress, or by any committee of either House, upon the ground that his testimony to such fact or his production of such paper may tend to disgrace him or otherwise render him infamous.

SEC. 104. Whenever a witness summoned, as mentioned in section 102, fails to testify, and the facts are reported to either House, the President of the Senate or the Speaker of the House, as the case may be, shall certify the fact under the seal of the Senate or House to the district attorney for the District of Columbia, whose duty it shall be to bring the matter before the grand jury for their action.

Wherefore the committee report to the Senate, and to the end that the President of the Senate certify as to said witness his aforesaid failure to testify and his aforesaid refusals to answer, and all the facts herein, under the seal of the Senate, to the United States district attorney for the District of Columbia, in order that said witness may be proceeded against in manner and form provided by law.

GEO. GRAY,
WILLIAM LINSDAY,
C. K. DAVIS,
HENRY CABOT LODGE,
WILLIAM V. ALLEN,
Committee.

Mr. ALLEN subsequently said: I desire to submit an additional report on behalf of myself as a member of the special investigating committee. I ask that it be printed as a document, and also that it be printed with the report filed to-day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska asks that the report submitted by him may be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. HOAR. I suggest to the Senator from Nebraska that as there was an order made to print the report submitted by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] in the RECORD, it might be convenient for all of us to have his report immediately follow it in the RECORD, so that the two will appear together.

Mr. ALLEN. I desire this supplemental report to be printed immediately after the other report.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask for the reading of the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection the report will be read. The Chair hears none.

The Secretary read as follows:

ADDITIONAL REPORT OF MR. ALLEN, OF THE COMMITTEE.

In addition to the above recommendation of the committee regarding the witness E. R. Chapman, I think he ought to be brought to the bar of the Senate and required to purge himself of the contempt of which he is guilty, or be summarily punished for a refusal to do so. I therefore recommend the adoption of the following resolution by the Senate:

Whereas E. R. Chapman, a witness, was heretofore duly summoned by a select committee of the Senate, and being lawfully required to testify before said committee, has, as appears by the report of said committee, refused to answer pertinent and material questions propounded to him by said committee: Therefore,

Resolved, That the President of the Senate issue his warrant in due form under his hand and the seal of the Senate, directed to the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate, commanding him forthwith to arrest and bring to the bar of the Senate the body of said E. R. Chapman, to show cause why he should not be punished for contempt, and in the meantime to keep the said Chapman in custody to await the further order of the Senate.

Respectfully submitted.

WILLIAM V. ALLEN.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be printed in connection with the report of the majority of the committee, in the absence of objection. The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. FAULKNER introduced a bill (S. 2111) for the relief of the estate of Hugh L. Gallaher, deceased, late of Augusta County, Va.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. HOAR introduced a bill (S. 2112) for the relief of Mrs. Sidney Manse; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. WASHBURN introduced a bill (S. 2113) to amend an act entitled "An act granting to railroads the right of way through the public lands of the United States," approved March 3, 1875; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. GRAY introduced a bill (S. 2114) relating to the proof of the genuineness of disputed writing; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SQUIRE introduced a bill (S. 2115) to provide for the regulated free coinage of silver bullion into standard dollars of the United States, and for the preservation of the parity of value of the various kinds of coined money of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. POWER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

THE PADRONE SYSTEM.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the resolution I submitted yesterday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. CHANDLER, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to inform the Senate, so far as the records of the Department enable him to do so, to what extent the system now prevails under which immigrants from Italy, or other countries, fall into the hands of agents or bankers who entice or force them into contracts or customs under which their labor is farmed out to their employers, commonly called the padrone system; and also to inform the Senate whether any special measures are being taken or contemplated by the Treasury Department for breaking up every such system; whether the Department has sufficient funds at its disposal derived from the head moneys, or whether additional appropriations are needed for the suppression and extermination of such systems, and for the due enforcement of the laws prohibiting the importation of contract laborers.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would suggest to the Senator from New Hampshire and the Senate, that the resolution is the third now upon the table having the right to be presented this morning, coming over from a former day. The Senator from New Hampshire, however, asks unanimous consent that his resolution be now considered. Is there objection?

Mr. COCKRELL and others. No objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection, and the resolution is before the Senate.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask the attention of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER].

Mr. President, recently the Italian Government has shown deep interest in the suppression of the padrone system in this country under which Italian immigrants fall into the control of agents and bankers who keep them in a state of half slavery, and exact from them, for no real service, a large portion of every day's wages which they earn by severe and honest toil. The energetic and courteous Italian ambassador, the Baron Fava, has made such representations to our Government that renewed efforts are being made by the President, the Secretary of State, and especially by the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Carlisle, and the efficient Superintendent of Immigration, Mr. Stump, for the extermination of the vicious system. To bring to public attention this creditable coöperative movement of the two Governments, and to ascertain the existing situation with a view to additional legislation if necessary, is the object of the resolution now before the Senate, and which I hope may be allowed to pass unanimously.

It will, however, be impossible to completely destroy the objectionable padrone system until a sentiment hostile to its continuance is avowed among the better and wealthier class of Italians who have become residents in this country, and who ought to be willing to render their assistance through organized effort. Something is being done in this direction, and more must be done to protect Italian laborers in the full and free enjoyment of their liberty and their hard earnings.

I annex to these remarks an account from the Boston Journal of June 1 of a meeting in Faneuil Hall of an organization against the padrone system which has been effected and is doing noble work in Boston under the lead of Mr. C. Conte, supported by the best citizens of Massachusetts. Similar organizations ought to be effected in New York City without delay:

[Boston Journal, Friday, June 1, 1894.]

AN UPRISING—ITALIANS OF BOSTON HOLD A MASS MEETING IN FANEUIL HALL AND PROTEST AGAINST THE PADRONE SYSTEM AND OTHER ABUSES.

A most significant meeting was held in Faneuil Hall last evening. It was a mass meeting of Italians and Americans, held for the purpose of discussing the best means of helping, morally and socially, the people of the Italian colony in Boston. Fully 1,200 swarthy sons of sunny Italy were there, and they were a pretty lively crowd. The actions of many bosses under the padrone system were vigorously denounced by the speakers, also the methods of numerous Italian bankers. Each speaker was interrupted frequently by vigorous applause, and sharp resolutions were adopted. Some of the speakers talked in English, some in Italian.

The meeting was held under the auspices of the Societe Purificatrice George Washington and other Italian societies. On the platform was an American and an Italian flag. Mr. C. Conte, Presidente del Circolo Umanitario Educatino, called the meeting to order and introduced Mr. Edwin D. Mead as the presiding officer. Mr. Mead made an earnest address in which he denounced the padrone system as a species of human slavery. He explained why this was so, and evidently had the sympathy of the audience. He spoke of the men under the direction of the bosses being compelled to buy their food of their employers, and being charged exorbitant rates for it. The methods of some of the Italian bankers were also strongly condemned by Mr. Mead.

A vigorous address in Italian was made by Antonio Martorana, who said in Italian substantially what Mr. Mead had said in English. Then Georgio Capparelli, presidente della Societa Fratelli Bandiera, was presented and made an effective address in English. He said that all Italians believed in justice and humanity. The Italian colony in Boston was suffering greatly. It was largely made up of poor laboring people who are out of work. Their present condition was due to the bosses. These bosses advertise for men, and, getting them, send them in freight cars like cattle far off. They are put to work and are at the mercy of the bosses, of whom they are forced to buy their food. Exorbitant charges are made for bread, macaroni, etc.—twice as high as they would cost at an ordinary grocery store in Boston.

When these poor people try to save their earnings and place them in the care of an Italian banker they do not know positively that their money is safe. Such people as these bosses and bankers are not fit to live in a civilized world, except behind prison bars, said the speaker, and the crowd cheered. Continuing, he advocated the establishment of national American banks at the North End, where the Italians could deposit their money and know it was all right. There should also be reputable employment offices instituted at the North End. What should be done was to make these Italians citizens of the United States. Out of 20,000 Italians in Boston only 200 were entitled to vote, he said. This should be remedied.

The principal speech of the evening was made by Mr. C. Conte, a handsome Italian, who occupied a prominent seat on the platform during the entire meeting. Although he has only been in Boston five or six weeks, he has kept up a vigorous fight against the above-named abuses. He has established a weekly paper called L'Amico del Popolo, one page being printed in English, the rest in Italian. Mr. Conte spoke in Italian and was really quite eloquent. He said that the question was a larger one than it was generally thought to be. It was a moral question first, because the families of most of the Italians who came here lived in Italy. The wives and children were without protection in Italy. Many of the Italians remained here seven or eight years without their families, and were led into temptation to commit sin.

It is true that they are dirty, because fourteen or fifteen have to sleep in little rooms with three or four beds in them. This kind of life has a bad influence on their character and degrades them very naturally.

Then these men do not love Italy after they have been here in America some time. But they can not supply this love by substituting America. All they know of America is the bosses, who make them work like slaves and abuse them all the time. They should become citizens. Under proper conditions they would become law-abiding and reputable men. Now, out of 15,000 Italians in Boston, only 200 were citizens, and of this number probably not more than 95 voted. A Government agent from Washington had recently been in Boston investigating the condition of the Italian laboring classes. It was hoped he would urge some action on the part of the Government. A brief speech in English was also made by Mr. Walker, of the Epworth Mission, on Hull street at the North End.

The following resolutions were unanimously adopted by the meeting, with cheers and hand-clapping:

"The Italian Colony of Boston, in a mass meeting assembled, having learned the social condition of Italian immigrants in this city, and having studied ways and means of bettering these conditions, adopt the following resolutions:

"Resolved, As soon as possible, with the help of the Italian Liberal Associations, to naturalize all Italians who can meet the requirements of the naturalization laws of the country.

"Resolved, That in view of the good disposition of the Italians toward American laws and usages, the citizens of Boston be urged to influence American contractors to trust and employ Italian workmen.

"Resolved, That in view of the failure and dishonesty of so many Italian bankers, that all honest Italian bankers unite to abide by the laws of the country, giving the necessary and proper guarantees, and if this is impossible, that a branch of some well-established bank be located in North street to receive and transmit money to Italy.

"Resolved, In view of the abuses and failures of many Italian bosses and the outrageous abuses against the poor workmen by these, their own countrymen, and also by other contractors, we advise that an employment office, subject to the laws of the State, be established for their use.

"Resolved, That in view of these abuses, a committee of protection of influential citizens be formed to aid in their suppression."

These questions, put to the audience by Mr. Conte, were answered in the affirmative by a unanimous show of hands, they being put separately:

"IS IT TRUE."

"First. That many bosses take commission without giving work?

"Second. That the price of commission is from $1 to $6.

"Third. That after a few weeks' work men are dismissed to make room for new workers, who have likewise paid commission?

"Fourth. That the prices of food in the boarding places is two or three times more than in Boston?

"Fifth. That the Italian workmen are obliged to buy their food of their employers or be dismissed?

"Sixth. That generally they are obliged to pay $10 or $12 per month?

"Seventh. That often the wages of workmen are reduced or taken from them by bosses?

"Eighth. That very many have lost their money through the failure of Italian banks?"

Mr. Conte will speak next Monday at 1 p. m., at a meeting to be held in the Chardon Building. Rev. Dr. Edward Everett Hale will preside.

Mr. FAULKNER. I hope the resolution will be passed for the reason that I think it supplements the information we now have before the Committee on Immigration. I am satisfied that the information we shall get under the resolution will be beneficial in view of future legislation which that committee will present to the Senate for action.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to have the resolution read.

Mr. CHANDLER. I desire to say further that the Senate Committee on Immigration took testimony at its session in New York City, at which the Senator from West Virginia was present, where it went to some extent into this subject. There is very full information now in the archives of the Senate on the subject; but the precise object now is to bring to light the renewed efforts which this Government in coöperation with the Italian Government is making to strike an effective blow at this very pernicious system.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not ask for the reading of the resolution. I have a copy of it before me.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

RESOLUTIONS PASSED OVER.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a former day, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A resolution relative to the arrest of Elisha J. Edwards for contempt.

Mr. TELLER. Let the resolution go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. At the suggestion of the Senator from Colorado the resolution will go over, if there be no objection. The Chair also lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a former day, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A resolution relative to the appointment of a special committee to investigate the organized efforts of corporations to control elections of members of State Legislatures and members of Congress.

Mr. TELLER. Let that go over also.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution goes over. Is it the pleasure of the Senate that these resolutions shall hold their place or go to the Calendar, as they will under the rule?

Mr. FAULKNER. Let them go to the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Both resolutions will be placed on the Calendar.

PERSONS ENGAGED IN PROTECTED INDUSTRIES.

Mr. ALLEN. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the resolution submitted by me May 15, 1894, which is on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning business having been concluded, and the Calendar under the rule being in order, the Senator from Nebraska asks unanimous consent that the resolution indicated by him be now considered. The resolution will be stated by title.

The SECRETARY. A resolution directing the Secretary of the Treasury to inform the Senate of the total number of persons engaged in protected industries in the United States whose wages are or may be claimed to be affected by tariff legislation, etc.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. SHERMAN. Let the resolution be read.

Mr. CHANDLER. Let it be read at length.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. ALLEN, May 15, 1894, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate of the total number of persons engaged in protected industries in the United States whose wages are, or may be claimed to be, affected by tariff legislation; the total number of persons engaged in such industries whose wages are not, or will not, be affected by tariff legislation, and the proportion of the population of the United States who depend upon the foreign market for the sale of their products, classifying such industries respectively; such information to be based on the census of 1890. Also, that the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed and required to inform the Senate of the total number of such persons who are native-born citizens of the United States of America, the total number who are naturalized citizens, and the total number of such persons who are aliens; and at what ratio, if any, alien mechanics and laborers have been taking the place of native and naturalized citizens of the United States in the protected industries of the United States.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think such an inquiry would involve a great deal of labor to any Department, and if the resolution should pass at all it ought to be directed to the Secretary of the Interior. The Secretary of the Treasury has no means of information as communicated by the Census Reports. As a matter of course such information would belong to the Interior Department. I think, myself, it would probably involve the expenditure of a large sum of money without any useful purpose, but as I do not often object to resolutions of inquiry proposing to call for information for Congress, I do not care to object in this case. However, the inquiry ought to be directed to the Secretary of the Interior, because he has command of the sources of information.

Mr. ALLEN. If the Senator——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would suggest to the Senator from Ohio that the pending question on the resolution is the motion of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] that it be referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think the resolution had better go over for the present.

Mr. ALLEN. I hope the Senator from Ohio will withdraw the objection. The information is certainly very desirable for some members of the Senate at least. I understand that the matter involved in the resolution is now being considered by the Treasury Department, and I think we ought to have the information here, and have it published in document form, so that we may have the benefit of it.

Mr. SHERMAN. That information——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Chair understand the Senator from Ohio to object to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. SHERMAN. I do. Let it go over until to-morrow anyway. I do not wish to displace it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will go over on objection, and take its place on the Calendar as heretofore.

FRANCIS M. TOMLIN.

Mr. BERRY. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (H. R. 1127) for the relief of Francis M. Tomlin.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to pay to Francis M. Tomlin, of Columbia County, Arkansas, $186, erroneously paid to the United States for certain described land in township 19 south, range 22 west, of the fifth principal meridian.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EMMA A. RIPLEY.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 447) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue a duplicate of a certain land warrant to Emma A. Ripley.

The bill was read by the Secretary.

Mr. CALL. I should like to know what committee reported the bill?

Mr. MCMILLAN. The Committee on Private Land Claims. It was looked into very carefully, and the chairman was quite well satisfied that this scrip was lost when claimed. There is a very elaborate report with the bill, showing that the scrip was lost by this lady, and that there is no authority for the Department to issue it unless such a bill is passed. I hope the Senator from Florida will allow it to pass.

Mr. CALL. I think the bill had better go over until we can understand it thoroughly. I understand it is a bill to provide for issuing a warrant where the original has been lost.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Yes.

Mr. CALL. I think the bill had better go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Florida objects, and the bill goes over.

E. DOUGLASS.

Mr. WASHBURN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1319) for the relief of E. Douglass, late Indian agent at White Earth Indian Agency.

By unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from Committee on Claims with amendments: In line 3, after the word "the," to strike out "Interior" and insert "Treasury;" in line 6, after the word "in," to strike out "his hands" and insert "the Treasury;" and in line 7, after the word "of," to strike out "six hundred and thirty-two dollars and seventy-five" and insert "five hundred and sixty-six dollars and sixty-six;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby authorized and directed to pay to Ebenezer Douglass, late Indian agent at White Earth Indian Agency, in the State of Minnesota, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $566.66, for money paid out and services performed by said Douglass, at the request of the Commissioner of Indian Affair, in closing the accounts with said agency.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN F. W. DETTE.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (S. 203) for the relief of John F. W. Dette, which has heretofore passed the Senate, and has been again favorably reported.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Secretary of War to cause to be examined the terms and conditions of the contract of John F. W. Dette with the United States to build a stone wall of masonry around the national cemetery at Jefferson Barracks, in the county of St. Louis and State of Missouri; and whether by reason of any change or modifications in the contract the cost of the work per perch was increased, and what loss was incurred on any additional work required by the changes or modifications, and what, if any, sum is reasonably and equitably due to him, in addition to the amount already paid him, by reason of the changes or modifications in his contract, and to report the result to Congress.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELISHA B. BASSETT.

Mr. DAVIS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1483) to correct the military record of Elisha B. Bassett.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It authorizes the President of the United States to revoke, disapprove, and set aside so much of general orders numbered 253, headquarters Department of the Cumberland, Chattanooga, Tenn., dated October 23, 1863, by command of Maj. Gen. George H. Thomas, general in command, as confirms so much of special field orders numbered 171, headquarters Department of the Cumberland, Murfreesboro, Tenn., dated June 23, 1863, Maj. Gen. Rosecrans commanding, as dismissed Capt. Elisha B. Bassett, captain of Company B, Nineteenth Michigan Volunteer Infantry, from the service for cowardice exhibited by deserting his command while engaged with the enemy at the affair of Thompson Station, and to cause to be issued and delivered to his widow a certificate of honorable muster out of the service as of the 23d day of June, 1863; but his widow and heirs shall not be entitled by virtue of this act to any pay or allowance subsequent to the 23d day of June, A. D. 1863.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JUDICIAL DISTRICT OF NORTH DAKOTA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first bill on the Calendar under Rule VIII will be called.

The bill (S. 686) to amend an act entitled "An act to divide the judicial district of North Dakota," and to provide for the fees and compensation of the officers of the circuit and district courts of the said judicial district, was announced as first in order, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider it.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments.

The first amendment was in section 1, line 15, after the word "repealed," to strike out—

And all suits, prosecutions, and processes, recognizances, bail bonds, and other proceedings of whatever nature pending or returnable to said court on the days last named are hereby transferred to and shall be made returnable and have force in the said respective terms provided in this act, in the same manner and with the same effect as they would have had had this act not been passed.

So as to read:

That sections 3 and 5 of the act approved April 26, 1890, entitled "An act to divide the judicial district of North Dakota," are hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 3. That the terms of the district court for the district of North Dakota shall be held at Bismarck on the first Tuesday of March in each year; at Fargo on the third Tuesday of May in each year; at Grand Forks on the second Tuesday of November in each year, and at Devils Lake on the first Tuesday of July in each year. And the provisions of law now existing for the holding of said court on the first Monday in April and February of each year is hereby repealed."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, after line 30, to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That all suits, prosecutions, and processes, recognizances, bail bonds, and other proceedings of whatever nature pending in or returnable to said district and circuit courts, respectively, on the days named in the act to which this is an amendment, are hereby transferred to and shall be made returnable and have force in the said respective terms of said district and circuit courts, respectively, as provided in this act, in the same manner and with the same effect as they would be returnable and have effect in said courts, respectively, at the terms thereof as now fixed by the act to which this is amendatory, as though this act had not been passed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5778) to supply a deficiency in the grant of public lands to the State of Mississippi for the use of the State University.

The message also announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution to print 6,000 copies of the complete compilation of all the annual, special, and veto messages, proclamations, and inaugural addresses of the Presidents of the United States from 1789 to 1894, inclusive; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution to print 8,000 copies of the fourteenth annual report of the director of the Bureau of Ethnology; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. 2710) for the relief of the heirs of Edward Morrison and Nellie Morrison, deceased; and

A bill (H. R. 6126) to amend an act to authorize construction of a bridge at Burlington, Iowa, approved August 6, 1888, and amended by act approved February 21, 1890.

COMPILATION OF MESSAGES, ETC.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution from the House of Representatives; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed and bound in cloth 6,000 copies of the complete compilation of all the annual, special, and veto messages, proclamations, and inaugural addresses of the Presidents of the United States from 1789 to 1894, inclusive; 2,000 copies for the use of the Senate and 4,000 copies for the use of the House. The work shall be prepared under the direction of the Joint Committee on Printing.

ETHNOLOGICAL REPORT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution from the House of Representatives; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed at the Government Printing Office 8,000 copies of the fourteenth annual report of the Director of the Bureau of Ethnology, with accompanying papers and illustrations, and uniform with the preceding volumes of the series, of which 1,000 shall be for the use of the Senate, 2,000 for the use of the House of Representatives, and 5,000 for distribution by the Bureau of Ethnology.

THE REVENUE BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of half past 10 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4864) to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will proceed with the reading of the bill.

Mr. PEFFER. Before that is done, I wish to propose an amendment to precede all the matter in Schedule K.

Mr. HOAR. I rise to a question of order, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts will state his point of order.

Mr. HOAR. It was unanimously agreed last night that the spectacle paragraph, which had been passed over, should be taken up and be in order this morning.

Mr. PEFFER. I understood that an arrangement of that kind had been made, but I saw the Senator's attention was attracted to something else, and I thought I would occupy the meantime by presenting the amendment. It will not interfere with that proceeding in the least.

Mr. HOAR. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas will be laid on the table until that part of the bill shall be regularly reached. The Secretary will read the paragraph referred to by the Senator from Massachusetts.

The Secretary read as follows:

98. Spectacles, eyeglasses, goggles, opera glasses, and other optical instruments and frames for the same, 40 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President——

Mr. QUAY. Will the Senator from Massachusetts yield to me a moment?

Mr. HOAR. Certainly.

Mr. QUAY. I desire to mention that my understanding in relation to the order of discussion agreed upon yesterday evening for this morning was that the Senator from Massachusetts was to be heard in relation to the paragraph on spectacles, and I was to succeed, before the woolen schedule was formally taken up, in continuation of my remarks, which were interrupted some four or five weeks ago. The amendment of the Senator from Kansas will come in, I suppose, after I conclude my remarks.

Mr. PEFFER. I suggest, Mr. President, to relieve all friction, that when the matter referred to by the Senator from Massachusetts is disposed of, the amendment which I offer may be read, and then let the Senator from Pennsylvania proceed with his remarks.

Mr. QUAY. That will be satisfactory.

Mr. HOAR. I suggest that the amendment of the Senator from Kansas be read now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unanimous-consent agreement yesterday evening was that the paragraph referred to by the Senator from Massachusetts should be first considered this morning, in view of which fact the Chair recognizes the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOAR. I think if the Senator from Kansas will allow his amendment to be read now, it may be as well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the amendment intended to be proposed by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEFFER] will be now read. The Chair hears no objection, and the amendment will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

SCHEDULE K—WOOL AND MANUFACTURES OF WOOL.

—. All wools, hair of the camel, goat, alpaca, and other like animals shall be divided for the purpose of fixing the duties to be charged thereon into the three following classes:

—. Class one, that is to say, merino, mestiza, metz, or metis wools, or other wools of merino blood, immediate or remote, Down clothing wools, and wools of like character with any of the preceding, including such as have been heretofore usually imported into the United States from Buenos Ayres, New Zealand, Australia, Cape of Good Hope, Russia, Great Britain, Canada, and elsewhere, and also including all wools not hereinafter described or designated in classes two and three.

—. Class two, that is to say, Leicester, Cotswold, Lincolnshire, Down combing wools, Canada long wools, or other like combing wools of English blood, and usually known by the terms herein used, and also hair of the camel, goat, alpaca, and other like animals.

—. Class three, that is to say, Donskoi, native South American, Cordova, Valparaiso, native Smyrna, Russian camel's hair, and including all such wools of like character as have been heretofore usually imported into the United States from Turkey, Greece, Egypt, Syria, and elsewhere, excepting improved wools hereinafter provided for.

—. The standard samples of all wools which are now or may be hereafter deposited in the principal custom-houses of the United States, under the authority of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall be the standards for the classification of wools under this act, and the Secretary of the Treasury shall have the authority to renew these standards and to make such additions to them from time to time as may be required, and he shall cause to be deposited like standards in other custom-houses of the United States when they may be needed.

—. Whenever wools of class 3 shall have been improved by the admixture of Merino or English blood from their present character as represented by the standard samples now or hereafter to be deposited in the principal custom-houses of the United States, such improved wools shall be classified for duty either as class 1 or as class 2, as the case may be.

—. The duty on wools of the first class which shall be imported washed shall be twice the amount of the duty to which they would be subjected if imported unwashed; and the duty on wools of the first and second classes which shall be imported scoured shall be three times the duty to which they would be subjected if imported unwashed.

—. Unwashed wools shall be considered such as shall have been shorn from the sheep without any cleansing; that is, in their natural condition. Washed wools shall be considered such as have been washed with water on the sheep's back. Wool washed in any other manner than on the sheep's back shall be considered as scoured wool.

—. The duty upon wool of the sheep or hair of the camel, goat, alpaca, and other like animals which shall be imported in any other than ordinary condition, or which shall be changed in its character or condition for the purpose of evading the duty, or which shall be reduced in value by the admixture of dirt or any other foreign substance, or which has been sorted or increased in value by the rejection of any part of the original fleece, shall be twice the duty to which it would be otherwise subject: Provided, That skirted wools as now imported are hereby excepted. Wools on which a duty is assessed amounting to three times or more than that which would be assessed if said wool was imported unwashed, such duty shall not be doubled on account of its being sorted.

If any bale or package of wool or hair specified in this act imported as of any specified class, or claimed by the importer to be dutiable as of any specified class shall contain any wool or hair subject to a higher rate of duty than the class so specified, the whole bale or package shall be subject to the highest rate of duty chargeable on wool of the class subject to such higher rate of duty, and if any bale or package be claimed by the importer to be shoddy, mungo, flocks, wool, hair, or other material of any class specified in this act, and such bale contain any admixture of any one or more of said materials, or of any other material, the whole bale or package shall be subject to duty at the highest rate imposed upon any article in said bale or package.

—. The duty upon all wools and hair of the first class shall be 6 cents per pound, and upon all wools or hair of the second class 7 cents per pound.

—. On wools of the third class and on camel's hair of the third class, the value whereof shall be 10 cents or less per pound, including charges, the duty shall be 20 per cent ad valorem.

—. On wools of the third class, and on camel's hair of the third class, the value whereof shall exceed 10 cents per pound, including charges, the duty shall be 25 per cent ad valorem.

—. Wools on the skin shall pay the same rate as other wools, the quantity and value to be ascertained under such rules as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe.

—. On noils, shoddy, top waste, slubbing waste, roving waste, ring waste, yarn waste, garnetted waste, and all other wastes composed wholly or in part of wool, the duty shall be 20 cents per pound.

—. On woolen rags, mungo, and flocks, the duty shall be 26 cents per pound.

—. Wools and hair of the camel, goat, alpaca, or other like animals, in the form of roping, roving, or tops, and all wool and hair which have been advanced in any manner or by any process of manufacture beyond the washed or scoured condition, not specially provided for in this act, shall be subject to the same duties as are imposed upon manufactures of wool not specially provided for in this act.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to have paragraph 98 read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FAULKNER in the chair). The Secretary will read the paragraph.

The Secretary read as follows:

93. Spectacles, eyeglasses, goggles, opera glasses, and other optical instruments and frames for the same, 40 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. HOAR. Is there not a pending amendment of the committee?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment from the committee was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. I move to strike out "forty" and insert "sixty."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That, the Chair presumes, will have to be considered by unanimous consent.

Mr. HOAR. I presume there will be no objection to that course.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the amendment submitted by the Senator from Massachusetts? The Chair hears none, and the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 8, paragraph 98, strike out "forty" and insert "sixty;" so as to read: "60 per cent ad valorem."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection to the consideration of the amendment, and the Senator from Massachusetts will proceed.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, the argument for the great American policy of keeping the American market for the American workman has been stated in many ways. Our early statesmen—the men who won in the great contest of the Revolution, the men who laid the foundations of the Constitution, the men who were the leaders of the young nation, who administered the Government when it was yet an experiment, liked to put the argument for protection on the ground that it was essential to national independence. Washington, Jefferson, Jackson and Hamilton and John Adams urged upon the American people that they could never be a great people if they depended on foreigners for iron or steel, or the products of iron or steel, for ships, for wool, or for the clothing of the people in peace or war.

The next generation—Webster and Clay and John Quincy Adams and Calhoun until he ceased to be a national and became a Southern statesman, dealt rather with the necessity for national wealth, for variety of employment, for the encouragement and support of infant industries which needed a certain fostering care to put them on their feet.

Later still the statesmen of the country saw more clearly that we were becoming, and were to become, a great manufacturing nation, and that, if that were true, the destiny of this country was to be controlled by the men who do its work in the workshop and on the farm; that these men could not be fit for the august function of sovereignty unless a scale of wages should be maintained which would enable them to live in comfort and to keep a standard of living which should prevent citizenship itself from being debased. This is, however, no recent doctrine. Fifty years ago, my distinguished fellow-citizen, Mr. Winthrop, who still lives to enjoy the affection of his countrymen, said in a speech in the other House:

> This, Mr. Chairman, I repeat, is what the policy of protection aims at. It looks at the workingman, not in his mere brute capacity of a consumer, but in his higher nature of a producer. It looks not to reducing the price of what he eats or what he wears, but to keeping up the price of his own labor. It looks, in short, to wages first, wages last, wages altogether. Shall the wages of the whole civilized commercial world be equalized and leveled off? This is the briefest, truest, most concise, and most comprehensive statement of the question between free trade and protection. The wages of labor—by which is to be understood not merely the wages which are paid by the capitalist to hired hand, but the wages also which are earned by labor of any kind working on its own account—are now higher in this country than in any other beneath the sun. If anybody doubts this, let him stop the first immigrant whom he meets in the streets and ask him why he came over here, what condition he left behind him, and in what circumstances he finds himself within six months after his arrival. If anybody doubts this, let him turn to the Parliamentary debaters, the economical essayists, or even the corn-law rhymers of England, and see what they say as to the condition of the great mass of British operatives.
> Listen to Charles Buller, in his admirable speech on systematic emigration as the only relief for the pauper labor of his country, while he tells you "of human beings huddled together in defiance of comfort, of shame, and of health, in garrets and in cellars, and in the same hovels with their pigs; of workhouses crowded; of even the gaol resorted to for shelter and maintenance; of human beings prevented from actually dying of starvation in the open streets, or of others allowed to expire from inanition in the obscurity of their own dwelling places." Listen to him again, while he gives you an account "of thousands of men, women, and children congregated together without any regard to decency or comfort in noisome sites and wretched hovels; of those who wear out their lives in the darkness of coal and iron mines, doing what is commonly considered the work of brutes, in a moral and intellectual state hardly raised above that of the mere animal; of the shirtmakers, who get tenpence for making a dozen shirts, and of the 15,000 milliners in this metropolis [London], habitually working for the scantiest wages in close rooms, always for thirteen or fourteen hours a day, sometimes for days and nights together; nine out of ten losing their health in the occupation, and scores of them falling victims to consumption, or rendered incurably blind whenever a court mourning or any festivity of particular magnitude tasks their powers more than usual." * * *
> Mr. Chairman, the fact is indisputable. The low prices of land and its vast extent compared with the population, the vast amount of work to be done compared with the number of hands which can be commanded on our own soil to perform it—these and other influences secure now to American labor a remuneration which no other in the world receives. Shall this state of things, so fruitful of the greatest good to the greatest number, be continued, or shall we, in a fit of universal benevolence, go in for a horizontal scale of wages, and an average condition of labor in the wide world over? Equality of earnings, equality of encouragements, equality of opportunities, privileges, and wages throughout the length and breadth of our land no man would disturb. We desire the establishment of no system which shall benefit or build up one class of our industry, or one section of our country, at the expense of another. But can not our democracy be content with equality at home? Is it anti-republican or anti-American to maintain and protect the superior condition of our own people? Can not the frenzy of our philanthropy be appeased until it has accomplished that universal level of labor which can only be reached by the prostration of our own? Free trade says no to this question. The Secretary of the Treasury says no. The bill before us says no. Or if they do not dare to say so in terms, they propose and pursue a policy which leads to such a result with the speed and the directness of a railroad.
> The policy of protection, on the other hand, says: "Yes, yes; it shall not be in vain to the workingman of America that their fathers threw off the colonial yoke and secured for them a country and a government of their own. Other nations may well afford to enter into the free-trade copartnership with us, for their labor has already reached that lowest depth to which there is no lower deep, and from which every change must be for the better. Other governments may afford to institute a free-trade experiment on their own account, for they look to the intelligence, the education, and the independence of the few. But our institutions rest on the intelligence, education, and independence of the many. Our institutions rely on a condition of society which nothing but a high rate of wages can maintain. If our labor be leveled off to the grade of European labor, our liberty must be cut down to the standard of European liberty.

Later still, as science has lent her aid and statistics on a large scale have been gathered by national and State authority, the friends of protection have been able to vindicate their prophecies by the test of history. Even their old triumphs in argument have been surpassed in recent years by the triumphant demonstration of the facts.

But in all these arguments the question has been dealt with on a national and comprehensive scale. I want to occupy the attention of the Senate for a few moments in dealing with the subject in a little different way. I wish to take an example of an individual and local industry. It is one example. I suppose it would be easy to furnish a thousand. I want to show you something of the history and condition of a single manufacturing village, no better and no worse than a thousand others which could be found in our manufacturing States, to show you how this protective policy, without burdening anybody, without increasing to any mortal the cost of any manufactured article, has created hundreds of happy, comfortable, prosperous American homes, has furnished employment for the laborer, has furnished a market for the farmer, has brought up children to be men and women for the resource and service of the Republic, in every exigency of war or peace.

All this is accomplished simply by doing upon American soil and with American hands and brains what otherwise would have been done abroad at a larger cost to the consumer and with less consumption of the products of American agriculture, without a toll taken for freight, for transportation both ways or either way, and without the agency of a squalid, degraded, oppressed foreign manhood instead of the noble, prosperous, free American citizenship which has been alike the creator, the supporter, and the result of the policy of protection.

SOUTHBRIDGE.

The town of Southbridge, in Massachusetts, has about 8,000 inhabitants, and it is something like 20 miles from my residence in the county of Worcester. I know its people. Fifty years ago it was an agricultural community containing, perhaps, 1,500 inhabitants. In 1833 a small manufactory of spectacles and eye-glass frames was established there, which continued on a small scale until 1869, when the present corporation, known as the American Optical Company, was formed.

In 1884 they began to manufacture spectacle lenses and increased their business from about $79,000 in 1869 to upwards of $1,200,000 in 1892.

They have a capital invested of $950,000, and employ 850 persons; 733 are males, of whom 10 are between the ages of 15 and 16 years, and none younger. There are 107 females, of whom 11 are between the ages of 15 and 16 years, and none younger.

Their workmen are employed fifty-eight hours a week. Of these 467 get from $5 to $9 a week, and 373 from $9 to $24 a week. Two other companies have since started in the town, employing 125 hands.

So, if you allow an average of 5 persons supported directly and indirectly by these workmen, you have about 4,900 supported by this industry.

Of the cost of this product, about 90 per cent is labor, with the exception of the small number manufactured of gold or silver.

Each of these 5,000 persons consumes at least twice as much—some authorities estimate it much higher—of the product of American agriculture as the persons performing the same labor broad.

He gets, on an average, twice the wages of the person performing the same labor abroad.

He is a skilled laborer. He not only consumes twice as much of the Western flour, beef, and pork, but he consumes many things to which his foreign competitor would be an entire stranger.

Of the Maryland strawberries, the Delaware peaches, the Florida oranges and lemons he is a large and increasing consumer. In recent years, and especially since 1890, the Boston expresses have been loaded down with these things every day in their season.

A TYPE OF NEW ENGLAND TOWNS.

Mr. President, I do not claim any special preëminence for Southbridge. She is a fair type of many American communities. Beside her 30 cities, Massachusetts has 64 towns with a population exceeding 4,000 inhabitants. They are much alike. What I say of her I say of all. She has her national bank; she has her savings bank; she has her town hall—the statehouse of her little republic—where her freemen meet as equals and debate in freedom and in honor the things which pertain to self-government. Every man has an equal vote, every man's vote is freely cast, and every man's vote is honestly counted. She has her churches, where men of different forms of church polity worship the common Father with all the essentials of a common Christian faith. She has her excellent schools, which the people of any nation upon the earth might take as models. She has her free public library. Under these institutions she has developed a liberal, patriotic, American spirit. There is no bigotry; there is no intolerance; there is no sectional hatred in the hearts of her people. While they prize what they did and what their brothers and fathers did for the safety of the republic, there would be no more welcome guest in that community than a brave Confederate soldier, who had himself laid aside the anger and animosity of the war.

These people are ready to welcome any generous emulation or rivalry in other parts of the country. They hear of Birmingham and Atlanta and Chattanooga and Kansas City and Denver and Tacoma with as much pleasure as of Lowell or Worcester.

Now, I would not arrogate anything for these people above other communities, especially above other American communities. There are such all over the country. But I say that such communities, wherever they are found, are the one highest and best thing that this world produces. There is no better example of Christian brotherhood than their simple republican, social equality. Under no cathedral arches, under no domes of ancient synagogues is there taught a purer and sincerer faith than in these simple wooden churches. In no parliament house and in no royal council chamber are the principles of wise government better understood. These men never plundered anybody, or oppressed anybody, or took an advantage of anybody. All they have, all they are, all they will be, all they desire to be, they owe to their own honest labor, directed by brains educated in the common school. Every American citizen has had an equal opportunity, and if he will be industrious, frugal, and honest, can expect an equal accomplishment.

Now, under the existing law the protection on spectacles and eyeglasses, or spectacles and eyeglass frames, is 60 per cent ad valorem. On spectacle and eyeglass lenses, with their edges ground or beveled to fit frames, 60 per cent ad valorem.

The price has not risen, but has been steadily and constantly going down from 1884 to 1892.

I insert a table of prices from the answers made to the inquiries of the Committee on Finance:

The cost of the living of these men has been going down in all these years. I had a table made for me a year or two ago, carefully examined by one or two grocers and by one or two market men in this very town of Southbridge, from which it appeared that a man with a wife and four children, getting double the foreign wages, in this very town of Southbridge would not pay more than $30 a year for his support for articles whose prices could be, on any theory, in the least enhanced by the protective tariff.

IS NOT THIS COMMUNITY A GOOD THING?

Now, Mr. President, I do not know what our Democratic friends may think; but I think a community of this kind is a good thing. The fathers and mothers are honest, intelligent, temperate American citizens; they are ready for the service of the Republic in war and peace; they can read and write; they understand public affairs; they attend the churches; their children are in school; they have built up a flourishing town; they have created an honest industry. It is a community without a lord and without a serf. They are customers to their brethren of the South and the West, and they supply a necessary of life at a price cheaper than it would have been supplied without their labor, their skill, and their competition.

Now, I can not conceive any good reason why American statesmanship should not be directed toward fostering and encouraging such communities as this. If they get crowded their children will go West or South, or wherever labor shall be respected and welcomed.

Two other concerns of the kind have been started by their side in recent years. There are plenty of others in the country whose competition will continue to bring down this profit to the lowest point at which it can be furnished by human ingenuity and skill, always, however, keeping up and increasing the rate of wages. The employer is the friend and companion of the workman. They live side by side on the same village street as equals and friends. There is not a city in the Union that is not to some degree benefited and does not to some degree profit by the work of these men's hands and brains. There is not a penny of tribute in it from any quarter. It is all benefit. It is all advantage. And what these people are doing a thousand other communities are doing all over the country, and every community in the country can do, if it see fit.

Now, Mr. President, what are you proposing to do to these people under this bill? You propose to reduce from 60 to 40 per cent ad valorem the protection on spectacles, eyeglasses, and other optical instruments and frames for the same; and from 60 to 35 per cent ad valorem, the protection on spectacle and eyeglass lenses with their edges ground or beveled to fit frames.

Labor is 90 per cent of the product. Foreign labor gets less than one-half of what is paid to the domestic laborer, so that the advantage to the foreign manufacturer, in labor alone, is at least 45 per cent of the product.

The amount of the foreign importation now just about equals the domestic production. So it is clear that this industry must be destroyed, or there must be a decrease of from 10 to 20 per cent in wages. The first thing then you propose to do to these people is to strike off from 10 to 20 per cent of their wages.

But you promised them that you would give them free coal, and free iron, and free wool, and free lumber, and free sugar, as at least a partial equivalent. I do not understand that the promise is to be kept. The junior Senator from Texas visited that neighborhood two or three years ago, and promised to be the Moses that should lead them into the promised land of Paradise flowing with milk, honey, and free coal.

The Senator from Texas professes to be personally in favor of keeping his promise. But he tells us he is between the devil and the deep sea. I suppose the devil of Democracy and the deep sea of popular indignation. I do not think he is in any danger of drowning. I think, from the wail of anger and rage which he uttered when the word "sugar" was pronounced the other day in his ears, that it is quite manifest who is getting him, and that all the use he will be able to make of his good intentions is to make a pavement for his future dwelling place. I am afraid, however, that the New England manufacturers who were led to vote the Democratic ticket by his blandishments will be entirely indifferent to the fate of the honorable Senator from Texas, and will make no large contribution to rescue him from either alternative.

But the Democratic knife is being whetted for another blow at these American workmen. They have a savings bank in the town of Southbridge whose deposits amounted in 1893 to $1,735,768.36. Their semiannual dividend last October was 2 per cent. The preceding one was 2½ per cent. I suppose they can not expect to make a dividend of more than 4 per cent annually in the future. They have 4,369 depositors, being an average of $396 for each depositor.

This community is not peculiar in this respect. All over New England, as well as in other manufacturing States, a like condition of things will be found. In the six New England States there were deposited in savings banks, according to the Comptroller's report for 1893, $741,335,979. The number of depositors was 2,057,401 persons, and the average standing to each depositor, $360.33. In Massachusetts alone there were 184 of these savings institutions, with an aggregate deposit of $393,019,862. There were 1,189,936 depositors, being an average of $330.29 for each depositor. This is from the report of the Comptroller for 1884, which makes a part of the report of the Secretary of the Treasury.

I do not know the precise date to which this report of the Comptroller applies. But the report of the savings bank commissioners of Massachusetts for 1893, which bears date January 23, 1894, shows the aggregate amount deposited at the close or the year 1893, for the savings banks of Massachusetts, to be $399,995,569.81—lacking less than $5,000 of $400,000,000. This sum is represented by 1,214,493 accounts, being an average of $329.35 to each depositor.

Now the whole aggregate deposits of the savings banks in this country is $1,550,820,403, representing 4,290,712 depositors, being an average of $361.43 for each depositor. They are in the North and in other manufacturing States, including Delaware and Maryland, with the single exception that there are in West Virginia two savings banks, with deposits amounting, in all, to $237,707.

Now, upon the incomes of these depositors, coming from these little deposits averaging about $360 each, and I suppose never exceeding $1,500, you propose to levy an income tax, from which you exempt every man with a moneyed capital or landed estate amounting to $100,000 in value, which yields him $4,000 or less. This man, whether planter, or retired merchant with an income from invested property on which he can live in comfort and in idleness, is peculiar to no part of the country. But according to the census the number of such persons seems to be rapidly increasing in the South. Yet these men get off altogether from the tax which you fasten upon the honest and frugal workman, with his wife and family of children, whose little savings against a rainy day are deposited in the savings banks of the North. You cut down his wages with one hand and tax his savings with the other.

Another thing. You propose to give to the manufacturer of spectacle frames an ad valorem duty of 35 per cent. But you put on sheet steel, which is his material, 1¼ cents a pound, fully 52 per cent ad valorem. But that is becoming largely a Southern industry. So, as I have just said, you cut down his wages with one blow, you tax his little savings with another, and you tax the material for his industry with another.

PROMISE OF FREE MATERIAL BROKEN.

Senators who have been profuse in their promises for free raw material tell us that they can not keep their promises to put coal on the free list because they can not pass the bill if they do it. I wish some Senator who has made this suggestion would be good enough to tell the Senate, and the country, why not. Do you pretend that the bill could not pass the House? It has come over from that body with coal on the free list, and with a unanimous party majority for that proposition. Are you going to lose any Democratic votes here? If so, won't you tell us whose they are? Both the Senators from West Virginia, the great coal-producing State, the Senators from Alabama, and, I think, both Senators from old Virginia have earnestly, if not indignantly, disclaimed this imputation. Who is it that is constraining the somewhat ostentatious virtue of the Senator from Texas, and the Senator from Arkansas, and the Senator from Missouri? Would it not be a good plan to have at least tried the experiment in this Congress, which is Democratic in both branches, before you tell us that the promise on which you got into power was broken because you found yourself unable to keep it? Have not the people at least the right to demand that some single Senator should rise in his place and take the burden upon his own shoulders and relieve his Democratic brethren of the imputation? Are you bowing to the will of the House of Representatives? No. Are you bowing to the will of the Finance Committee of the Senate? No. Are you bowing to the will of any wicked Republicans? No. Are you bowing to the will of the three magicians who prepared the first report, or any of them? No; they are all for free coal. Are you submitting yourselves to the dictation of any Senator from a coal-producing State? Why does not this undetected and unexposed criminal who is debauching the innocent Democratic conscience stand up and make confession? Unless he do so, this whole thing must be taken by the American people as a subterfuge and as a pretense. The true reason is not that you are afraid of losing the measure here, for which you say a majority of the American people declared itself in 1892, but because you are afraid of losing the vote of the people of the State of West Virginia at the polls hereafter if you keep your promises.

DEMOCRATIC WOLF TO HAVE HIS SHEEP'S CLOTHING ON THE FREE LIST.

Every one of these promises, which beguiled some of the credulous people of New England, for free raw material, is to be broken, with a single exception. Free coal and free iron have disappeared like dissolving clouds. Free wool is all that remains. The Democratic wolf is still to have his sheep's clothing on the free list, unless our Democratic friends of the committee change their minds before that schedule comes up for action.

So let me recapitulate how you propose to deal with the workmen engaged in this industry: You take off their protection, which has cost, and would cost if continued, no American consumer a dollar; you propose to tax their savings; you propose to tax their life policies; you put a tax on the railroads, which is another form of taxing their food; you break your promises on free coal, and free iron, and free lumber, in the interest of Southern producers.

HIGH DUTY ON WORKMEN'S FOOD FOR THE SOUTH AND THE TRUST.

Now what do you propose to do with their food? On the two principal articles, sugar and rice, both Southern agricultural products, you put a specific duty, although you declare specific duties, when asked for them, to be a delusion and a fraud. You put a duty of 40 per cent ad valorem, for the Louisiana producer, on sugar, and one-fifth to one-tenth more per pound for the benefit of the sugar trust. You put nearly 85 per cent ad valorem on rice for the benefit of the Southern producer, and then ask the people of the country to believe you when you say you are in favor of a tariff for revenue only. Louisiana is the largest sugar growing State in the Union. It is the largest rice producing State in the Union.

Now suppose we acquit you of the charge which is made in the newspapers of paying a duty to the sugar trust for a liberal contribution to the Democratic campaign fund. Suppose we acquit you of any sectional feeling in this matter. I say again is it but fair that the American people should know who it is, if anybody, that will decline to vote for your tariff bill if these necessaries of life to the poor and plain people of the country shall be admitted free? You do not need it for your revenue. You have, with one possible exception, the whole Republican party in the Senate, solid for free sugar and a bounty. Who is it that has his hand on the throat of this mighty American people, whose majestic voice has just been uttered through the President, House of Representatives, and Senate? Is it the junior Senator from Louisiana? By no means. He voted in the House of Representatives for a provision containing free sugar without a bounty. Where is this arch demon before whom President, and House, and Democratic committee, and Democratic majority are powerless? Let us know his name. Let us see his shape,

> If shape it may be called, that shape hath none.
> Distinguishable in member, joint, or limb.
> Or substance may be called that shadow seems.

No, Mr. President, these Democratic principles are not violated, these Democratic pledges are not broken, this alleged command of the American people is not disobeyed, for the want of Democratic votes in the Senate. It is for fear of public indignation in the elections. You are ready enough to strike at the industry of any Northern state from which Democracy has no hope in the future. You strike down the workman's wages, you put protective duties, and specific duties of 85 per cent on his food and his fuel, and his material, you tax his little savings, and the freight that brings him material, and fuel, and food, and when you tell us that you are doing what you know the people do not want you to do, and what you do not want to do yourselves because some nameless, shapeless, voiceless, shadowy, and unknown phantom stands ready to slay your bill if you do otherwise.

NEW ENGLAND TOO NEAR THE NORTH STAR.

Mr. President, can you find any other explanation of the policy that you seek to apply to these Massachusetts workmen except that they live a little too near the North star and have loved freedom a little too much in our past history to come within the field of benevolent Democratic vision?

How curiously an article which is produced at the South and consumed at the North seems to our friends on the other side to be an excellent subject for raising revenue. The shell-fish which the fisherman of Maine gets off that stormy and rock-bound coast, even if it is canned, is to come in free. The sponge, which comes from the Florida reefs has a duty of 10 per cent. The sea moss from the rocks of the New England shore is free. The flax of the Northwest is to be on the free list. The sumac of Virginia has a protection of 10 per cent. The chain which the Northwestern workman manufactures has a duty as a protection of 30 per cent. The pig iron of Alabama and Tennessee, of which it is made, has a protection of $4 per ton, equal to 50 per cent ad valorem. The freestone and sandstone and limestone of Ohio, Rhode Island, and Connecticut, and of Berkshire County, Massachusetts, rough, are to come in free, and the manufactured are to have a duty of 20 per cent, while the rough marble of Tennessee and Georgia is to have 50 per cent (specific) per cubic foot and 85 per cent per cubic foot manufactured. The sugar of Louisiana is to have 40 per cent raw, with its addition to the refiner, while wool—the great product of the North—is to come in free. Live animals of the West and Northwest are to have 20 per cent. Their grains are to have but 20 per cent, while the great Southern grain, rice, which the South grows and the North consumes, is to have 84 per cent protection. The grains of the North, of all kinds, are to have but 20 per cent. The tie for baling cotton is free, the hoop iron for the hay bundle of the North—a crop more valuable to this country than the whole vaunted cotton crop of the South—is to have 30 per cent ad valorem.

My honorable friend from Ohio, from whose remarks of the other day I have taken a few of these items, which I have added to those I had previously collected, inquires what reason could be given for that. Mr. President, the honorable State of Tennessee, represented upon this floor and in this discussion so fearfully and wonderfully by my respected friend, her senior Senator, has made, I think, an ingenuous and complete statement of the whole Democratic argument in this speech. I read the reply of the Concord Quarry Company, of Concord, Tenn., manufacturers of Tennessee marble, which is found in Bulletin No. 8 of the replies to tariff inquiries. Reply No. 960.

[Established in 1881 to 1882. Capital invested, $10,000.]

The value of our production is from $10,000 to $50,000 per year.
We ran less time during part of 1893 for lack of demand for products.
To place domestic production on an equal footing with the foreign product the rates of duty should be 65 cents per cubic foot (specific) for difference in labor. We have been able to compete at this rate, though the competition has been sharp and direct.
Our selling price has been decreasing for the last ten years and we have now got all we can do to compete with Italian marble.
Our products (marble) are a luxury and not needed by the masses.
Our stockholders are all Democrats and believe in tariff for revenue only, but if you do not tax marble what under the heavens will you tax?

IS THE SENATE ABOLISHED?

Mr. President, our Southern brethren a few years ago undertook the task of abolishing the country. They have abandoned that purpose, most of them, I have no doubt, in entire good faith. They seem just now to be devoting their energies instead to abolishing the Senate. For all practical purpose, so far as this tariff bill is concerned, the unknown and mysterious power which passes upon the details of this tariff bill, listening to no reason, giving no reason, concealing its identity, indifferent whether it shall persuade anybody, or convince anybody, changing its own mind, not only on important matters of detail, but in essential matters of principle, every few weeks, might as well announce its conclusions in the newspapers along with the reports from the Weather Bureau as to go through the formality of a vote in the Senate.

When Congress met last December, we had a message from the Executive to the effect that a tariff bill had been prepared.

> A measure has been prepared by the appropriate Congressional committee embodying tariff reform on the lines herein suggested, which will be promptly submitted for legislative action. It is the result of much patriotic and unselfish work, and I believe it deals with its subject consistently and as thoroughly as existing conditions permit.

The public knew nothing about it. The House of Representatives who were expected to pass it was ignorant of its contents. The Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives had not seen it. They had not even had a meeting. The Democratic majority of that committee was totally unacquainted with it. Important schedules of that measure, afterwards adopted, had not even been disclosed to the committee itself. I would not undertake to penetrate Democratic mysteries too far, but there is good reason to believe that the Secretary of the Treasury was not acquainted with it. But the infant itself appeared in due time. It was held at the baptismal font by the Representative from the State of West Virginia, whose name was given to it as its godfather in baptism. It survived and had a sickly and feeble life, though it was sorely wounded in the house of its friends.

The bill came to the Senate. Three Democratic Senators met in conclave. They brought us another bill, never submitted to the full committee, except with an agreement which prevented Democratic Senators from voting according to their opinions. It was reported back, accompanied by statements which showed it had no majority of the committee in its favor. It remained here till the 7th of May. On the 6th, I think it was, perhaps a day or two earlier, the statement that important changes were contemplated was declared to be a falsehood by the Democratic leaders. But on the 7th 408 amendments came in changing the whole structure of the bill, never submitted to the Committee on Finance at all. None of these amendments seem to have any relation to the opinion of the Senator who moves them. Few of them are defended in debate or reconciled with each other.

This is the first debate in American history in which the shameless doctrine has been avowed that the judgment, conscience, sense of constitutional duty, interest of his constituency, pledged public faith of his party, of an American Senator had nothing whatever to do with his vote. You may persuade all these, and you are as far off as ever from obtaining his vote. That still is to be given the other way. You may show him that all these are on one side. You may show him that his vote is to violate all these. He will smile, or he will answer you with a gibe or a personality. But the vote will be unchanged.

Here is the coal schedule. Did not your party promise free coal in the election of 1892? Certainly. Did not you who are to give your votes against it make the promise with your own lips? Certainly. Why is the promise then not to be kept? Is the House of Representatives opposed to it? That House has declared its opinion in an emphatic majority. Is the President opposed to it? He told you his opinion in his message before any legislator in either House had made up his legislative mind. Has the Committee on Finance discovered some new and good reason against it? That committee has never acted upon the question at all. It is notorious that the Democratic majority of the Committee on Finance has had little to do with framing this bill. The Senator from Indiana, the chairman of that committee, and the Senator from Tennessee who has charge of the parliamentary conduct of the measure upon this floor, neither of them will undertake to answer any question, either of fact or reason, as to the smallest detail of the measure. Another member, the senior member, save one, I believe, on the Democratic side of that committee, is reported to have recently testified, in substance, in regard to its most important item—that of sugar—that he knew nothing as to what was to be in the bill; that he had not been consulted, but that he heard a rumor that they were about to do something in regard to sugar.

Have the three gentlemen who have made up this present measure found some grave reasons of state to constrain them? I think every one of them has told us on the Senate floor that he remained personally unchanged. But he said he found they could not pass a bill which contained such a provision. Is the majority of the Democratic party in favor of a duty on coal? That majority is notoriously the other way. Who is it? Where is this unscrupulous and hidden power, greater than the President, greater than the House of Representatives, greater than the Finance Committee, greater than the Democratic party, greater than the sense of constitutional duty, greater than obligations and pledges of public faith, greater than conscience, greater than honor, which is constraining you to do this thing? It is not the Senators from the coal-producing States. Both the Senators from West Virginia have declared that they should support the measure agreed upon by their Democratic associates, whatever might be its policy in regard to coal. Both the Senators from old Virginia, if I mistake not, have made a similar statement. The senior Senator from Alabama has made publicly what I think the junior Senator from Alabama is also willing to say freely to anybody who asks him, that they shall support the policy of the party, whatever may be done with this particular industry. Does anybody claim or believe that the senior Senator from Maryland, now absent, would break down the measure pressed by the entire Democratic party because of his individual opinion as to certain items?

Where is the man, if it be a man; where is the Senator, if it be a Senator, who is exerting this mighty power-secret, irresponsible, irresistible, before which the knees of Democratic committees and Democratic majorities tremble, their arms are paralyzed, and their tongues are dumb?

If the Senator from Arkansas be the Jupiter in this debate, the Senator from Missouri is the Mercury. He is the chief speaker. He comes to the assistance of his puzzled colleagues whenever it becomes necessary for the Democratic majority to ascend into the region of the higher mathematics. One would almost think, to hear the volubility with which he deals with paragraph and schedule, that his head was an ant-hill of units and tens. There would be an infinite pathos and tragedy, as it must seem to himself, in the suffering of that worthy and excellent Senator, but for the infinite comedy which it exhibits to the world at large. We have heard that Senator for the past ten or twelve years as he inveighed against the doctrine of protection. Robber tariff and plunder barons, and monopolist giants have terrified his life in the daytime and haunted his innocent pillow in the nighttime. He enlisted years ago a soldier for the war of extermination against all protected industries. But the demon—the witch—of protection seems to have appeared to him as he was sallying forth for his first encounter, demanding of him a high tariff on sugar for the benefit of the Democratic planter of Louisiana and the Democratic millionaire of the sugar trust.

The only parallel that I can think of with the experience of the Senator from Missouri is the encounter of Dominie Sampson with the gypsy Meg Merrilies, as it is told in his matchless fashion by the magician of the North. The Senator certainly resembles the dominie in personal worth, in learning—especially on economic questions—in guileless simplicity, and in fidelity to the patron in whose service he is engaged. The Senator's struggle, in his horror and terror of the protection demon, is well portrayed in the dominie's encounter with the gypsy.

Meg may be fairly taken to represent the sugar trust, and the Dominie the simple-hearted Senator from Missouri.

> The figure of Meg Merrilies, well known, though not seen for many a revolving year, was placed at once before the eyes of the startled Dominie. * * *
> "I kenn'd ye wad be here," she said, with her harsh and hollow voice; "I ken wha ye seek; but ye maun do my bidding."
>
> "Get thee behind me!" said the alarmed Dominie. "Avoid ye!—Conjuro te, scelestissima—nequissima—spurcissima—iniquissima—atque—miserrima—conjuro te!!!"
>
> Meg stood her ground against this tremendous volley of superlatives, which Sampson hawked up from the pit of his stomach, and hurled at her in thunder. "Is the carl daft," she said, "wi' his glamour?"
>
> "Conjuro," continued the Dominie, "Abjuro, contestor atque viriliter impero tibi!"
>
> "What in the name of Sathan are ye feared for, wi' your French gibberish, that would make a dog sick? Listen, ye stickit stibbler, to what I tell ye, or ye shall rue it while there's a limb o' ye hings to anither!" * * *
>
> "Assuredly," said the Dominie, "I am dubious, for woman, I am perturbed at thy words and my flesh quakes to hear thee." * * *
>
> "In the name of all that is good," said the Dominie, "desist, I say—I am strong—lo, I will resist." Here his speech was cut short, for Meg, armed with supernatural strength (as the Dominie asserted) broke in upon his guard * * * and lifted him into the vault.
>
> "Sit down there," she said pushing the half-throttled preacher with some violence against a broken chair, "Are ye fou or fasting?"
> "Fasting, from all but sin," answered the Dominie, recovering his voice. * * *
> Meg, in the mean while, went to a great black caldron that was boiling on a fire on the floor, and, lifting the lid, an odor was diffused through the vault. * * * It was in fact the savor of a goodly stew. * * *
>
> "So ye hae eat naething a' day?" said Meg, heaving a large portion of this mess into a brown dish. * * *
> "Nothing," answered the Dominie—"scelestissima—that is, gudewife."
>
> "Hae, then," said she, placing the dish before him, "there's what will warm your heart."
>
> "I do not hunger—malefica—that is to say, Mrs. Merrilies;" for he said unto himself, "the savor is sweet." * * *
>
> "If ye dinna eat instantly and put some saul in ye, * * * I'll put it down your throat, * * * whether ye will or no.
> Gape, sinner, and swallow."
>
> Sampson, afraid of eye of newt and toe of frog, * * * had determined not to venture; but the smell of the stew was fast melting his obstinacy. * * * Hunger and fear are excellent casuists.
>
> "Saul," said Hunger, "feasted with the witch of Endor."

And McKinley put a duty on refined sugar.

> "And," quoth Fear, "the salt which she sprinkled upon the food showeth plainly it is not a necromantic banquet, in which that seasoning never occurs."

And you have put a great many Northern industries on the free list, which shows this is not a protective measure.

> "So ye like the meat? said the hostess.
>
> "Yea," answered the" dominie, "and I give thee thanks—scelestissima—which means—Mrs. Margaret." * * *
> "Now, ye maun tak a dram."
> "I will," quoth Sampson, "conjuro te—that is, I thank you heartily," for, he thought to himself, in for a penny in for a pound; and he fairly drank the witch's health in a cupful of brandy. When he had put this capestone upon Meg's good cheer, he felt, as he said, "mightily elevated, and afraid of no evil which could befall unto him."

"Will ye remember my errand now?" said Meg Merrilies.

"I will, Mrs. Margaret," repeated Sampson, stoutly.

This tariff bill, Mr. President, is the first Democratic measure that has been enacted for thirty-four years. The repeal of the purchasing clause of the silver bill of 1890 did not, I believe, receive a Democratic majority either in this or the other Chamber. Indeed, it is a little singular that there has not, since this bill was reported, been a Democratic speech made in its favor. The chairman of the committee, indeed, made a speech in favor of another measure as different in principle, substance, and effect as are the five points of Calvinism from one of Ingersoll's lectures. The principal single topics in that speech were the denunciation of the greed, wickedness, and covetousness of the persons engaged in protected industries in this country, and the special exposure of the infamy and fraud of specific duties. The other Democratic speeches, even from the three Senators who framed the measure, to the Senator from Texas

Who, saying he would ne'er consent,
Consented,

have consisted in disavowing the authorship or proprietorship of this bill, and saying that somebody else made it and is forcing it down their throats. Indeed, the last person in the world to ask as to what this bill contains, with the hope of getting an intelligent answer, would be the Senator from Indiana, chairman of the Finance Committee, and next to him the Senator from Tennessee, who is its parliamentary manager on this floor. And, Mr. President, if the Republican orator in the coming campaign desires to find a magazine of arguments against most of its principal and distinguishing provisions, there will be no better place for him to find them than in the speeches of the Democratic members of the Finance Committee, the Senator from Indiana, now its chairman, and the Senator from New Jersey, and the Senator from Missouri, and the Senator from Texas, formerly chairman of the Ways and Means Committee of the other House, and a sort of ad interim member of the Finance Committee of the Senate when the learning or the endurance or the digestive powers of any of the regular apostles of free trade gives out.

John Randolph, in a famous taunt, compared the coalition of John Quincy Adams and Henry Clay to a combination of the Puritan and the blackleg—of Blifil and Black George. I would not dishonor the brave and constant Puritan, as profound in civic wisdom as he was sincere in religious faith, by comparing him with the fickle, frivolous Mugwump. Nor do I find anything either of honor, character, or capacity in the Democratic leader of to-day to remind me of Henry Clay. But surely there was never a political union so incongruous or so ridiculous as that which seems to inspire the council of the present Administration in uttering its edicts to the disgusted, puzzled but obedient Democratic Senators of the Finance Committee. A paragraph of high protection is followed by a paragraph of free trade. The Socialist or the Populist gets in an item here to be followed in the next line by protection to a trust. The American manufacturer has an increased tax put on the material of his industry and is comforted by reading in the same schedule a clause which operates as a bounty to his Canadian competitor. The method of carrying this bill is as wonderful as the contents of the measure itself. For fear of indiscretion, its main contents, its principle, its policy, are carefully concealed from the chairman of the committee who reported it, and from the Senator to whom its parliamentary conduct is assigned.

If you will ask the Senators who are expected to defend it in debate why one doctrine is applied to one product and a totally different one to another of the same class, you are told that the gentlemen who answers you does not approve it and does not understand it, but that it was necessary to pass the bill. I would not be guilty of indelicacy, but I suspect there can not be found in all literature a choicer collection of emphatic theological language than in the private utterances of the Senator from Texas and the Senator from Missouri in regard to the details of the measure they are compelled to advocate. If you press your inquiries too far the button is touched and the axe of the motion to lay upon the table comes down upon your neck. The Democratic champion of free speech is talking about a cloture. The New England independent demands the application of Democratic party discipline. The civil service reformer compares the Executive, who is using patronage to force distasteful measures down reluctant throats, to heroes of ancient time. I saw a cartoon the other day in which the draftsman made up in enthusiasm for what he lacked in artistic skill, in which the present Executive was compared to Horatius at the bridge:

Alone stood brave Horatius,
But constant still in mind,
Thrice thirty thousand foes before
And the broad flood behind.

Mr. President, if there be any bridge by which our worthy Chief Magistrate is standing just now, it is the Pons Asinorum, which his Democratic pupils in the Senate will never be able to get over.

These financial problems are more puzzling to the free trade intellect than the famous fifth problem of Euclid. Our modern Horatius will successfully defend his bridge.

The most remarkable circumstance of the whole of which I have spoken is this curious substitution, for the ordinary conduct and function of the legislator, of the behest of some mysterious, unknown, secret political power. Somebody somewhere pulls a string and the regular Democratic majority is duly registered. We have heard of such things in ward politics in some Northern States, but this is the first time the political ward wire-puller has made his appearance on a national scale. The Senator from Tennessee is a good general, but his methods are those of the ancient Roman and not of the modern civil-service reformer. We are told by the historian that when the Roman general was to arrange his order of battle he sacrificed an ox to Mars, and the soothsayer consulted the entrails. The general obeyed the command. He yielded neither to expostulation nor to advice. He pretended no knowledge of his own. He had but one answer, "Locutus bos." That was sufficient for army and the people. What soothsayer consults the entrails, or in what white-porched temple near our Tiber the sacrifice is made, or the entrails are consulted, I can not say. But we get but one answer to our inquiries, "Locutus bos." The boss has given his orders.

Why is Tennessee marble specific and Connecticut freestone ad valorem? Locutus bos. The boss has given orders.

Why do you have specific duties for the South and ad valorem for the North? Locutus bos. The boss has given orders.

Why do you give duty and bounty both to the sugar trust? Locutus bos. The boss has given orders.

Why is rice 84 per cent ad valorem with a specific duty and wheat free, and barley 30 per cent ad valorem? Locutus bos. The boss has spoken.

The power which is to pass this bill is a coalition between the aristocrat and the Populist; between the spirit of the old slave master and the spirit which would make war on property, on frugality, on honest labor, on honest, moderate earnings. The alliance is between the spirit of sectionalism of the South and that spirit at the North which never has known the impulse of a true nationality. It protects by enormous duties, upon which it piles enormous bounties, the industry of the South and the ill-gotten gains of the trust. Its warfare is upon the savings bank, upon the life insurance, upon the yeoman, upon the farm, and upon the workman in the mill. The power which is behind it may seem to secure for itself a brief victory; but the men who are wielding it know well that it is doomed. Its success will be as short lived as it is mischievous. It may last for a day, for a year, and perhaps for a Presidential term. But in the end the issue of this contest can not be doubtful. The stars in their courses fight against it. The spirit of the American people is against it. The spirit of honest labor, the spirit of American liberty, are on our side. And in the future, as in the past, God giveth to liberty nothing but victory.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR].

Mr. HOAR. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. PEFFER. Let the amentment be stated, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In paragraph 98, on page 19, line 8, before the words "per cent," it is proposed to strike out "forty" and insert "sixty;" so as to make the paragraph read:

98. Spectacles, eyeglasses, goggles, opera glasses, and other optical instruments and frames for the same, 60 per cent ad valorem.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CAMERON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER], and withhold my vote.

Mr. CULLOM (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. DUBOIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. MCPHERSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HIGGINS]. If he were here I should vote "nay."

Mr. MILLS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], but I transfer that pair to the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL], who is paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], so that the Senator from Massachusetts and I can vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. LODGE. Under that arrangement I am at liberty to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. PALMER (when his name was called). I announce my pair with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH]. If he were present I should vote "nay."

Mr. WHITE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Idaho [Mr. SHOUP]. I do not observe the Senator in the Chamber and therefore I withhold my vote.

Mr. HOAR. I suggest to the Senator from California that I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PUGH], and if the Senator will agree to a transfer of pairs, I suggest that his pair with the Senator from Idaho be transferred to the Senator from Alabama, which will enable us both to vote.

Mr. WHITE. That is entirely satisfactory. I vote "nay."

Mr. HOAR. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. DANIEL. I am paired with the Senator from Washington [Mr. SQUIRE], but I am at liberty to vote to make a quorum, and I vote "nay."

Mr. GORDON. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] to the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH], which will enable the Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS] and me to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. DUBOIS. Under that transfer of pairs I vote "yea."

Mr. QUAY. Is the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] recorded as voting?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama is not recorded. He has requested the present occupant of the chair to state that he is detained from the Senate by sickness.

Mr. QUAY. Being paired with that Senator, I withhold my vote.

Mr. PATTON. I inquire if the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. GIBSON] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not voted.

Mr. PATTON. Then I withhold my vote.

Mr. FRYE. The senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] is detained from the Senate by illness. He is paired for to-day with the senior from Nevada [Mr. JONES].

Mr. HARRIS. I simply desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. BATE] is absent under the order of the Senate, as is the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR]. They are paired with each other.

Mr. CAFFERY. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Montana [Mr. POWER] to the Senator from North Carolina [Mr JARVIS], and vote "nay."

Mr. BRICE. I have transferred my pair with the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT] to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. IRBY] for the day, and I shall vote during the day without making any further announcement. I vote "nay" on this question.

Mr. GORDON. In order to save time hereafter, I beg leave to state that the pair I have just announced of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH] will stand during the day.

Mr. DANIEL. As I am informed that a quorum has voted without counting my vote, I desire to withdraw it, and announce my pair with the Senator from Washington [Mr. SQUIRE].

The result was announced—yeas 21, nays 30; as follows:

YEAS—21.

Aldrich,	Frye,	Manderson,	Sherman,
Allison,	Hale,	Mitchell, Oregon	Teller,
Chandler,	Hawley,	Morrill,	Washburn.
Dixon,	Hoar,	Perkins,
Dolph,	Lodge,	Platt,
Dubois,	McMillan,	Power,

NAYS—30.

Berry,	Coke,	Lindsay,	Roach,
Blackburn,	Faulkner,	McLaurin,	Vest,
Blanchard,	George,	Martin,	Vilas,
Brice,	Gordon,	Mills,	Voorhees,
Butler,	Harris,	Murphy,	Walsh,
Caffery,	Hunton,	Pasco,	White.
Call,	Jones, Ark.	Peffer,
Cockrell,	Kyle,	Ransom,

NOT VOTING—34.

Allen,	Gibson,	McPherson,	Shoup,
Bate,	Gorman,	Mitchell, Wis.	Smith,
Camden,	Gray,	Morgan,	Squire,
Cameron,	Hansbrough,	Palmer,	Stewart,
Carey,	Higgins,	Patton,	Turpie,
Cullom,	Hill,	Pettigrew,	Wilson.
Daniel,	Irby,	Proctor,	Wolcott.
Davis,	Jarvis,	Pugh,
Gallinger,	Jones, Nev.	Quay,

So the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEFFER].

Mr. MCMILLAN. Mr. President, I can not let the wool schedule pass without a protest, however ineffectual, on behalf of the farmers of Michigan, a State which stands fifth among the wool-producing States of the Union. In Michigan the wool is about the first large product which the farmer brings to market. The money which he obtains for his wool is used to pay the expenses of harvesting. The country banks obtain their supplies of money from the Eastern centers on shipments of wool, and in this way the moving of the crops is assisted and made easy. Again, it has been found that sheep will thrive on what are called the "pine barrens" from which certain kinds of timber have been cut; and in this way large quantities of new land are brought into use.

Under the influence of a tariff designed to be protective the production of wool in Michigan has increased steadily from 153,375 pounds in 1840 to 12,378,318 pounds in 1890. When the McKinley law was passed the intention was to give adequate protection to wool, but by an error only half the duty intended to be placed on fine wools was provided for. As a result wool graded with fine Ohio washed was subjected to a duty of but 6 cents, instead of 22 cents, as intended. Hon. John T. Rich, the governor of Michigan, in his address before the National Woolgrowers' Association, last October, well expressed the feelings of the Michigan woolgrowers, when he said:

It is useless to expect during the present Congress any amendment to the law of 1890 which will help our case at all. On the contrary there is a well-grounded fear that such changes are liable to be made in the law that what little protection we have may be wiped out.

The question is, What can be done to avert this threatened action? This is the real purpose for which you were called together. It is generally understood that the majority in Congress purpose to put wool on the free list and remove the compensating duty on manufactures of wool. Now, if placing wool on the free list did not entirely destroy wool-raising in the United States, protection on manufactured woolens would be better than nothing, as it would make it possible to have a market for our wool in this country instead of selling it in a foreign country to be returned to us manufactured.

But with his own finished product on the free list, the woolgrower would not feel an interest in protecting another product while his own had only a remote and incidental benefit, if he did not at once insist that all or none should go on the free list. It is evident that the people who are at heart just as much in favor of free woolen manufactures as of free wool recognize the fact that the combined wool interests of this country are too strong to be attacked at once and are appealing to the cupidity and selfishness of the manufacturers for their aid to place wool on the free list. With this accomplished, they will then ask the injured and indignant woolgrower to get even with the manufacturer by helping to put the manufactured article on the free list.

The final result of free wool must be that we shall come to depend on foreign lands not only to raise wool, but also to manufacture woolens. Hon. M. E. Rumsey, of Leslie, Mich., states the case fairly in a letter, from which I quote:

I have owned sheep for the past twenty-five years—

Says Mr. Rumsey—

and am able to know something of the cost of raising wool. We, in the central portion of Michigan, keep sheep on land worth from $30 to $60 an acre, and in order to make the business profitable we must have adequate protection against Australia and other countries, where a rental of a cent an acre is paid. I am paying—from 8 to 10 cents a pound for wool, all because of the prospect that wool is to be admitted free of duty. I know the Democrats argue that wool has gone down under the McKinley law. The reason is that the price of wool has declined the world over. Still, two years ago I bought wool from the farmers of Michigan for from 22 to 28 cents a pound; one year ago from 12 to 20 cents a pound; and this year from 8 to 17 cents, according to quality and cleanliness. We are down to free-wool prices this year, or nearly so; because of the almost certainty that before this year's clip can be sold it will have to compete with the world's supply. Free wool will drive the sheep from Michigan, at least all except the mutton varieties.

Mr. Rumsey is a dealer as well as a grower—

The little village of Saline, Mich., beautiful for situation, is one of the headquarters for breeders of stud flocks of merino sheep. At Chicago and at the Michigan State and local fairs, the Saline sheep have won a large share of the prizes; and the names of the Shaws, the Hoyts, the Smiths, the Woods, of the Crittendens and of Parsons are known wherever in this country merino sheep are raised, and several of these breeders have a trade in Australia. Prior to the election of 1892 sheep for breeding were selling for from $10 to $40 a head, with occasionally a much higher price for exceptional stock. The tariff agitation and the settled conviction that wool was likely to go on the free list has ruined the sheep-raising business.

Mr. Benjamin N. Smith furnishes an example of the present condition of affairs in the case of Mr. Jessup S. Wood, a sheep-breeder of wide reputation. Mr. Wood decided last fall to give up to his son the business at which he had been so successful. He had a flock that cost him on an average $40 a head. It had been carefully culled every year and represented half a century of the most skillful breeding, each individual being a type of a breed. His son, having an equally good flock and one large enough to stock the place, the elder Mr. Wood offered his sheep at auction, but could not get a bid on them. Then failing to sell them at private sale, the owner resolved to fatten them and sell them for mutton. This he did, and last March he sold them with the fleeces on for 1½ cents a pound, or about $1.50 a head! In just four months a sheep that had been paying property at $40 dropped in value to $1.50.

During last winter Mr. A. S. Wood sold at 50 cents a head a number of sheep that six months previous would have readily brought from $10 to $15 for the Texas or the Western trade. With wool from six to ten cents a pound, less than one-quarter of the usual number of lambs are being raised this year. Mr. Wood writes that if wool is to go on the free list, the Michigan farmers must kill their sheep; for it is useless to try to compete with Australia and South Africa, where land is cheap and labor is a small item.

The pasturage of a sheep in Michigan is worth 2 cents per head per week for six months in the year; and 5 cents per head per week for the other six months, making $1.82 a year. It takes an extra good grade of flock to average 10 pounds of wool to a sheep, and at present prices these 10 pounds are worth between seventy and ninety cents. Thus there is a loss of over 50 per cent on raising wool; and this means simply a slaughter of the sheep.

Mr. H. D. Platt, of Ypsilanti, a man of wide experience in all that pertains to farming, gives his experience with Shropshire-down ewes, which he keeps for their wool and to fit their increase while lambs for market. The sales of wool and lambs for the past three years are given as a demonstration of the effect of free wool on the business of the farmers of Michigan. In 1892 Mr. Platt sold his wool unwashed for 26 cents a pound and the lambs for 6 cents a pound. In 1893 he sold his wool for 22 cents a pound to a free trader who sold it later in the season for 15 cents. The lambs sold for 5 cents a pound. In 1894 he sold his wool for 14 cents and his lambs for 4 cents.

These figures show that since the cry of free wool has been raised the price of wool, as well as the price of the best mutton (lamb), has decreased, and if the threat of free wool is fulfilled the flock-masters of the Northwest will have to go out of business.

When the McKinley bill became a law the woolgrowers of Michigan expected to have at least a living chance with the manufacturers, but with free wool and protected woolens there is nothing but the ruination of the wool industry, and this will in turn affect every farmer in the State.

Even the expectation of free wool has quite wiped out a majority of the flocks of fine-wool sheep. Mr. J. Evarts Smith, the treasurer of the Michigan Merino Sheep Breeders' Association, states that he has a flock of thoroughbred merinos which he started about thirty years ago by the purchase of fifty-eight ewes, for which he paid $30 each. He has given his best efforts to the improvement of his flock by judicious selections of males, for which he has paid hundreds of dollars. Previous to the last election he was doing a good business in supplying the ranchmen of the West with the means to improve their flocks, and was building up a good trade with Australia and South America. Since last November trade has been at a standstill. Wool, unwashed, is worth but from 7 to 10 cents a pound; and this the Democrats say is raw material.

Every fine-wool sheep in Michigan to-day is being kept at an absolute loss, and it is only the disinclination to sacrifice what it has cost so many years to perfect that has spared any of the flocks.

"Last fall," Mr. Smith continues, "I sold about one hundred ewes for 80 cents each, that would have sold readily a few years ago for $25 each. I have saved a few for 'seed,' and my course is what nearly every breeder of my acquaintance has taken. I write as a breeder of a stud flock, but what I say will apply in some degree to every man who owns a flock."

Mr. President, I shall support the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas, as well as any other amendment which will tend to the protection of this great industry.

Mr. BERRY. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY], who I understand is going to take the floor, has kindly yielded five minutes of his time to me for the purpose of making a statement that I wish to make.

On Friday last the question arose in the Senate whether it had been customary, when the Senate was by unanimous consent acting under the five-minutes rule, to move to strike out the last word in order to get an opportunity to speak an additional five minutes. During the discussion that day the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] used the following language:

> The rules of the Senate are construed by its immemorial usage. The five-minutes rule, as it is called, has been in force in some form or other in this body as applied to the Calendar for forty years. During that time it has been the invariable custom of Senators to make a motion to strike out the last word and treat that as an amendment for this purpose. No experienced Democratic Senator sits here who has not done it, I presume, twenty times in his life.

The Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] added:

> Always.

On the following day the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] used the following language:

> The plan of moving to strike out the first or the last word in a clause in order to gain an additional five minutes for debate has been resorted to over and over again, as Senators on the other side of the Chamber know, and it has never been objected to. Our power to extend debate is almost unlimited.

The Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH] said:

> I wish to say that the agreement under which we are proceeding was entered into yesterday in my absence, but I shall endeavor to keep it in letter and spirit. I know, and so does every Senator on either side of the Chamber know, that ever since I have been in the Senate it has been customary for Senators on both sides, who were not satisfied with having spoken for five minutes on any amendment, to move another merely formal amendment, for the purpose of extending their remarks five minutes more. That has come to be the practice in regard to this rule, and Senators who complain about it know that it is so as well as I do. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] and the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] have stated this morning that during their long service in the Senate that had been the universal custom.

Mr. President, having been here for nine years and not having remembered to have ever heard the motion made, I consulted the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS], who is an experienced man and has been here for seventeen years. He said he had no recollection of ever having heard the motion made. I then consulted the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST]. He said he had never heard the motion made, though it might have been done. I consulted a Republican Senator of long experience, and a very prominent one on the other side of the Chamber, and he made the same statement to me.

I had a conference with our Journal clerk, Mr. Spencer. He said it might have been done in the morning hour under the five-minutes rule or on an appropriation bill where an order had been made to act under the five-minutes rule. He would not say that it had; he thought possibly it had; but never had it been done within his knowledge where the Senate was acting under the five-minutes rule by unanimous consent.

I then, last Saturday, went to the librarian, Mr. Church, and the assistant librarian, Mr. Baker, and talked with them in regard to it, and I ask the Secretary to read the statements that they make.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The statements will be read if there be no objection. The Chair hears none.

The Secretary read as follows:

SENATE LIBRARY, CAPITOL,
Washington, D. C., June 11, 1894.

DEAR SIR: I have examined with as much care as I could in the limited time given me both the Journal and the RECORD from the Forty-ninth to the Fifty-second Congress, inclusive, for precedents (both under the Anthony rule in the morning hour and under orders of the Senate as to the five-minute rule) for striking out the last word in an item or bill. I have not been able thus far to find any such precedent, although it is possible that I may have overlooked them. The nearest approach to it is where Senator Plumb, in the second session of the Fifty-second Congress, made a motion (after the adoption, by order of the Senate, of the five-minute rule) to strike out a whole paragraph of an appropriation bill, which was debated. (See RECORD, second session Fifty-second Congress, page 3301.)

I have made my examination of your question as thorough as possible in the short time allowed me, and can only say that if any such precedent exists it has escaped my notice.

Very truly, yours,

ALONZO W. CHURCH,
Senate Librarian.

Hon. J. H. BERRY,
United States Senate.

SENATE LIBRARY, CAPITOL,
Washington, D. C., June 11, 1894.

DEAR SIR: In compliance with your request, I have examined carefully the Senate Journal from the first session of the Forty-ninth Congress to the Fifty-second Congress, which covers a period of about eight years, and I have failed to find a precedent to strike out the "last word" of a bill or amendment, when the bill was being debated under the five-minute rule.

Most respectfully,

JAMES M. BAKER,
Assistant Librarian.

Hon. JAMES H. BERRY,
Senate Chamber.

Mr. BERRY. I will only add that I requested them to go back to the Forty-ninth Congress, because that was the Congress when I first came here.

Now, I do not say that no precedent exists. Precedents may be found, but I have failed to find them. I simply put this in for the purpose of stating that I did not at the time remember such a precedent, and I wanted to show that there are able and experienced Senators here who have been here longer than I, and that they are equally ignorant of such a custom, if ever such a custom has existed. I simply wanted to put in the RECORD these statements, and I have no comments to make.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator from Pennsylvania will pardon me one moment, I merely wish to say that the question of striking out the last word has nothing to do with it. It is the question of moving an informal amendment, an amendment pro forma for the purpose of debate.

Mr. QUAY. Mr. President——

Mr. SHERMAN. If the Senator from Pennsylvania will allow me a moment, I wish to state that after consulting the convenience of Senators so far as I could I have ascertained that a number of Senators desire to speak on the wool question to-day; and I shall ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to-morrow morning, not interfering with other public business, to take the floor upon the question.

Mr. QUAY addressed the Senate. After having spoken one hour and twenty-five minutes,

Mr. HOAR said: Mr. President, the Senator from Pennsylvania yields to me for a moment. I see the Senator from Texas [Mr.

MILLS] is now in charge of the bill, and I ask unanimous consent that the Senate go back, and that coal be put on the free list.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HUNTON in the chair). Is there objection?

Mr. MILLS. I do not think that coal has been reached yet in the bill.

Mr. HOAR. I ask unanimous consent that coal be now placed on the free list.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. MILLS. I have nothing to do with putting coal on the free list in the bill until it is reached, and of course it has not been reached.

Mr. HOAR. I ask unanimous consent that the coal schedule be now taken up, and that coal be placed on the free list.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Chair understand the Senator from Massachusetts withdraws his request for the present?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I object to its being withdrawn.

Mr. QUAY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent, as the Senator from Texas is now in charge of the bill, and believing that he is not very much in love with it, that the bill and amendments be laid on the table.

Mr. CULLOM. It may be laid on the table without his consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the bill be laid on the table. Is there objection?

Mr. MILLS. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is objection.

Mr. QUAY. Then I shall proceed with my remarks, Mr. President.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Will the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to me to make a motion?

Mr. QUAY. Certainly.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I move that the pending bill be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. QUAY. I am afraid that that motion may occasion some little controversy. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon moves that the pending bill be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. On that motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. QUAY. Do I understand the motion is withdrawn?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. No; it is not withdrawn. The question is on the motion to indefinitely postpone, and I ask that the roll may be called upon it.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DIXON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MCLAURIN]. As he is not present in the Chamber I withhold my vote.

Mr. HIGGINS (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON]. If he were present, I should vote "yea" and I presume he would vote "nay."

Mr. MILLS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER]. If he were present I should vote "nay."

Mr. PATTON (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. GIBSON]; otherwise I should vote "yea."

Mr. QUAY (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. LODGE. I make the same transfer of pairs that was made on the last vote, and transfer my pair with the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL] to the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], which will allow the Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS] and me to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. MILLS. My pair with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] having been transferred, I vote "nay."

Mr. CAMERON. I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER], and make this announcement for the day. If the Senator from South Carolina were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] has been called from the Senate Chamber to attend to some departmental business, not anticipating that any vote would be taken on any part of the bill. I promised that Senator, however, to pair with him in case a vote should be taken. I therefore withhold my vote. If the Senator from Tennessee were present I should vote "yea" and he would vote "nay."

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY] to the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. ROACH], and vote "nay."

Mr. PASCO. The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER] has been called from the Chamber, and I desire to announce that he is paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY].

Mr. CALL. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] to the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MCLAURIN], which will enable the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. DIXON] and me to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. DIXON. That arrangement is agreeable to me, and under it I am permitted to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. FRYE (after having voted in the affirmative). The senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] was paired for the day with the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES], but the Senator from Nevada has now come into the Chamber and has voted. Therefore I resume my pair, which I have generally with the Senator from Maryland, and will withdraw my vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The vote of the Senator from Maine will be withdrawn.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, as I observe it will make no difference in the result, notwithstanding my pair I will let my vote stand.

The result was announced—yeas 23, nays 34; as follows:

YEAS—23.

Allison,	Frye,	McMillan,	Power,
Chandler,	Hale,	Manderson,	Sherman,
Cullom,	Hansbrough,	Mitchell, Oregon	Squire,
Davis,	Hoar,	Perkins,	Teller,

So the motion was not agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania is entitled to the floor.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Will the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to me for fifteen minutes? I wish to leave the city this afternoon, and I desire to make some remarks on the pending bill.

Mr. QUAY. Under the circumstances I will yield to the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President, the Senate has disposed of about all the items in this bill which are produced by the farmer, and what is the result? The duty on live animals is reduced to 20 per cent ad valorem; buckwheat, wheat, rye, corn, oats, oatmeal, corn meal, eggs, broom corn and many other farm products are practically on the free list, and the duty on barley is so much reduced that at least 10,000,000 bushels will be imported as against less than 2,000,000 last year.

Free eggs will bring in from sixteen to twenty million dozens as against a little over 1,000,000 last year. In fact, the market for $15,000,000 worth of farm products is thus turned over to Canada and taken away from the American farmer. Sixteen million dozen of eggs thrown upon the market of the United States will break the price and eggs will decline several cents a dozen.

Last week three car loads of South Dakota butter and eggs were shipped to this city, a thing that can not be repeated if this bill passes, for the nearer Canadian farmer will have this market. With free corn the starch makers of New York will import their corn from the Argentine Republic, and within one year after this bill passes corn from South America by the cargo will be sold in New York, for the freight per bushel from the Argentine Republic is less than half the rate per bushel from Dakota or Nebraska, and the farmers of Dakota and Nebraska will be buying protected starch made of South American corn. It will not do to say we export corn and it can not come here from other countries. We export vast quantities of cotton, and I presume few people know that 43,000,000 pounds, valued at $4,680,000 was imported last year; yet such is the case. Of this cotton 28,000,000 pounds came from Egypt and is long, fine, staple; yet every pound of it could be raised in North and South Carolina if a duty was placed upon it sufficient to compensate for the difference in wages. Why do you not put a duty on cotton and save this market to our own people? The sugar bounty is repealed, giving the death blow to the budding industry in Nebraska and Dakota, which would have soon given employment to thousands of people in those States.

A duty has been placed upon raw sugar of 1¼ cents a pound, which equals a tax on the people of South Dakota of 87½ cents per capita, as each person consumes 70 pounds of sugar per year, making a total tax of $350,000 per annum upon the 400,000 people who reside within her borders; and an additional tax of 42½ cents on each 100 pounds of refined sugar, which is a direct donation to the trust and amounts to 32½ cents per capita, or a tax of $140,000 on the 400,000 people who reside in South Dakota as a direct contribution, per year, to the sugar trust.

The population of Nebraska is 1,050,000, and their contribution will be a tax of 87½ cents per capita, or $875,000 on the 1,000,000 people who reside in that State, which goes into the treasury of the Government, and 32½ cents per capita on refined sugar, levied for the benefit of the trust, or $325,000 per annum from her 1,000,000 people.

I take these two States as examples, because the two Populist Senators in this body assisted in doing all this, and I want to give them a chance to explain to the people why they did it.

A Populist farmer with a family of five would pay $1.60 per year to the trust, just four bushels of wheat at 40 cents a bushel. I imagine I see a Nebraska or Dakota Populist farmer, filled with joy, hitching up his team and starting to market with four bushels of wheat, selling it for 40 cents a bushel, and sending the money to the sugar trust as his contribution to help maintain the gang of vampires that have hung around this Capitol for the past five months, disgracing the nation. With what elastic step and swelling heart filled with joy, will this farmer return home with an empty wagon and an empty pocket to bless God in his prayers that he has had the privilege of sending a Populist to the United States Senate who has assisted by his vote in conferring upon him and the people of his State the blessed chance to make this contribution. I hope the Populists of my State will not take this too much to heart, for this bill places lumber on the free list, and it is said millions will be saved to the people by having their lumber free.

Mr. President, free lumber will not cheapen that article in South Dakota or Nebraska one farthing. The lumber for Nebraska and South Dakota comes from three sources: siding, shingles, and high grades of light lumber from Oregon and Washington, sawed along the bays and rivers which skirt the Pacific coast in those States. Will this lumber be cheapened any by taking off the duty? Not one penny. And the conclusive proof that it will not be cheaper is in the fact that millions of feet of lumber are shipped each year from Puget Sound to Asia, Australia, South and Central America, and the ships that carry this lumber come through British America, through the Straits of Juan de Fuca to reach the United States to get their loads.

If lumber was cheaper in British America these ships would load there instead of coming to the United States, but the fact of the matter is American enterprise has made lumber cheaper in the United States than in British America in spite of the fact that under the present law there is a duty of $2 per thousand. I saw one hundred ships loading lumber for these foreign countries in Puget Sound last summer, and when I crossed the line into British Columbia I found boundless forests on every hand.

Logs are admitted free under the present law and are sawed in American mills, furnishing labor for American workmen. As far, then, as Washington and Oregon are concerned, free lumber will not cheapen the article 1 cent, but it will transfer the industry of manufacturing a portion of it to a foreign country.

Nebraska and Dakota get considerable flooring and finishing lumber from the forests of the South. No one pretends this Southern lumber will be cheaper.

Most of the lumber used in Dakota and Nebraska comes from Northern Minnesota and Wisconsin, and this lumber will not be cheaper if you admit lumber free of duty. The only Canadian lumber that can compete with it is along the east shore of Lake Superior and the east shore of Lake Huron, over 300 miles further from Dakota or Nebraska than the forests of Wisconsin or Minnesota; therefore, the difference in the cost of transportation prevents the Canadian lumber from competing; but I will grant, for the purpose or argument, that the tranportation cost will be the same from Canada and Wisconsin, or, in other words, that the Canadian lumber is as near Dakota and Nebraska as the Wisconsin and Minnesota lumber. Even then free lumber will not reduce the price, for logs come in free now and are rafted across the lakes and sawed in the American mills, and the cost of bringing them across the lakes in rafts of logs is no greater than it would be to raft the manufactured lumber to this country.

When the McKinley bill passed there were many mills on the east side of Lakes Huron and Superior, sawing lumber for the American market. After the passage of the act of 1890 these mills were closed and the logs sent to the United States and made into lumber. The only thing, then, free lumber will do is to surrender part of our market and transfer the sawing of Canadian logs to the Canadian side of these lakes, depriving Americans of the employment and giving their places to Canadian workmen.

All this talk about free lumber is demagogy, so far as it relates to Dakota and Nebraska; but it can do no harm, as our farmers are too intelligent to be fooled all of the time. I challenge anyone to show how free lumber will cheapen that article in South Dakota or Nebraska. It may cheapen it a little in New England, but I doubt it.

With free lumber disposed of, what has the farmer in this bill? You say, free barbed wire. This again is a delusion and a fraud. Dakota and Nebraska are too far inland, and the long haul by rail prevents them from importing wire. Our barbed wire comes from Illinois and Missouri, and it is worth at the factory to-day 1½ cents per pound. Free wire will not cheapen this article in these States, but it will allow German wire to reach our seaports, in some cases, and take part of our market away from the American manufacturer, and part of the chance to earn a living away from the American laborer.

There is one more point, and that is the advantage the sugar trust derives from this bill over the McKinley bill, a point that has not been heretofore made. The sugar trust refines raw sugar, and their factories are in the cities along the coast. Sugar made from beets is refined by the factory that makes it. If the bounty was not repealed, before ten years Nebraska and Dakota would produce all the sugar used in this country and there would be no further use for the refineries or the trust, and their property would be valueless. Therefore the trust is interested in preventing the growth of the beet-sugar industry in this country; is interested in preventing the United States from raising its own sugar. To repeal the bounty is of no small importance to the trust, for if the bounty should continue and thus the sugar industry continue to grow year by year, the refineries owned by the trust would have less to do and finally be closed altogether. In fact the discriminating duty now levied for the benefit of the trust of 32½ cents for every person, if paid in cash to the farmers as a bounty on beet sugar, would soon make the United States independent of the world as far as a supply of sugar is concerned.

Mr. QUAY resumed his speech. After having spoken altogether two hours and forty minutes—

Mr. POWER said: Will the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to me?

Mr. QUAY. I have no objection to yielding to the Senator from Montana. I feel a little exhausted.

[Mr. QUAY'S speech will be published entire after it shall have been concluded. See Appendix.]

Mr. HOAR. I think this very important debate should be listened to by the Senate. I suggest that there is no quorum present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FAULKNER in the chair). The Senator from Massachusetts suggests the want of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Allison,	Dixon,	McLaurin,	Quay,
Berry,	Dolph,	Martin,	Sherman,
Blackburn,	Dubois,	Mills,	Squire,
Blanchard,	Faulkner,	Mitchell, Wis.	Teller,
Brice,	Gordon,	Morrill,	Turpie,
Caffery,	Hale,	Palmer,	Vest,
Call,	Harris,	Pasco,	Voorhees,
Cameron,	Hoar,	Peffer,	Walsh,
Cockrell,	Hunton,	Perkins,	Washburn,
Coke,	Jarvis,	Platt,	White.
Cullom,	Jones, Ark.	Power,
Daniel,	Kyle,	Pugh,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-six Senators having answered to their names, a quorum of the Senate is present. The Senator from Montana will proceed.

Mr. POWER. Mr. President, representing one of the States very largely interested in woolgrowing, I conceive it to be my duty to present a number of important facts concerning this industry, to which I respectfully invite attention of the Senate. Inasmuch as the industry of sheep-raising is not confined to any one section of the country, but is pursued to a greater or lesser extent in every locality, the great community of interest demands most careful treatment of the subject, and a thorough understanding of the important issues involved in fixing tariff rates upon the American wool product.

In 1893, after the second election of President Cleveland, great anxiety followed to those interested in producing wool, which in many cases developed into a panic. Flocks were sacrificed, the value of the wool clip was cut in two, the price obtainable for sheep was less than half, and the woolgrower seemed doomed to bankruptcy and ruin. Whether these fears are groundless, or whether their dire anticipation has had only too sure a foundation, remains for this Congress to determine.

Can there be a greater contrast than that afforded by the condition of affairs during the three previous years under the protective system? Not only the three years previous, but protection and prosperity seem always to have gone hand in hand.

THE FIRST IMPETUS TO WOOL GROWING.

The first protection to woolgrowing of any importance was in 1867, under which this industry made rapid and continued advancement. From 1880 to 1883, with protective duties, the number of sheep increased 12 per cent. In 1883 Congress unwisely reduced the wool tariff some 2 cents per pound, which reduction prevailed for seven years, and during this period the decrease was 6 per cent in the number of sheep. In 1888, with adequate tariff protection, the sheep industry prospered, the increase of the last three years up to 1893 being extraordinary, reaching 18½ per cent, showing our capacity for woolgrowing, which in a few years would have enabled us to produce the quantity of wool needed and, according to the leading authorities on wool, there is no quality of foreign wool that can not be raised in this country. The only reason why the production of certain grades has been abandoned, is because we can not produce them as cheaply as foreign countries.

The Australian Merino wool, which was quoted recently as not being produced here on account of climatic conditions, is, according to Judge Lawrence, (one of the best authorities on this subject in the country) an American wool, bred from American sheep and their descendants, and chiefly exported by Albert Chapman and others from Vermont to Australia. He says:

Our best clothing goods are made from wools embraced in the McKinley tariff law as class 1 (Merino, etc.) and class 2 (Southdown, Cotswold, Shropshire, etc.), grown in this country and unsurpassed in quality.

Mr. Lawrence further asserts that "there are no foreign wools essential to the production of our fine fabrics, as our wools compare very favorably with those of the foreign product."

Mr. Charles Fletcher, of the Providence Worsted Mills, in a letter dated February 18, 1890, to the Boston Home Market Club, said:

The talk of mixing Australian wool to make goods required for this market is all nonsense, as Australian wools are only used here largely when they are cheaper than domestic wools.

In 1851, at the World's Exhibition in London, four prize medals were awarded to American sheep, and at the International Exhibition of 1863, at Hamburg, where all the finest flocks were represented, two first-class prizes were awarded to Merino sheep from Vermont.

The Chief of the Bureau of Statistics of the Treasury Department under President Cleveland's first administration, referring to the quality of American wool, in his wool report of 1887, page 36, says:

It is the current popular opinion that English and Australian wool surpass American in quality. But the reverse is true; American wool and American manufactures excel those of the rest of the world.

In the face of this unequaled prosperity, why strive to change and force upon the country a policy that has always proved disastrous to this important branch of industry!

TARIFF REFORMERS LIKE TO KICK A SHEEP.

It has been said that if there is anything a tariff reformer hates, it is wool. We have also heard of the free-trade statesman who would climb over a fence, when he sees a sheep, to kick it. Unfortunately that feeling against the sheep and its product seems not to be confined to a few statesmen. The entire Democratic party appears inclined that way.

It must be that a prejudice exists against this industry, since in no other way can we account for this constant desire to legislate to its injury. It always seems to be the one singled out to bear the burden.

WHY NOT PROTECT WOOL?

Iron is protected, sugar and rice are protected, all manufactured goods are protected, and properly so. Why not wool? The principle may be sacrificed on every other article, but never on wool. Why is this? The woolgrower demands a reason. He has a right to know why his product should be made free, while he is obliged to pay protective duties on everything else he uses. Is not wool of sufficient importance to be taken under the mother wing and cared for as she cares for the rest of her flock? Does it not employ enough labor? Does it not sufficiently add to the revenue of the country? Is it a commodity that we can readily dispense with? Is it an industry that can be experimented with free from detriment? Why seize upon this one article of home production and home consumption to illustrate an illusive theory? Is it because wool is principally a product of the West, and, therefore, like silver, doomed to destruction?

Are we to permit ourselves to legislate for sections or sectional interests, rather than for the whole country? The people of the West are broad enough and generous enough to want protection for all home products whether raised in the South, in the East, or the West. They do not manufacture to any great extent, but are willing that the manufacturers of the South and East should be protected, because it is equitable and just. Protection for all home industries or for none would seem more just than this singling out of the products of certain sections.

As a class, the people of the West are above the pettiness of sectional jealousy, and while loyal to their own section, as the portion given over to their care and energies are, above all, American citizens, and as such devoted to whatever promotes the happiness and prosperity of the whole nation.

WOOL SHOULD NOT BE CLASSED AS "RAW MATERIAL." IT IS THE FARMER'S FINISHED PRODUCT.

I venture the contention that notwithstanding the general classification of wool as raw material, any product of which labor forms so great a part is not, and should not be considered raw material.

To the manufacturer, wool may be raw material—so to the tailor may be the cloth—his finished product being the garment, and the finished product of the manufacturer, the cloth. What is the finished product of the sheep grower? Is it not the clip?

The sheep have been cared for, herded at great expense, sheared, the wool baled, and when loaded in cars ready for shipment it will be found that the expenditure of labor and money, even to that stage, is a very large per cent of the value of the clip. The commission man, or manufacturer, receives, pays freight, stores, grades and possibly scours. This requires still further expenditure of labor and money, and the outlay necessary to put the wool in the market in this country is estimated as being 70 per cent of the value of the clip.

Take iron, for instance. The raw material is the ore in the mines. When this ore has been extracted and run into pigs and bars it passes from the raw into the partly manufactured state, after which it is forged into various other shapes. Iron ore, including manganiferous iron ore and also the dross residuum from burnt pyrites, is protected to the extent of 40 cents per ton. Iron in pigs, etc., has 22½ per cent ad valorem protection; wrought and cast scrap iron, etc., has $4 per ton protection; iron slabs, blooms, etc., are protected at 25 per cent ad valorem; beams, girders, etc., at six-tenths of 1 cent per pound, and so on all the way through the iron and steel schedules protection is given for what is really greater "raw material" than wool.

Other ores, clearly raw material, enjoy a certain rate of protection, and the same may be said of almost every other confessedly raw material, subject to subsequent manufacture, specified in the bill, including sugar and rice, while wool, in the production of which the entire country is more or less interested, is placed on the free list and put aside as "accursed." By what character of reasoning can this cruel discrimination be reconciled? Why should wool be classified as "raw material," entitled to no protection, when every other species of raw material is protected, to a greater or lesser extent, from foreign competition?

WOOL IS A LEGITIMATE SUBJECT OF REVENUE.

Is not wool a legitimate subject of revenue, if a tariff is to be shaped upon lines of tariff for revenue only? Have we not hitherto collected hundreds of millions of revenue from wool importations, and why is it that this source of revenue is now to be cut off and the deficit occasioned thereby made up largely from taxation of other material confessedly entirely "raw," unless it be that the policy of the present Administration is shaped understandingly in the interests of foreign wool producers and with the view to surrender our markets to their competition.

THE WARNING OF JAMES G. BLAINE.

True, such a policy must necessarily destroy our own sheep-growing industry and confiscate practically for the benefit of Great Britain the four hundred millions and more of American investment in this enterprise, not to mention the shrinkage of value in all the properties appertaining thereto, which must inevitably follow. This is "free trade" with a vengeance, and recalls the homily of America's great statesman, James G. Blaine, whose lips, now silent in the tomb, never uttered wiser or more prophetic words nor drew a more significant picture of the situation than when he said:

I love my country and my countrymen. I am an American, and I rejoice every day of my life that I am. I enjoy the general prosperity of my country, and I know that the workingmen of this land are the best paid, the best fed, and the best clothed of any laborers on the face of the earth. Many of them have homes of their own. They are surrounded by all the comforts and many of the luxuries of life. I shudder, however, at the thought that the time must come when all this will be changed, when the general prosperity of the country will be destroyed, when the great body of workingmen in this land, who are now so prosperous, will hear their wives and children cry for bread; that the day must come when the great factories and manufactories of this land will shut down, and where is now life and activity there will be the silence of the tomb. And the reason why this must be is this:

The great Southern wing of the Democratic party is determined to establish the doctrine of free trade in this land. They will be assisted by their Northern allies. There is a great body of visionary but educated men who are employed day by day in writing free-trade essays and arguments in favor of the doctrine, which find their way to every newspaper in this land. The great body of our people have never experienced themselves the sufferings which always result when the protective principles are laid aside. Poisoned and excited by the wild statements of these writers and the demagogic appeals of the Democratic speakers, the result will be that in the very near future these forces which are now working will be strong enough to defeat at the polls the party advocating the doctrine of protection. It must inevitably follow that uncertainty and doubt will ensue.

The business men of the country, fearing the destruction of the principles of protection, will decline to engage in business, consequently mills will shut down and the workingmen will be thrown out of employment. The people will then see, as they have never seen before, that they can not be prosperous and have work while this principle is threatened. In the midst of their sufferings they will learn that the only way they can be prosperous and happy is to vote for the party that has built up the industries by which they have gained a livelihood; because they will then see clearly that when the manufactory is shut down there is no demand for the only thing which they have to sell, and that is their labor.

THE WALKER TARIFF OF 1846 A FAILURE.

The history of free trade and inadequate protection is not one that we should be anxious to have repeat itself. We have no record of any prosperous times in this country under either.

The Walker tariff of 1846 was confessedly not a success. The revenue during its operations fell short of the expenditures about $70,000,000. Under the Walker tariff the making of broadcloth, in which the United States had been very successful, had to be abandoned. Whole flocks of fine-wool sheep were rendered valueless, except where they could be cross-bred into coarse-wooled flocks.

WHAT PRESIDENT BUCHANAN AND HORACE GREELEY SAID.

That the country did not suffer more seriously at that time was due partly to the discovery of the gold mines in California (which yielded the country about $290,000,000) and partly to the Mexican and European wars, which, for a time, created an unusual demand for our products. In 1856, when peace was again established in Europe, giving their people the opportunity to attend to their home productions, our prosperity suddenly collapsed, and the condition of the country is very forcibly described by President Buchanan in his message of December 8, 1857. He said:

> In the midst of unsurpassed plenty in all the productions, and in all the elements of national wealth, we find our manufactures suspended, our public works retarded, our private enterprises of different kinds abandoned, and thousands of useful laborers thrown out of employment and reduced to want.

Horace Greeley, commenting upon the state of affairs about that time, said:

> The making of roads is stopped, factories are closed, and homes and shops are no longer being built. Factory hands, roadmakers, carpenters, bricklayers, and laborers are idle, and paralysis is rapidly embracing every pursuit in this country. The cause of this stoppage of circulation is to be found in the steady outflow of gold to pay foreign balances for the cloth, the shoes, the iron, and other things that could be produced by American labor, but which can not be produced by our present revenue system.

I ask, are we not, by the proposed legislation, forcing a similar condition of things? While with free trade, European goods would flood our markets, and for a time perhaps lower prices prevail, is it reasonable to suppose that with our checked production, and the market absolutely in the hands of those only interested in getting all possible out of it, those low prices would continue? With little or no competition from our producers, the control of our market passes out of our hands and leaves us at the mercy of the foreign producer. Besides, what advantage can it be to the poor man to find prices reduced on articles, imported or otherwise, if his wages are proportionately reduced? Will he be any nearer to the purchase of his "little square of carpet"?

WHAT MAKES BUSINESS PROSPER.

The prosperity of the wage-earner means the prosperity of all business. It is the circulation of money in the hands of the wage-earners that makes business prosperous. Under protection, the working people of this country are better clothed, better fed, and far better educated than the people of any country on the globe. With the wages paid for labor during the past ten years in this country, the workingman could purchase, at prices charged for clothing more and better goods than could the foreign laborer even at the low prices said to prevail there.

Yet we are told that it is in the interest of the poor man that this change of the tariff is proposed, and particularly to benefit him that wool is to come in free. But he must remember that foreign sheep, foreign shepherds, foreign manufacturers mean for us foreign methods, foreign wages, abandoned farms and closed factories.

THE MENACE OF ENGLAND TO THE AMERICAN WOOL INDUSTRY.

Should we open our ports to free wool, what chance will our producers have in competition with England's extensive supply, costing little for its production; or the product from the Argentine Republic, where the sheep multiply with such rapidity their owners can almost afford to kill them for the hide; or from South Africa, where negro labor forms the principal outlay in the production, together with the supply from China, with its rice-fed cheap labor? It simply means that our products, labor, and manner of living must be on a plane with theirs or else we must drop down and out. This means to the woolgrower of the West extermination and annihilation of his industry for with his climate it would be utterly impossible for him to live in the same manner as his competitors. Yet we propose, without any regard for the rights of our people or any idea of justice, to make them bear this burden, and pass this law which will absolutely beggar them.

HAVE THE WOOL GROWERS NO RIGHTS ENTITLED TO RESPECT!

Have those who engaged in this industry no rights that we are bound to respect? The laws passed by one Congress invited this enterprise and, relying on this protection, thousands of our people have invested their all. Now, this Congress proposes measures which will as surely and effectually destroy this industry, lay waste and desolate the homes of those engaged in it, especially in the West, as if fire or flood had passed over that entire country. We may well hesitate before venturing farther in bringing about this radical change. With destitution and misery on every side, with riotous uprisings of different kinds, following apparently on the changes of the last year, it is a situation that demands the most cautious and careful legislation. The demand that "something be done, and at once," seems a popular cry, but it may not give such a measure of relief, after all, and result in the changing to a certainty that which is now only an impending evil.

A surplus in the Treasury may have been a grave offense, but it is an evil apparently easily remedied. We are not, at the present time, troubled in that way, nor are we likely to be. We now have to contend with a more alarming state of affairs, a Treasury with a deficit, a people struggling with poverty and wretchedness, and the masses of the unemployed demanding relief from their impoverished condition. This, unhappily, is not a state or condition of things so easily remedied as was the overflowing Treasury. It is now not how to dispose of a surplus but how to meet our obligations.

In the present disturbed and agitated condition of the masses, any legislation that adds to the large number of unemployed must be extremely hazardous and fraught with the greatest danger to all.

THIS IS NOT THE TIME FOR EXPERIMENT.

In my opinion, it is not the time for experiments nor abrupt changes. No sectional or partisan feeling should influence those who, at this important juncture, claim to be striving for the welfare of the country. If change there must be, let it be gradual, bearing in mind that our country's prosperity and the prosperity of the whole people are at stake.

The Hon. WILLIAM L. WILSON, in his speech of May 5, 1884, said:

> As I have said, I am in favor of a bill for the reduction of taxes. Where this bill departs from its general scheme of merely reducing taxes and seeks to enlarge the free list it bears unevenly and, as I believe, unjustly on some of the interests of my own State. To take any one great interest and transfer it suddenly to the free list is to hold it tributary to all the rest, while depriving it of any share in the common protection. Whatever reduction is made should be made so gradually as not to wreck, to disturb, or to alarm any of our great industries, and this return toward a peace tariff ought to be made by even progress on a scale of justice to all.

The clause, "to take any one great interest and transfer it suddenly to the free list, is to hold it tributary to all the rest, while depriving it of any share in the common protection," seems particularly applicable to the position that wool appears to hold in the proposed arrangement of the pending bill.

It is the "one great interest," apparently the only one, in which every State and Territory is interested, which is to be transferred suddenly to the free list, and which arrangement, according to the distinguished author just quoted, "is to hold it tributary to all the rest and deprive it of any share of the common protection." Can we afford to put so important an industry in this position? Is this "making the change so gradual as not to wreck or disturb one of our great industries?"

Besides, this sudden change would be more unfortunate for wool than for any other industry. Wool is not a product like grain, coal, iron, lumber, and in fact nearly all other products, which may be abandoned for a time and on short notice resumed without serious damage. Should free wool force us to discontinue this industry even for a short time it would be absolutely impossible to retrace our steps and place it in the position it now occupies without great outlay of labor and money and the loss of much valuable time.

PRESIDENT CLEVELAND'S DECLARATIONS.

Mr. Cleveland, in his letter of acceptance, September 26, 1892, states:

Tariff reform is still our purpose. Though we oppose the theory that tariff laws may be passed having for their object the granting of discriminating and unfair governmental aid to private ventures, we wage no exterminating war against any American interests. We believe a readjustment can be accomplished in accordance with the principles we profess without disaster or demolition. We believe that the advantages of free raw material should be accorded to our manufacturers, and we contemplate a fair and careful distribution of necessary tariff burdens, rather than the precipitation of free trade.

"A fair and careful distribution of necessary tariff burdens" seems to have been distinctly eliminated from the present bill so far as wool is concerned, and there is no question that if the present arrangement be carried out it certainly means an "exterminating war on this industry."

COMMENT UPON MR. WILSON'S SPEECHES IN MONTANA. LETTER FROM MR. DAVID HILGER.

This quotation from Mr. Cleveland's letter, regarding his care for American industries, and statements made by the Hon. WILLIAM L. WILSON, when in Montana on his political tour organizing Democratic clubs, were used by the Democrats of our State in the campaign of 1892; and through this representation that party held its strength in the woolgrowing districts. The following letter from Mr. Hilger, a Democratic nominee for the Legislature in the last election, justifies this conclusion, and shows the feeling now existing in Montana. I ask that it be read by the clerk.

The letter was read, as follows:

LEWISTOWN, MONT., December 30, 1893.

DEAR SENATOR: As you are well aware, I am a stanch Democrat, and was one of the Democratic candidates upon the Legislative ticket of this county at the last election. Further than that, at the time of my candidacy I was inclined to favor free wool, among other reforms which I think necessary in the tariff laws of the United States, and still believe in the main features of the Wilson bill, on principle. Nevertheless, as a woolgrower of this county, and having seen the effects of what has been termed a "free wool scare" upon our business, I am fearful that the results of free wool, or a sudden material reduction of the present tariff, would be very disastrous to the business of this county, as well as to the individuals directly engaged in sheep-raising. For this reason I desire, as a Democrat, to submit to your consideration, and for such use as you may be able to make of it, the following statement upon the proposed abolition of the tariff on wool:

I fully agree with the figures given in the accompanying petition or remonstrance, and am mainly in accord with the argument of the paper. Nevertheless, I believe that I state the position of the Democratic woolgrowers of this county fairly when I state that they are not in favor of putting wool upon the free list immediately, and that none of them ever contemplated such a radical measure in the event of Democratic success at the last Presidential election. I was firmly of the opinion that the party would recognize that an immense industry had been built up throughout the West under the fostering influences of tariff legislation and that it would be an injustice to place the products of that industry on the free list immediately, notwithstanding the party was not responsible in the matter.

I believe it to be the sentiment of the Democratic woolgrowers of the county and State that the reduction in the tariff upon any article or product should be gradual, looking to the entire abolition after such time as will enable those affected by the reduction to so adjust their business matters as to meet the reduction without loss, or with as little loss as possible. If the reduction or abolition of the tariff on wool was effected gradually, it would enable the woolgrower to adjust matters to meet the reduction, or to get out of the business without such harassing losses as would inevitably follow the total abolition of the tariff as now contemplated by the Wilson bill.

I would favor such a course, but am very much opposed to the free-wool clause as it now stands.

Very respectfully,

DAVID HILGER.

Hon. T. C. POWER,
Washington, D. C.

PETITION OF WOOLGROWERS OF FERGUS COUNTY, MONTANA, PROTESTING AGAINST FREE WOOL.

Mr. POWER. The petition referred to in Mr. Hilger's letter, which I will also ask to have read, is signed by various woolgrowers of Fergus County, Democrats and Republicans alike.

The Secretary read as follows:

LEWISTOWN, MONT., December 29, 1893.

DEAR SIR: We, the undersigned citizens and woolgrowers of Fergus County, Mont., beg leave to submit the following statement to your consideration:

1. Under the tariff system of the United States, the wool industry has grown to great proportions, and has become the main industry of the county, without which this county in all probability would never have been organized.

There are owned and ranged in Fergus County upwards of 400,000 sheep. Prior to the last Presidential election there was a ready sale for sheep at $3 to $3.50 per head, and the average net value of the wool clip was about $1.25 per head.

Since that time, and the consequent expectation of the material lowering or entire abolition of the tariff on wool, the market price of these same sheep and of the wool clip has declined until sheep can hardly be sold at $1.50 per head, and the net value of the wool clip has been reduced to about 55 cents per head. These figures are not mere theory, but are based upon actual business transactions within our personal knowledge.

2. The consequent loss, arising from this state of facts, to the woolgrowers of Fergus County is about $700,000 in the market value of sheep; and about $280,000 annually in the value of the wool clip.

3. In addition to the investment of our citizens in sheep, experience has demonstrated that the successful conduct of the business requires an investment of about the same amount in lands, camps, fences, buildings, and machinery. Owing to the conditions of the business, partly, the values of all this class of property has shrunk in about the same ratio as has the value of sheep. It is not fair to argue, as many do, that the downfall of the sheep industry would be the upbuilding of agriculture, for these reasons: In the first place, a very large proportion of the investment of our woolgrowers is in lands which are wholly unfit for agricultural purposes, because of the fact that they are dry and arid, without sufficient water available to make them productive; but which are essential to the woolgrower, because of some small spring, not sufficient for irrigation, and yet abundant for sheep ranges.

In the next place, owing to our remoteness from railroad connection—at least 100 miles to the nearest point—there is no market for agricultural products, except the home market, which is already fully supplied; and even this limited market is made largely by the woolgrowers. A further reason why agriculture can not flourish here is that the climate is such that irrigation is necessary, and the available water supply is entirely inadequate to make this a farming country, though sufficient to make it a good sheep country. For these reasons, a large part of the investment in lands would under free wool, or under such inadequate protection as would forbid our competing with foreign growers, be almost, if not quite, a total loss.

IV. A just comparison will show conclusively that it is impossible for the woolgrower of Montana to compete successfully with his competitors in South Africa, South America, or Australia, under existing conditions. The quality of the ranges, and the rates of wages, freights, and all other expenses are against the Montana grower and in favor of his rivals.

V. Wherefore, being well assured that without the protection of an adequate tariff our chief, almost sole industry, is threatened with extinction; and that if wool is placed upon the free list a majority of the woolgrowers of this county and State will be forced into insolvency or to retire from the business; and believing that wool, which is not a raw material, but is our finished product, is as clearly entitled to an effective degree of protection as is the product of the manufacturer of the East, the sugar-raiser of Louisiana, or the rice raiser of the Carolinas, we beg leave to remonstrate against the injustice of removing that protection, without which this industry would not have been developed in our county and State and without which it can not exist, and pray that you, as our representative in the Senate of the United States, will use every legitimate means of resisting any and every attempt to remove or materially lower the present tariff on wool.

Very respectfully,

STATISTICS OF SHEEP GROWN AND WOOL PRODUCED IN THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. POWER. In support of the proposition that woolgrowing is a national industry in the broadest and most comprehensive sense of the term, I direct attention to the following table, which exhibits the number of sheep and the amount in pounds of wool produced in each State and Territory for 1893. It will be observed that every State and Territory of our broad domain is included in this list, and hence a community of interest exists touching the wool industry that does not appertain to any other industry in the land:

NOTE. The figures for the year 1894 were taken from early reports issued by commercial houses, and in later reports it is estimated the decrease in the number of sheep will be 500,000 additional for the year.

THE AREA WEST OF THE 100TH MERIDIAN AND COMPARISONS.

West of the one hundredth principal meridian there are about 450,000,000 acres of unsurveyed and unappropriated lands, of which about 70,000,000 acres lie within the boundaries of Montana. When it is considered that the total area of the State of Delaware is only 1,356,800 acres, and the total area of the New England States but 43,742,720 acres, we can readily see how great a portion of our country still remains to be settled and developed; hence, instead of hindering and crippling this development, we should so legislate as to foster and protect any system likely to encourage the industries suited to this region.

Great Britain, with a total area of 56,742,508 acres, New England, with a total area of 43,742,720 acres, and New Jersey, with an area of 5,324,800 acres, are very similar in conditions, having a large population with no means of support outside of manufacture and trade. In these localities no need exists for encouraging immigration, but much need exists for the products of other places. In that portion of the country lying west of the one hundredth meridian the conditions are the very opposite. It is a field for unlimited speculation, and has the possibilities of a wonderful future. In that vast expanse of country lies the future of the entire nation. Its progress and advancement mean the progress and advancement of the Eastern and Southern portions of our domain.

Whatever is done for the development and improvement of the great West adds to the wealth and importance of the country at large. The settling and development of the American Colonies added very materially to the prosperity of the mother country. The growth and advancement of the interior made the East prosperous, and the opening up of the great West has been one of the most important factors in the financial prosperity of the whole country, as is particularly shown in the manufacturing interests of the large cities.

The following table exhibits the number of acres in the States lying in and west of the one hundredth meridian (Texas not included), with the estimated number of acres in the arid and semiarid portion of that region:

Washington	44,796,160	20,325,120
Wyoming	62,645,120	62,645,120
Total	973,097,679	795,165,040

As will be seen from the foregoing table, the total area of our domain lying west of the one-hundredth meridian is 973,097,679 acres; that of this number 795,165,040 acres are arid, or over one-third of the entire acreage of the United States (2,291,615,347 acres), including Alaska (369,529,600 acres), or 40 per cent of the total acreage of the United States proper (1,922,085,747 acres). By this it will be observed that more than one-third of the area of this vast country is included under the list of lands that can not be utilized to any great extent, except in developing mines and raising stock, and of these the sheep industry is the greatest factor, and the most conservative, permanent investment.

WHAT WOOLGROWING HAS ACCOMPLISHED FOR THE WEST.

The stock-raising industry, combined with that of mining, makes a home market for all the hay, grain, and other products cultivated in this arid region and adjacent country, which can not be disposed of in any other way because of the distance from our commercial markets. The woolgrower has proved a most valuable adjunct in settling up these vast areas of our public domain, which, except for this purpose, would have little attraction for the pioneer going West to seek permanent settlement. The settler finds these lands well adapted for the purposes of stock-raising, especially woolgrowing, and as this industry appears to furnish a speedier and better way to the settlement of the great West, it would seem that all encouragement should be given these settlers, for it is by no easy methods, but rather by hard and unremitting toil that the woolgrower reaches desirable results.

The following official statement supplied by the Commissioner of the General Land Office shows that from 1884 to 1893, ten years inclusive, the Government has derived a revenue of $80,848,138.22 from receipts of lands sold in the public land States, netting $73,830,564.57. This evidences the progress of settlement in the woolgrowing regions of the West, and the direct revenue to the Treasury to which this industry has so largely contributed:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., June 1, 1894.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of 28th ultimo, requesting the receipts by years for the last ten years, public land sales.

In reply I herewith inclose statement showing—
I. Total amount received from sale of public lands;
II. Total amount received from fees and commissions:
III. Total receipts from all sources;
IV. Total expenses of land offices;

THE DIFFICULTIES ATTENDING WOOLGROWING AND THE PROGRESS MADE IN THE INDUSTRY UNDER REASONABLE PROTECTION.

Even at its best, with the fullest measure of protection, this industry furnishes no bonanza. The sheep-raiser has a rigorous climate with which to contend, and his flock must be housed and cared for in a manner unknown to the woolgrower in warmer latitudes. Science has given him no helping hand, and if he succeed, it is only after close and unwearying attention, and at the sacrifice of many comforts and much that makes life desirable. Notwithstanding all these difficulties, the woolgrowers of this country have succeeded in producing about one-fifth of the clothing wool of the world, and by pursuit of this industry have settled and redeemed nine-tenths of the land now under cultivation in the Western country.

In addition to the millions of dollars invested by our own people, the facilities offered for the prosecution of this industry have attracted to our shores many foreigners bringing their capital and individual enterprise. Our broad unoccupied lands, in contrast with their limited areas, offered a very inviting field for investment, and the progress made in this industry, and its development in the past few years through reasonable protection, rendered this country a much more desirable field than either Australia or the Argentine Republic.

At the rate of increase exhibited during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1892, and the year 1893, our product of wool would double in less than nine years. The increase in 1893 over 1892 was over 31,000,000 pounds, bringing our last year's product up to 364,000,000 pounds. Add to this actual increase in product the development of our lands, the employment given directly to our people, and the market afforded the farmer for his hay and grain, and we must conclude that this industry is one of paramount importance, in which every citizen who desires the prosperity and advancement of his country should be both directly and indirectly interested.

With just and proper protection by tariff duties, woolgrowing, ranking third in the list of the world's industries, would very soon take the leading place, and be amply able to furnish our woolen manufacturers with all the material necessary to supply the demand for woolen goods used in this country. Supplying this demand means giving employment to a large number of people, both in the factories of the East and on the plains of the West and, in time, avoiding the necessity of importing yearly $40,000,000 worth of woolen goods, which, if wool were protected, could and would be manufactured by our own people.

THE PAUPER WAGES OF THE WORKING CLASSES IN ENGLAND.

In this connection I contend that the interests of the woolgrower and those of the woolen manufacturer are so closely allied that legislation in the interest of one should include the interest of the other. Without an equitable duty on manufactured goods our manufacturers are brought into competition with the cheap-labor product of other countries, which would result either in the closing of our factories or the reduction of wages of the American artisan to the pauper rate of European workmen.

I send to the desk, and request to have read, an extract from an article from the New York Press of May 3, 1894, showing the wages of the workingman in England.

The Secretary read as follows:

WHAT THEY EARN.

In the woolen goods mills a weaver earns on the average of 9*s.* 6*d.* ($2.37) per week; if a weaver takes charge of two looms at once he, or she, can earn 11*s.* 9*d.* weekly ($2.90). And that is the limit of possible wages when mills are running full time.

In the evidence before the Labor Commission lately it was given as a fact that in the confectionery trade wages go from 5*s.* ($1.25) to 9*s.* ($2.25) weekly, and 12*s.* ($3) is the highest amount paid an expert worker.

Match-box makers earn 3*s.* ($1.50) to 8*s.* ($2) per week, and find their own paste for the boxes.

In the wholesale clothing trade, one woman, by working from 8 a. m. to 6.30 p. m. (an hour off for dinner) in the factory, and then taking home bundles of work to finish and working until midnight, made an average of 15 or 16 shillings a week. Out of it she supported her parents, and at the end of the week she had, when all was paid for, twopence left for personal enjoyment.

For making shirt fronts a halfpenny (1 cent) is paid, and by working steadily ten hours a day a woman can make twelve fronts, thus earning sixpence (12 cents) for her day's labor.

Added to these miserly wages paid in factories and mills, there is a constant system of fines that robs the worker of a goodly portion of the earnings. If a man or girl arrives at the mill late a fine is inflicted, and if there chances to be no work for the individual that day, and he or she sits idly by for the entire ten hours, the fine is deducted from the next day's work, or the next work done, whenever it may be.

A woman recently complained to the labor commission that she had earned 2*s.* 2*d.* (54 cents) making vests, and when the work was completed she had been fined 1*s.* 1*d.* for alleged poor work, receiving thus only 1*s.* 1*d.* for her work. Her employer had refused to tell her wherein the work was defective and had sold the vests at full price as undamaged. The employer replied to this that of course he sold the goods as being perfect, all manufacturers did, and the commission sustained him.

At the recent investigations into such matters it was shown that as much as 12*s.* had been deducted in fines out of a 13*s.* income.

HOW THE RICH REGARD THE POOR

Coming as a consistent addenda to the indifference shown and expressed by the London employer and capitalist concerning the comfort of his working people, so far as the wages he pays are concerned, is the expression of a representative member of the Royal Institute of British Architects, who, in discussing the question as to whether or not the overcrowded tenements and slums shall be opened more and better air thus insured to the occupants, opposes the suggested improvement, arguing that "every poor life saved furnishes so much food for disease," and for this reason he sees no argument why they should not be killed off as rapidly as possible. He deplores the slight improvements that have been made, on the ground that they have saved worthless lives, and he concludes his remarks with this peroration, as reported in the official journal of the institute.

AMERICAN CONSUMPTION OF WOOL.

Mr. POWER. The total consumption of raw wool in this country for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1893, was about 650,000,000 pounds; of this amount 286,433,837 pounds were imported, 43,311,365 pounds being in raw wool, chiefly merino, and about 114,000,000 pounds in imported goods (cloth valued at $38,000,000, estimating three pounds of wool for $1 worth of cloth goods, equaling 114,000,000 pounds); in long wools of class 2, about 6,736,200 pounds, and of class 3, which includes carpet and coarse clothing wool, 122,286,072 pounds. Our domestic product aggregated 364,156,666 pounds, making an estimated total consumption of 650,490,303 pounds.

With proper protective duties at the rate of increase during the last three years up to and including 1892 (18½ per cent for the three years), it would take comparatively but a short time to supply all the wool necessary for our manufactures.

THE IMMENSE SHRINKAGE IN VALUE OF SHEEP AND WOOL THROUGH FEAR OF ADVERSE LEGISLATION.

Through fear of adverse legislation the flocks of the country have decreased in number from 47,273,550 in 1893 to about 44,000,000 in 1894. The report of the Department of Agriculture shows, from January, 1893, to January, 1894, a decline in value of sheep of $37,000,000, while the actual loss in the present market value is more than twice $37,000,000. Before the election of Mr. Cleveland to the Presidency 44,000,000 sheep were worth $120,000,000; they now would not sell for over $55,000,000. The wool product of 1892 aggregated about 300,000,000 pounds, and sold at an average of 18 cents per pound, while the clip of 1893 did not bring over 9 cents per pound.

This year, with wool on the free list, it will not average much more than 7 cents per pound. Add to this loss the decline in value of the property and plant devoted to this business, and we may well be appalled at the result of even the prospect of the proposed legislation which, if carried out, will certainly tend to the total annihilation of this industry in the newer portions of the country. Nonprotected wool would bring our product into competition with that of South America, Australia, and Cape of Good Hope, where plentiful pasturage and cheap labor make the cost of wool-producing fully one-half less than ours, when transportation by rail and water is considered.

STATISTICS OF THE WORLD'S PRODUCTION OF WOOL.

The world's production of wool for 1891 is estimated at 2,456,773,600 pounds, of which only 307,100,000 pounds was grown in the United States. The following table shows the world's estimated production for the years 1887 and 1891, both by continents and countries. From this grand total of 2,456,773,600 pounds we find that England, through her numerous colonies and other possessions, produces and controls 910,156,000 pounds of wool, which gives her over 40 per cent of the supply of the world.

WOOL PRODUCTION OF ENGLAND AND BRITISH POSSESSIONS.

One of England's possessions, Australia, contains about the same area as that of the United States, with a population in 1892 of 3,980,312. England gives the land to those people at a nominal rent, which is less than the taxes paid by the landowner in this country. The climate in the greater part of that country is superior to ours, and the nature of the soil very much like that west of the one hundredth meridian in the United States. In India, Natal, and Cape of Good Hope the conditions are equally favorably to sheep-raising and woolgrowing. The Australian product alone in 1891 amounted to 550,000,000 pounds, and that of India and Cape of Good Hope 200,681,600 pounds.

The following table exhibits the wool production of the United Kingdom and the British Possessions:

ENGLAND'S EXPORTS OF RAW AND MANUFACTURED WOOL.

During the year 1893 England exported 362,000,000 pounds of wool in the unmanufactured state, and of the manufactured products to the value of $110,000,000. The United States is the largest single purchaser of these goods, importing in 1893 of class 1, about 43,311,565 pounds; of class 2, about 6,736,201 pounds, and of class 3, about 123,000,000 pounds. About $70,000,009 in gold are annually sent abroad in payment for these goods—seventy millions taken from us to enrich the manufacturers and wool raisers of foreign countries.

With the product of her colonies to manufacture and dispose of, England necessarily finds it advantageous to encourage free trade, particularly since, while making a market for these colonial products, she reaps the benefit from the manufactures. The wool is sent to England, manufactured into goods, and then returned to the colonies, England thus securing the profits on the goods manufactured. One gains an intelligent idea of the extent and importance of England's possessions and the vast resources at her command from the description given by the very able lecturer, Mr Stoddard, in one of his recent addresses. He says:

> Not to mention the great continent of Australia and the vast stretch of Canada from sea to sea, think of her line of fortresses around the world; think of her strongholds greeting one as he circumnavigates the globe. Thus, we leave Japan and in four days we find the flag of England flying at Hongkong; a few days more and we behold the Union Jack at Singapore; then at Penang; then at Ceylon; then through the length and breadth of the colossal empire of India, as well as the gigantic area of Burmah. Embark again. If we sail southward toward the Cape of Good Hope we find the entire southern point of Africa in England's hands, or go northward, what do we find? The British citadel of Aden. A few days more and we arrive at Egypt and the Suez Canal, both virtually now in England's hands. Then, like the three stars in Orion's belt, across the Mediterranean, come Cyprus, Malta, and Gibraltar; a mighty line of strongholds all the way.

THE AREA OF GREAT BRITAIN AND POSSESSIONS, AND ITS EFFECT UPON THE WOOL INDUSTRY.

I here insert a table giving the area of the United Kingdom and her possessions, together with population:

Table giving the area and population of the United Kingdom and the British Empire.

Country.	Area in square miles.	Population, 1891.
United Kingdom, British Isles	120,973	38,122,285
British North America, Canada, etc	3,498,383	5,030,613
India and possessions in Asia	995,570	225,292,205
India and native states	593,313	66,050,500
Australasia	3,161,855	3,850,361
Cape of Good Hope and possessions in Africa	297,547	3,876,918
West India Islands, Bermuda, and British Honduras	18,467	1,403,962
British Guiana, Gibraltar, and Malta	109,121	455,275
Total	8,798,229	344,082,119

The estimated area of the land surface of the globe is 53,000,000 square miles. The figures in the foregoing table give the total area of the British possessions as 8,798,229 square miles, or about one-sixth of the entire area of the land surface of the world.

It is not surprising that with this great extent of country, much of it devoted to woolgrowing, England finds herself independent of foreign supply, and while furnishing a market for the productions of her own possessions, she builds up her trade, brings to her market the material necessary to supply her factories, and gives employment to her army of workingmen at home.

The foreign supply cuts so small a figure no necessity exists for legislation against its importation, and there is no possibility of other countries sending her cheaper wool. France, England, Switzerland, Holland, and Belgium, although producing less than one-fifteenth of the merino wool of the world, manufacture more than half of the world's product, evidently appreciating the importance of giving employment to their own people. The combined territory of these countries does not equal the united areas of Texas and Montana. Naturally they desire free wool, the purpose of England being to encourage and dispose of the product of her possessions, fearing no competition from outside markets, nor from France, Holland, Switzerland, and Belgium, because with their limited areas they find it impossible to increase their product, which is totally inadequate to the demand for home consumption.

THE UNITED STATES CAN GROW ALL THE WOOL NECESSARY FOR HOME CONSUMPTION

With us, every year of prosperity increases our wealth and production. Our lands are broad, our climate good, and with needed protection we would be, in a few years, independent of foreign markets. It would be well did every pound of wool imported, or any other article not sufficiently produced for home demand, cost the buyer a good round price, thus giving an impetus to home production, and forcing the man who desires foreign goods to pay for his preference. This country has the capacity for producing the quantity of wool necessary for home demand, as well as machinery and facility for manufacturing all the clothing necessary for our people. Under the protective system this is assured to us, and assured in the near future—judging from the progress made in the industry under this policy.

Why should we change this for a policy which experience has proved is utterly destructive of these prospects, and render useless the advantages which our country and people make possible for us—a policy apparently framed wholly in the interests of foreign products and foreign labor? Have we no unemployed in this country? Are not millions of our people clamoring for work? Have we not the skill and the enterprise to build up our own industries? Why should we desire the so-called advantages of foreign markets? We have the facilities to make us entirely independent of them. We have only to stretch out our hands to our own land, accept the goods provided for us in such abundance and which she so freely offers. With proper provision for the care and encouragement of our own resources we can be made entirely self-sustaining.

WOOL IS ONE OF THE MOST ESSENTIAL MUNITIONS OF WAR.

As a nation, growing, advancing, and second to none in point of intelligence and enterprise, we should be able to take care of ourselves, and feel that, at least for the necessaries of life, we can depend with absolute reliance upon ourselves. With no product is this independence of foreign markets more necessary than with wool. Aside from the leading place it occupies in the ordinary comforts of life, the time may come when it will be still more important as a munition of war, and as such become absolutely indispensable.

Although we are now at peace with other nations, we must not forget that we should "in time of peace prepare for war." Should we find ourselves involved with some foreign power, would it be an easy matter to increase our home product to meet the unusual demand, or would we be willing to depend, at such a time, on foreign markets? Would it not be wise now to see to it that by no mistaken legislation is the production of this most important munition checked, or that we shall be deprived of this most valuable factor of success?

From the year 1880 to 1890 the increase in sheep in foreign countries far exceeded that of the United States. The reduction of duties in 1883—some 2 cents a pound in this country—checked very seriously the growth of the wool industry with us, but seemed to give an impetus to the foreign production. During this period the increase of sheep in New South Wales was about 58 per cent. After the McKinley act increased the duty 1 cent per pound, showing a disposition to increase protection and foster home industries, new life was given to woolgrowing, and as the benefits began to be felt throughout the whole country the increase was in this country very marked. From 1892 to 1893 our flocks augmented about 10 per cent, while the flocks of New South Wales decreased more than 6 per cent.

REFUTATION OF THE CHARGE THAT THE M'KINLEY BILL CAUSED DECLINE IN WOOLS IN ALL MARKETS OF THE WORLD.

The decline in wools for 1893 (which has erroneously been claimed to have ensued as a result of the provisions of the McKinley bill), in all the markets of the world, was but slight. Reliable statistics show that before the McKinley tariff was threatened with repeal, and even so late as in March, 1893, and indeed for several years previous to that date, the average value in London of American wools, or wools of corresponding texture, was over 40 per cent below the average price in the United States under the McKinley act, and this decline of 40.92 per cent since June 1, 1893, evidences the progress which American wools have made in their fall toward the free-wool level and prices, at this date are scarcely 10 per cent above the free-wool level. This is the first time since 1861 when American wool has failed to average double the price of foreign wool in the outside free-trade markets of the world.

Mr. J. H. Root, of Hartford, Conn., who has given the wool industry his special attention for years, says:

The decline in value in foreign markets during the year 1893 was very slight, and only affected certain kinds. The foreign wool, which competes with the wool grown west of the Mississippi River (which is now the wool-producing portion of the United States), shows really no decline. The statistics of the London wool market—which market regulates the price of wool for the world—(just issued for the year 1893) show that Cape grease wool in February, 1893, was selling in London for 11 cents a pound; in May the same wool advanced to 12 cents, at which price it sold in October, 1893. Sidney grease wool in February, 1893, sold at 15 cents a pound; in May it had advanced to 16 cents, at which price it held and sold in October, 1893. New Zealand grease, X (cross) bred, in February, 1893, sold at 19 cents, advanced to 20 cents in May, and in October, November, and December, 1893, sold at same price.

The above grades of foreign wool compete in grade and character with our domestic, grown west of the Mississippi River. The same statistics quote the best scoured Port Philip (a grade which competes with our very fine Southern Ohio, West Virginia, and Washington County, Pa., fleece), in December, 1892, at 33 cents; in May, 1893, the same wool sold at 36 cents, then gradually declined until October, November, and December, 1893, during which months the same wool sold at 34 cents a pound, 1 cent above the price ruling twelve months previous.

Messrs. Helmuth, Schwartse & Co. (which firm is considered an authority), in their report issued January 9, 1894, reporting the London market of 1893, quote Australian Port Philip average greasy, December 31, 1892, at 15 cents and the same wool, December 31, 1893, at 13 cents. Australian Port Philip average, scoured, on December 31, 1892, was quoted at 31 cents, and December 31, at 31 cents. Sidney average, greasy, was 14 cents both December 31, 1892, and December 31, 1893. Cape wool averaged 15½ cents, on both December 31, 1892 and December 31, 1893, showing that for the twelve months ending January 1, 1894, the opening and closing prices were identical, while in the United States during the same period, the decline was from 30 to 40 per cent.

The decline during this period was very slight in foreign countries, being hardly perceptible, while in this country it could be measured largely by the "free-wool" schedule which the Wilson bill offered the woolgrowers.

Australia, South America, and Cape of Good Hope are the only countries which produce merino wool in such quantity as to seriously compete with the United States. That there has been a depression in wool throughout the world is admitted, but the decline in value of merino wool, as a class, in no market of the world outside of the United States, from April 1, 1893, to October 1, 1893, a period of six months, exceeded 5 per cent, while in the same period in the United States, for merino wool, the decline was from 33 to 40 per cent.

THE PRESENT DEPRESSION IN AMERICAN WOOL VALUES WHOLLY ATTRIBUTABLE TO THE WILSON BILL.

I will add, that since January 1, 1894, the decline to date has been at least 10 per cent more. This great depression, according to the best authority, is felt only in the United States, and is almost entirely the result of the panic caused by the possibility of the Wilson bill, as it first appeared, becoming a law.

It does not appear, however, that this prospect has caused a corresponding depression in the foreign market. On the contrary, statistics show when with free trade our prices and productions decline, foreign markets are unusually buoyant, and that even a low tariff stimulates the foreign production and results in unusually large importations to us. We have an illustration of this in the importation of third-class wools, which has about trebled during the last fiscal year.

This enormous increase in the demand for this class of wools is due largely to the decrease in their production in this country, owing to the mistake in their classification by the McKinley bill, which, as "carpet wools," admitted them on very low duty. This resulted in an immense importation of this wool at prices with which our producers could not compete, and a consequent decrease in production of this wool with us.

The Boston American Wool Reporter (a free-wool journal) of January 15, 1893, says:

The increase of third-class wools imported for a series of years has averaged about 5,000,000 pounds annually, the increase the present year being nearly three times the annual average. This large increase is not attributable to an increased consumption by carpet manufacturers. The wools are being used for clothing purposes, going into men's wear, dress goods, cloaking, etc. The consumption of class 3 wools has become large enough to affect prices of domestic wools, these wools being a greater factor in determining the prices of domestic wools than is generally believed. When the McKinley bill was under discussion the evidence was that only a small fraction of carpet wools was used for clothing purposes, mainly for blankets, and this evidence was undoubtedly correct. Since then fashion and excessive competition in the goods market have made it possible to utilize these wools in the manufacture of clothing.

Much of this wool is grown in China, and with the opening up of the new woolgrowing sections in China, and her increased facilities for exporting, this supply might be said to be almost unlimited.

Of the 122,000,000 pounds of third-class wools imported in 1893 there were 20,000,000 pounds of China wool, direct imports, besides indirect (amount not ascertained), and substantially all used in the manufacture of clothing. The mistake of the McKinley bill was in classifying this wool as carpet wool, and as such admitting it at reduced duty.

The wool purchased from China on a silver basis is paid for by the importer with exchange secured on the price of silver bullion, which is not much over 50 cents on the dollar in gold. This is a double disadvantage to the producer in this country, and offers but little incentive to enter into competition on this basis.

RATES OF DUTY ON WOOL UNDER VARIOUS TARIFF ACTS.

With the view, Mr. President, of supplying information frequently called for in my correspondence, and doubtless by the correspondence of other Senators, I append a statement showing the rates of duty imposed on wool by the various tariff acts of Congress from 1789 to 1890, as follows:

		Carpet wools, valued at 13 cents or under, 32 per cent; valued over 13 cents, 50 per cent ad valorem.

THE COST OF TRANSPORTATION OF WOOL.

I desire to repeat what I stated in the Senate on May 3d last in colloquy with the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER], on the question of the rates of transportation of wool raised in the Western section.

The transportation of wool has not been explained fully. The rate by rail on scoured wool is three times first-class. Merino wool, in which we are interested, is 70 per cent grease and dirt. Consequently it takes 3½ pounds of that kind of wool as you take it from the sheep to make 1 pound of scoured wool. The freight on scoured wool from Arizona, New Mexico, Idaho or Montana would be about 9 cents a pound, while by steamer the regulations as to classification do not apply, particularly where rates are demoralized and freight scarce.

You can ship scoured wool from the seaports of Australia, the Argentine, or the Cape of Good Hope for three-fourths of 1 cent per pound, a difference of 50 per cent on the wool in the grease. I mention, for the serious consideration of the Senate, the fact that there is a difference of 9 cents a pound between scoured wool produced in the far-off Western States and that from the colonies controlled by England.

The rates from the western portion of our country referred to in the letter which the Senator has read are undoubtedly from Cheyenne or somewhere close to what is known in railroad parlance as the Missouri River line, a common point. The rate on grease wool from Montana, Idaho, and Oregon to Boston runs from $1.90 to $2.40 a hundred pounds.

I am interested in this matter sufficiently to know. From the eastern portion of Montana the rate is $1.90 a hundred pounds, and from the eastern portion of Idaho and Oregon it is about $2.20, and in the west of those States it runs about $2.40 a hundred pounds. Then when you get over on the Pacific coast the rate, I am advised, decreases to about 1 cent a pound, but there is no wool grown on the coast which you can ship; it is the product of the interior. You have to ship by rail to the seaboard, and that will cost you, perhaps, from 75 cents to $1.50 a hundred pounds. Water competition makes the rate from the Pacific coast to New York from 25 to 37 cents a hundred pounds, and to London from 37 to 50 cents a hundred pounds.

I will further state that the rate from Melbourne given by the authority the Senator from New Hampshire has quoted is certainly on scoured wool, because on wool in the grease the rate is only about 50 cents to London. It certainly must be scoured wool, which would cost us 9 cents per pound from the West and Southwestern States.

IS THE AMERICAN WOOL INDUSTRY TO BE ASSASSINATED AND DELIVERED INTO FOREIGN CONTROL?

Mr. President, I very much fear, although I hope to the contrary, that no reasonings however well based, no theories however amply supported, are likely to find favor with those who are so intent on sacrificing some of the best interests of the country to this theory of free trade. It would seem as if the edict had gone forth and the death of one of the leading industries of this country had been decreed, but I shall not believe it until the final vote on the passage of the pending bill, because it would prove a costly experiment, if experiment it be, and recoil terribly upon the political party which justifies and ordains the slaughter.

That if accomplished it will shortly be repudiated and denounced by the rank and file of the Democratic party itself is to my mind a foregone conclusion, since every citizen of the country engaged in the sheepgrowing industry, whether to considerable or inconsiderable degree, North, South, East, and West, must suffer irreparable pecuniary loss through opening our markets to free foreign wool.

This conclusion is justified and rendered more certain by the undeniable fact that it is by no means an easy task to recuperate and reëstablish the wool industry after it shall have suffered either partial or entire destruction. It takes time and money to reproduce flocks; and who is to come forward and reinvest capital in an industry which must be first rescued from captivity by foreign nations before it can again be Americanized?

You propose now to manacle and shackle the sheep-growing, wool-producing industry of the country, with all its varied interests, and deliver it into foreign hands, regardless of the losses and injuries entailed upon our own people. American wool is to be made the outcast and pariah of American industries, the great sacrifice offered to propitiate the demands of the free trade Moloch.

A PROTEST AGAINST SUCH A CONSUMMATION.

Fully realizing that no words of mine, nor cautions and protestations from out the mouths of the many wiser and more eloquent of my colleagues, can or will stay the ruthless hand of the preordained free-trade assassination of the wool industry, I can only, in the name of the State I have the honor to represent and her citizens, interpose my solemn protest, and appeal to the American people for that vindication and retribution which follow, surely as night follows day, the commission of crimes against the welfare and happiness of the Republic!

APPENDIXES.

VARIOUS STATISTICS OF THE SHEEP-GROWING AND WOOL PRODUCING INDUSTRY.

As I have cited figures in the course of my remarks on various items affecting the wool industry, I deem it proper to verify the same by appending statistical tables obtained from sources deemed and accepted as authentic.

I. World's wool product—Department of Agriculture.
II. Number of sheep in the world.
III. Population and number pounds of wool produced in principal wool-growing countries.
IV. Number of pounds of wool in United States, Argentine Republic, and Continents of Europe, Asia, Africa, and Australasia.
V. Price of domestic wool in Boston wool market, year ending June 30, 1893.
VI. Imports of wool and manufactures of wool, 1891, 1892, 1893, 1894.

a (Russia.) These are the figures given by Dr. Franz von Juraschek, on page 468, of Uebersichten der Weltwirthschaft, for 1885–1889. His estimate is based on an assumed average yield of 6 Russian pounds of wool per head of sheep, the number of these animals in 1888 having been 48,220,119, without including those in Asiatic Russia. The allowance of 6 Russian pounds, or approximately 5,417 pounds avoirdupois per capita, seems a rather large estimate.

b (Great Britain and Ireland.) Estimate of the Bradford Observer reproduced in the Wool Book for 1892, page 64.

c (France.) According to the Bulletin of the Ministry of Agriculture for November, 1893 (twelfth year, No. 6), the quantity of wool produced was 486,357 quintals, of which the figures in the table are the equivalent. The number of animals shorn is stated in the same place at 16,591,647, on which the average yield of wool is 2.93 kilograms, or 6.46 pounds per capita. It is probable, however, that the total wool clip, as stated in the table, includes a considerable quantity of pulled wool, in which case the average weight per fleece will be less.

d (German Empire.) The number of sheep on December 1, 1892, according to preliminary figures published in the Statistisches Jahrbuch für das Deutsche Reich for 1893 was 13,775,063, on which number the round number estimate of 55,100,000 pounds is a very small fraction less than 4 pounds per capita. The estimate of Dr. Von Juraschek for 1883 was 25,590,000 kilograms, or 56,415,714 pounds, which was less than 3 pounds per capita on the sheep then in the empire; whereas Mulhall, estimating for 1887, put the total product of the empire at 105,000,000 pounds. The number of sheep has diminished by nearly five and one-half millions within the last ten years.

e (Italy.) The official figures for 1891, as found on page 389 of the Annuario Statistico Italiano for 1892 make the quantity of wool produced in that year 9,622,851 kilograms, or, as stated in the table, 21,214,537 pounds, and the value 18,366,975 lire, or $3,533,246.

f (Austria.) According to the animal census of December 31, 1890, there were in Austria at that time 8,186,787 sheep, against 3,841,340 in 1880. The yield of wool in 1881 was officially reported in part 2 of the Statistisches Jahrbuch des K. K. Ackerbau, Ministeriums for 1881, at 49,452 metric centners (or quintals), and assuming the yield in 1891 to have been proportionally the same, the quantity of wool obtained from the reduced number of sheep would be 41,025.53 metric centners, or, as estimated in the table, 9,044,488 pounds.

g (Portugal.) On the basis of 2,977,454 sheep, the number in the kingdom in 1892, and an average of 1¾ kilograms of wool per capita; the number of sheep is found in the Statesman's Year Book for 1889, and the yield of wool per capita is that assumed by Dr. F. X. von Neumann-Spallart and his successor, Dr. von Juraschek, in Uebersichten den Weltwirthschaft for 1885–1889. The estimate appears to be rather high, but is retained for want of a basis for a different one.

h (Australia.) The net export of the Australasian colonies for 1890 was 493,105,556 pounds, or 12,607,331 pounds less than the total product as stated in the table. The figures there given are from page 304 of the Victorian Year Book for 1892, a work prepared by Henry Heylin Hayter, government statist of the colony of Victoria. The net export was 520,481,863 pounds in 1889 and 642,637,738 in 1891; and if we suppose the net export in these years to have fallen short of the total production by about the same amount as in 1890, we shall have as the total production about 533,000,000 pounds in 1889 and 655,000,000 pounds in 1891. The woolen mills of Victoria and New Zealand, according to the latest official handbooks for these colonies, in 1891 and 1892 used the quantities named below:

	1891.	1892.
	Pounds.	Pounds.
Victoria	1,780,859	2,474,441
New Zealand	2,918,073	3,388,954
The two colonies	4,698,932	5,863,395

The figures for New Zealand are given as representing the quantities purchased. No statistics are at hand as to the quantities consumed in other Australasian colonies.

i (United States.) Official figures.

j (Argentine.) This is the quantity of wool exported. The exports for 1891 amounted to 305,570,431 pounds. The quantity manufactured in the Republic must be insignificant, and the figures on production were not available, could not greatly exceed the figures on exportation. The figures on exportation here given are from the official report on commerce and navigation for 1892.

k (Uruguay.) This is the quantity exported as wool of domestic origin during the year. No imports of unmanfactured wool are recorded for 1892 in the Anuario Estadistico de la Republica Oriental del Uruguay, from which document the quantity exported (stated in kilograms) is obtained. The number of sheep in Uruguay in 1892, as declared for the purposes of taxation, is stated at 11,912,760, on which number the exports for the year would be an average of about 5.7 pounds per capita. It is stated, however, on official authority that there are many thousands of inhabitants who do not pay any tax on the animals owned by them, this statement being found on page 27 of a pamphlet prepared for the World's Columbian Exposition by Carlos María de and Pena Honore Roustan, director of the general statistical office. In this pamphlet the total number of sheep is estimated at 23,000,000, the estimate being apparently made for 1891. On this basis the yield per capita would be much less than 5.7 pounds, as in fact it probably is.

l (Cape Colony.) Net export as stated in the Statistical Abstract of the colonial and other possessions of the United Kingdom, page 41, thirtieth number. The net export for 1890 is stated in the same place at 65,655,917 pounds, and that for 1891 at 75,520,701 pounds.

m (British India.) This is the net export during the Indian fiscal year, extending from April 1, 1892, to March 31, 1893, inclusive. It is, of course, much less than the total product, but the latter is difficult to estimate with any approach to exactness. The number of sheep and goats in British India, exclusive of Bengal and the Central provinces, in 1891–1892 is stated in No. 27 of the Statistical Abstract for British India (page 157) at 28,975,156, to which Bengal and the Central provinces would probably add a few millions more.

The numbers of sheep and goats respectively, are, however, not separately stated. D. V. von Juraschek, in his Uebersichten der Weltwirthschaft, while giving in his table the quantity exported, gives in a footnote an estimate of the total wool product, based on the number of sheep and goats together, placing it at from 30,000,000 to 40,000,000 kilograms. The lower of these estimates, which is probably above rather than below the mark, is equivalent to 66,138,000 pounds.

n (Natal.) This is the net export of sheep's wool, as stated in the Statistical Abstract of the colonial and other possessions of the United Kingdom, thirtieth number. The number of sheep in the colony in 1891 is stated in the same document at 959,246, on which the net export of wool in 1892 would amount to an average of over 2½ pounds per capita. It is evident from this that the wool shipped from the ports of Natal must have included a large quantity produced on adjoining territory.

o. (Asiatic Turkey.) The exports from Turkey, including Turkey in Europe, to the United Kingdom, alone amounted in 1890 to 17,458,697 pounds of sheep or lamb's wool and 4,120,222 pounds of goat's wool or hair; in 1891 it amounted to 17,805,113 of the former and 6,496,115 of the latter; in 1892 it amounted to 22,774,764 of the former and 7,774,541 of the latter.

p. (British North America.) The number of sheep in Canada in 1891 is stated in the Statistical Year-Book of Canada for 1892 at 2,513,977, on which the round-number estimate of 10,000,000 pounds of wool is a fraction less than 4 pounds per capita. The exports of home-grown wool from the Dominion during the fiscal year June 30, 1892, amounted to 916,330 pounds.

q. (Other extra-European countries.) According to an estimate of the English firm of Jacoms Sons & Co. It includes the wools of Peru, Chile, Brazil, Egypt, Tunis, Algiers, and other countries.

*Estimates of Dr. Franz von Juraschek, in his Uebersichten der Weltwirthschaft.

APPENDIX III.

Table giving the population and the number of pounds of wool produced in the principal woolgrowing countries of the world from 1800 to 1890.

The production of wool throughout the world for the first fifty years of the present century was 32,360,981,950 pounds, and the yearly average for the first fifty years 647,217,639 pounds.

The following shows the world's production of wool, in pounds, from 1801 to 1890, inclusive, together with the increase in population, Boston prices, and the decrease or increase in sheep in different sections of the United States:

APPENDIX VI.

Imports of wool and manufactures of wool for fiscal years ending June 30, 1891, 1892, 1893, 1894, under the McKinley law, together with amount of duties collected on same.

[Compiled by Theodore Justice, of Justice, Bateman & Co., Philadelphia.]

1894*	22,500,000	21,900,000	97.37
	137,000,000	‡127,400,000

* The figures for 1894 are all estimates based on the reported imports for first nine months of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1894.

† This $24,800,000 duties collected on wool are, by the pending bill, to be given away at a time when the Government needs revenue.

‡ This $127,400,000 duties collected on woolen manufactured goods, which are almost exclusively luxuries used by the wealthy classes, are by the pending bill to be reduced two-thirds, thus making a present to the wealthy classes of over $80,000,000. This loss of revenue of over $100,000,000 heretofore collected under the McKinley law on wool and woolens is to be replaced by a tax on sugar, a necessary of life, the per capita consumption of which is as great by the poor as the wealthy.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEFFER].

Mr. PEFFER. I desire to be heard a few moments on the amendment.

Mr. CHANDLER. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Allen,	Dolph,	Kyle,	Quay,
Allison,	Dubois,	Lindsay,	Ransom,
Berry,	Faulkner,	Martin,	Sherman,
Blanchard,	Frye,	Mills,	Shoup,
Brice,	Gallinger,	Mitchell, Wis.	Squire,

Cockrell,	Harris,	Peffer,	Vilas,
Coke,	Hawley,	Perkins,	Voorhees,
Cullom,	Hoar,	Platt,	Walsh,
Daniel,	Hunton,	Power,	White.
Dixon,	Jarvis,	Pugh,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-five Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The Senator from Kansas will proceed.

Mr. PEFFER. Mr. President, when one speaks about discriminations in our tariff legislation against farmers and in favor of manufacturers, he is very apt to be charged with demagogy; as if he were speaking for mere buncombe; as if there were no real foundation to the charge which he makes. I want to direct the attention of the Senate to that particular point by way of introduction to some other practical matters which I wish to present.

In the first place, Mr. President, the price at which the farmer sells his surplus produce is the price which obtains in what we call the market of the world. Take cotton and wheat, for example. The cotton that is forwarded from Texas or from any other Southern State is forwarded to a market at the other side of the Atlantic Ocean. The price obtained for it there is something larger than the price for which the farmer sells it, but all of the added price is transportation, handling, labor of different kinds bestowed upon the article after it leaves the hands of the farmer. So with wheat. Take wheat from the farm in Kansas; as it proceeds on its way to Liverpool or London it increases at every stopping place in its market value, but the farmer receives no benefit from that increase in value. I will make an illustration of it in a moment, so that the mind will readily grasp it from contrast.

On the other hand, the manufacturer in this country receives the benefit of whatever is derived from protective duties in his favor. He has the benefit of whatever is added to a free-trade price of the article by reason of tariff legislation, and whatever is added to the price of the manufactured article by reason of this legislation is that much more than the free-trade cost of the article. So what is gained in the price of the manufactured article inures to the benefit of the manufacturer, while in the case of the farmer what is added to the price of the article does not inure to him; it is simply paid out for transportation and in the cost of handling, warehousing, etc.

In order to make it more plain, I have put it in this form: Wheat from a farm in Kansas sells at 65 cents a bushel, we will say, which is much higher than the price now. We will take 100 bushels, making $65 worth. By the time it reaches New York $25 have been added to its value, because it costs Kansas farmers about 25 cents a bushel to land their wheat in New York City. When the wheat reaches New York it is worth 90 cents. But that does not help the farmer out any. It proceeds on its journey to London. Ten dollars more are added to the price of the wheat, making an even hundred dollars at London. The Kansas farmer received $65. The person who purchases the wheat in London pays $100 for it.

The difference between $65 and $100 is $35 that the wheat has gained in value on its journey from the farm in Kansas to the warehouse in London; but not a penny of value has been added to the farmer's price.

Now, we will reverse the process. We will purchase $65 worth of sugar in London and bring it back to the United States. Sixty-five dollars' worth of sugar by the time it reaches New York under the duties proposed in this bill would have added to it 40 per cent, which would make it amount to $91 by the time it leaves the custom-house in New York City.

I have not undertaken to compute what it will cost to dray the sugar from the Government warehouses to the warehouse of the wholesale merchant, but I consider 10 per cent on the price in the New York Custom House will pay the transportation to the town where I live in Kansas. That would give us $100.10 on this $65 worth of sugar when it leaves New York City; 10 per cent profit added to it by the Topeka merchant would make it cost the farmer of Kansas $110.1. Sixty-five dollars' worth of sugar in London will cost the Kansas farmer $110, a difference of $45, and nearly all of that added cost comes from the tax that we place upon it in the way of a protective duty.

Compare that with the other proposition. Sixty-five dollars' worth of wheat leaving the Kansas farm, by the time it reaches London is worth $100, but that added cost yields the farmer nothing. The price in London is nothing to him; it is simply the transportation, the handling charges added to the cost of the wheat to the farmer; in other words, the farm price of the wheat follows it wherever it goes so far as he is concerned, but it is not so with the article purchased in London which the farmer has to use. Senators can see from this comparison the great difference there is in the effect of our tariff legislation upon the farmers and upon the manufacturers.

That being true, when we call attention to this discrimination and ask for some sort of legerdemain, if I may use that term properly, by which the farmer can in some way have this discrimination against him offset, we ought not to be charged with demagogy; we ought not to be charged with talking for buncombe, for we are speaking plain, practical, common sense, sober truths; much learning has not made us mad; but we are talking the words of soberness, and of truth, Mr. President.

Another item. The manufacturer, when he uses in his work an article of foreign product and then exports his manufactured article, receives a drawback amounting to 99 per cent of the duty which was paid upon the foreign article. If a manufacturer in Boston or in New York uses foreign material of some kind, upon which $100 duty was paid, when he places this foreign product in his own manufacture and exports it, he receives back $99 of the duty, leaving only $1, or 1 per cent of the duty which was paid originally. The manufacturer gets the benefit of that, but the farmer does not. The farmer pays the manufacturer's price. If the price of a unit of this particular article is $1 when it leaves the shop, although the manufacturer has a rebate of 99 per cent on the duty, the farmer pays $1 with the added cost of transportation.

View this subject in any light you please, the discrimination is constantly staring us in the face, and this applies to a great many articles. It applies not only to wool, of which we export such a trifling amount that it is not worth talking about, but it applies to wheat, it applies to corn, it applies to oats, it applies to cattle, it applies to dressed carcasses of meat, although the farmer does not sell that; it applies to everything which the farmer exports by reason of having a surplus over and above that which supplies the home market, and as to every article exported from the farm, as cotton or wheat, the price in the foreign market governs the price of the entire product here.

Mr. President, the farmer is trying to solve the problem of how to set off this discrimination against him in the matter of transportation. I have recently seen a very interesting plan suggested by a constituent of my amiable friend from California [Mr. PERKINS], whom I do not see present. He suggests that the Government pay the charges of transportation from American ports to the world's market on all farm products which are exported. It is a novel idea to many, and, of course, would not meet with favor in a Democratic Congress; and yet there is a vein of good, practical sense in the idea.

Take, for example, this 100 bushels of wheat of which I spoke. The transportation costs us $35. If the Government should undertake to protect the farmer's wheat just as it protects the manufacturer's cloth by a duty on foreign goods, by paying this $35 directly out of the public Treasury in such a way and guarded by such regulations as that the farmer would get the benefit of it, it would, as you see, immediately increase the value of the surplus to the amount of the transportation, and the farmer would get it. The effect on the farmer would be to raise the price of the wheat exported just what the transportation from port to port cost. Ten dollars saved on a shipment of 100 bushels would be equivalent to raising the price of the wheat 10 cents a bushel.

The weak point in my correspondent's plan is this: He believes that the price of all the wheat which is sold in the home market would be raised to the farmer just as much as this surplus sent abroad. He would discover, however, that that is error. The effect of the price of what is sold in the home market would not be anything.

I mention these pointers to Senators for the purpose of calling attention to the fact, and emphasizing it, that the farmers are trying to solve the problem of this discrimination against them.

Now I come to the item of wool—that is what we are talking about here—and it is proposed by this bill to remove the duties which are now imposed upon raw wool, but not to remove the duties from manufactures of wool. If Senators will examine the schedule, they will find that in the present law, in nearly every paragraph, where duties are laid on manufactures of wool, they are based upon the duties levied on raw or unmanufactured wool.

That is the case with cloth, clothing, and with dress goods where they are heavy. To illustrate what I mean, on page 33 of the little pamphlet entitled "Tariff rates; the tariff act of 1890 compared with the tariff act of 1883 and the Mills bill," I find paragraph 391, which provides that:

> On woolen and worsted yarns made wholly or in part of wool, worsted, the hair of the camel, goat, alpaca, or other animals, valued at not more than 30 cents per pound, the duty per pound shall be two and one-half times the duty imposed by this act on a pound of unwashed wool of the first class, and in addition thereto 35 per cent ad valorem.

Now, in most of the paragraphs following the same basis of computation is made. First, the amount of duty that is levied upon unmanufactured wool, a certain number of pounds is taken care of in the manufactured cloth. After that, 35 per cent ad valorem is levied. If Senators will examine the schedules in the bill before us they will find that there is no provision for the raw wool, but the 35 per cent on manufactured wool is left; 40 per cent is left; 45 per cent is left, and 50 per cent is left. There are only two cases in the present law, if I remember correctly, where the duty on manufactured cloth of any kind exceeds 60 per cent; but in most of them it is from 35 to 50 per cent, and on a few of the very low grades it is 15 per cent. In every case, however, there is an allowance made for the duty upon unmanufactured wool.

Now, I insist in the presence of the Democratic majority that that is unfair. I do not know what other words to use. Dishonest is not the proper word, because Senators do not mean to be dishonest. But it is unfair. That word can be used without being offensive and yet express the idea I have in mind. That idea is that the Democratic party is pledged to revise the tariff in a spirit of fairness. Those are the words of their platform. I know that platforms do not amount to much nowadays; but this is one of the principles of the party. This is a pledge which they made to the people of the United States; and every farmer in the land had a right to expect that this great party, to which the American people intrusted power, would perform their pledges, at least so far as this particular matter is concerned.

The farmers did not understand at the time of the election in 1892 that the money power was behind the tariff. They understood that the money power was operating in a good many other directions, but they had not at that time learned that it was the disposition of the money power to keep the tariff fight before the people in order that while we were quarreling they might run away with the spoils. The people did not imagine that. They believed and they had a right to believe that the Democratic party was earnest when it incorporated in its platform in 1888 a message of the President of the United States in which he proclaimed openly, boldly, manfully, and honestly, as I believe, that the revision of the tariff would be done in a spirit of fairness to all industries.

That being true, here is a great industry—the growing of wool. How great it is I will show in a short time. It is an industry involving millions, and even hundreds of millions of dollars in permanent investments of property of different kinds. There are 45,000,000 sheep, which ought to be worth an average of $2.50 a head. That would be $117,000,000. It is an industry requiring the culture of large tracts of land to produce hay, to produce corn, to produce oats, and to produce wheat in order that the bran may be used; and it requires many other articles necessary to take care of the flocks and the herds. It requires, besides, a large number of men and women who are engaged in caring for the animals. It requires from two to three years to mature a sheep.

It has required a long period of time to develop our sheep breeds to where they are now, and to develop the grade of wool we have now. From 1860 up to 1890 the grade of our wool improved at least 100 per cent. The weight of the fleece increased 250 per cent. So, whereas in 1860 our clips amounted to about 2 pounds on the average or 2½ pounds, in 1888 they amounted to 6 pounds or 7 pounds, and the quality of the wool constantly improved. It has required the outlay of hundreds of millions, I might say thousands of millions of dollars to develop the sheep industry of the United States to its present high standard.

I have before me a letter from a Missouri woolgrower, with whom doubtless the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] is well acquainted. I do not see the Senator present. This gentleman has been in the business of raising sheep and wool for many years, and he has developed the quality of his stock so that he sells the males as far away from the United States as New Zealand and in Australia. His sheep have been spread into the Northwestern States, and wherever in the United States the best quality of Merino sheep are used these Missouri rams are sent. It is a great business; one which involves talent, labor, and a large investment of permanent capital.

There is as much money invested in the sheep industry and in the wool industry as there is in the industry of manufacturing wools. There are more men and women dependent upon it. Perhaps that is putting it a little too strong, but I will say that there are as many men and women engaged in the industry. But the farmer has still one advantage over the manufacturer—he has the great, wide, wide world near him, and if he is thrifty, as a woolgrower invariably is, he is able to take care of himself with or without tariff legislation.

But, Mr. President, if the passage of this wool schedule would affect the wool industry of the country as all woolgrowers say it would, as common sense teaches us it would, and as our present observation and experience show that it would, it is an outrage to pass such a measure when there is no necessity for it.

But, say the Democratic majority, "it is a part of our creed to give the people free wool." That I know is true. It is a part of your creed to give them free coal, but you are not going to do it. It is a part of your creed to give them free iron ore, and you are not going to do it.

Mr. President, you may go along through this bill and you will find the footprints of a power stronger than the Democratic party. That power has shapened this bill, and the only thing left to the solid, conscientious, old-fashioned free-wool Democrat is this item of free wool.

I submit this proposition to the gentlemen who are in charge of the bill. I have shown that you are taking off the duty on raw wool and leaving it on manufactured wool. There may be a few instances where the duties have been somewhat decreased below this point, but speaking in a general way it has been the object to take out all the duties there were laid upon raw wool and leave the manufactured wool protected.

This is the proposition I submit to those gentlemen: Compromise with us as you have done with one another. Take part of the duty off of wool, take a part of the duty off of the manufactures of wool, and you will have no difficulty in compromising with the woolgrowers. The only difficulty will be with the manufacturers, if there is any there, and I have no doubt there will be, because I have found that my manufacturing neighbors insist upon the last straw even though it does break the camel's back. If anybody has to go it is the farmer who must go, because he is willing to vote the ticket straight and bear the burden. But we have now come to the conclusion that the roads fork, and we may possibly be blind enough to take the other road.

Now, we do not want to be unreasonable, nor do we want to be threatening, but we insist that if a duty is placed upon woolen manufactures there ought to be a duty placed upon raw wool, and that we are just as much entitled to it.

Mr. HOAR (in his seat.) Amen.

Mr. PEFFER. The Senator from Massachusetts approves the suggestion by an amen; and the heart of the people will respond, and the Democrats will respond—all except the manufacturers, who have doubtless controlled the inditing of these schedules.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. PEFFER. I am always delighted to yield to that Senator.

Mr. GALLINGER. I wish to ask the Senator, who is always fair in his discussions, what evidence he has that the manufacturers are opposing the interests of the farmer by asking for free wool. I know that in our part of the country where the manufactures of wool are a very important industry, the manufacturers, as a class, are in favor of retaining the duty on wool. I know in my State of but one manufacturer who has ever advocated the contrary, and I understand from reliable authority that he has changed his opinion and is now in favor of retaining a duty on wool.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will pardon me, I desire to reenforce the statement of my friend from New Hampshire. I live in a woolen manufacturing region, and represent the largest woolen manufacturing interest in the country I suppose. I have been in this and the other House since 1869, twenty-six years, through the making of several tariffs, and I have had occasion to know all about the history of some of the tariffs that preceded. I do not know a woolen manufacturer who is in favor of free wool, except one or two who have the shabby and indefensible notion that they can set fire to this barrel of gunpowder and put it out when half burned up, and who think that they may possibly get the American people to submit to an arrangement which would give them protection on what they manufacture, and free trade on what they buy; and those men have in every instance signalized their coming to that conclusion by going over to the Democratic party.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. PEFFER. Certainly.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator will remember that two or three weeks ago I read a letter from Mr. John T. Busiel, of Laconia, N. H., in which he made a very strong and forcible argument in favor of a duty on wool, and he brought out the fact that it is absolutely necessary to have some duty on wool in order to compensate for the increased cost of getting wool by rail from the mountain States to the factories of the country in competition with the water-borne wool from Australia. I have other letters from him on this subject, and also a magazine article which I intend to introduce into the debate. This manufacturer, who is a student of the subject, is most earnest in behalf of applying the principle of protection to the farmer who raises wool, as well as to the manufacturer who uses it for the purpose of making textile fabrics.

Mr. HOAR. If I may add one sentence without trespassing on the great patience of my honorable friend from Kansas, I will state that the free traders of New England, the Democrats, make their attack on this schedule of the protective tariff. One of their number quoted last year in a meeting of the tariff reform clubs, Byron's lines—

> While stands the Coliseum, Rome shall stand;
> When falls the Coliseum, Rome shall fall.

He went on to say that as long as the protection on wool stood, the protective tariff in this country would stand, and that when the protection upon wool fell the whole system would fall. That is the opinion of the persons who are opposing a duty on wool in New England.

Mr. PEFFER. I am satisfied that the manufacturers are coming to see very plainly that a contest that will be destructive is growing out of the tendency to remove duties from wool while retaining them upon manufactures of wool.

Mr. HOAR. May I ask the Senator one question before he proceeds? Why does he use the phrase "coming to see?" They have seen it for thirty years.

Mr. PEFFER. I meant it.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator allow me further to quote the exact language of the statement to which the Senator from Massachusetts has alluded. Will the Senator from Massachusetts kindly listen to the statement? I desire to read the exact language of Hon. John E. Russell at the New England Tariff Reform dinner, which I happen to have in my hand:

> Let us get all that we can. If we can get only free wool we will have knocked the keystone from the arch of protection.

Mr. HOAR. That is from the last Democratic candidate for governor of Massachusetts.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator from Kansas very well knows that that is the voice of the Democratic politician and is not the voice of the manufacturers of woolen goods. The whole scheme from the time it was made prominent by President Cleveland in 1887 down to this hour of taking the duty off of wool and making wool free is a mere scheme to get the votes of the farmers to destroy the whole protective system; and nobody understands that better, I think, than the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. PEFFER. Last winter a year ago some friend forwarded to my address regularly a copy of a weekly periodical known as American Industries, a paper whose relations to the Democratic party are the same as those of the American Economist to the Republican party, and I observed that in every issue there were interviews with manufacturers. I do not now remember whether the politics of the gentlemen interviewed were given, though I think they were; but there was a general agreement among them that in the revision of the tariff which was expected there should be an average duty of at least 50 per cent on woolen goods.

I do not recall a single instance where any of those manufacturers urged a duty upon wool. I think at that time manufacturers generally expected that they would have free wool. I remember quite distinctly that a large number of them spoke about being able to compete with foreign manufacturers if they had free raw materials, but they all argued that it would require a long time by gradual process to get down to what would be a reasonable revenue tariff. They ought to begin with at least 50 per cent, and then might go down as low as 25, some of them thought, but most of them stopped at 40.

My information is that the manufacturers of New England and of the country quite generally, whenever they discuss the subject of free wool, are apt to consider that it would be of great benefit to them, and that duties might be considerably reduced if wool were given to them free. While they have not argued in favor of free wool they have not, until quite recently, said so much against it as to produce any effect upon the public mind.

Mr. PLATT. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. PEFFER. Certainly.

Mr. PLATT. I think the truth about the matter is that since free wool has been talked about there have been a very few manufacturers in New England of the Democratic persuasion who have been in favor of free wool, but a very, very few indeed; and with that exception the manufacturers of New England have not desired free wool, but have been constant and open in their opposition to free wool.

Mr. HOAR. May I be allowed one additional remark?

Mr. QUAY. Mr. President——

Mr. PEFFER. I am very glad to see these gentlemen assisting me.

Mr. HOAR. Yes, I want to assist the Senator. In the first place, as I said, I have represented for eighteen years in the Senate, and for eight years in the other House, a wool manufacturing constituency, and there never has come to me or to my knowledge any suggestion from that constituency (except, as I said, a few selfish persons who went over to the Democratic party when they did it) that they have undertaken to go for free wool. The woolen manufacturers' Bulletin is one of the ablest practical economical journals in this country. I think my honorable friend from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], who certainly has no woolen manufacturing interests to represent but who has been on the committee all the time, will testify to the great ability of that journal on this class of subjects. He must have seen it. It was edited by Mr. John L. Hayes, secretary of the New England Woolen Manufacturing Association, and it is supported by that association contributing in proportion, I believe, to the number of spindles in the several factories of the members of the association.

The ablest and most powerful articles ever published in this country or elsewhere in regard to the development of the wool-growing industries of this country have appeared in that journal and were the work of that man, Mr. John L. Hayes.

Mr. PEFFER. I know very well who he is.

Mr. HOAR. He died about six years ago. Mr. Hayes would have gone almost for a prohibitory duty on wool, and you can not find stated anywhere the argument for a protective duty on wool with a power, with a fullness, with a learning, with a practical and scientific knowledge of the subject, as it is stated there. I do not mean to apply it now to my honorable friend from Kansas, for he is a man of very great wisdom and sense—and I think he is the only Senator who listened to my speech this morning (laughter)—but I wish to repel with great indignation, as a subject that I know something about, the idea that there ever has been among the American and New England manufacturers any considerable willingness to separate their interests from the woolgrowers. Is not that true, I ask the Senator from Maine?

Mr. FRYE. Oh, beyond any question.

Mr. HOAR. They are as absolutely true and loyal to the interests of the woolgrower as the chairman of the Wool Manufacturers' Association. My friend from Iowa knows whether I am telling the truth or not. He has been in this and the other House during all these contests for twenty-five years, and he knows whether there has been from any Republican wool manufacturer any hesitation on this subject.

Mr. ALLISON. As the Senator from Massachusetts has alluded to me, I will state that I have been familiar with this subject certainly for a great many years, and during all that period I think the universal opinion of the manufacturers of woolen goods has been that they were benefited rather than injured by the full encouragement of woolgrowing in this country.

Mr. HOAR. By a protective duty.

Mr. ALLISON. They have been in favor of a protective duty. I have no recollection now of any period when that was not true.

Mr. PEFFER. I suppose Senators remember where the prosecuting attorney in a case had introduced one witness to prove that he had seen the defendant steal a pig, and the defendant said he could produce twenty-five witnesses who would swear that they had not seen him do it. There are doubtless a good many manufacturers in New England and in New York and in Pennsylvania who have taken part with the farmers in this wool contest.

But, Mr. President, the Democratic party, being a free-wool party, has been frequently in control of the State so ably represented by my friend on my left, the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT]; the State of Massachusetts has been several times under Democratic control; the State of New York is a very doubtful State; Pennsylvania still holds solidly Republican; New Jersey is Democratic most of the time. So it is with Delaware. Those manufacturing States have a very large sprinkling of Democracy.

I am inclined to think that at least one-half of the manufacturers of New England are Democrats, and with a large majority of the Democratic manufacturers being in favor of free wool because they can produce goods cheaper, and a very large proportion of the Republican manufacturers saying nothing but sawing wood, believing that if free wool would come it would benefit them just as well as it would their Democratic neighbors. The point I was making is that the manufacturers are coming to see as they never saw before that there is a necessity for affirmative action.

Last summer in this Chamber we had a memorable contest, one that will never be forgotten in American history, when the manufacturers of the East, without respect to party, united with the gold gamblers of New York, without respect to party, with the great bankers of the great cities, without respect to party. They united their votes solidly, obliterating party lines, and undertook to thrash into harness the recalcitrant members. Those men were united then against the West and the South, not because it was the West and the South, but they joined in a matter of local interest to themselves, and seemed to care nothing about the rest of the country.

Now comes another contest, when it becomes evident that in order to maintain party alignment, if there be no higher motive—and I believe a higher motive does inspire many—but, in order to maintain party alignment, concessions are to be made; upon the part of Republicans concessions to the woolgrowers, and upon the part of the Democrats concessions to the manufacturers. There is the difference.

Mr. President, these matters are brought up before the Senate not for the purpose of creating discord, nor for the purpose of saying unkind words, nor for the purpose of saying anything with an unkind spirit, but simply to present to the Senate a few plain facts. Our people will rebel against that doctrine if it is continued. It may just as well be understood now as at any other time.

Mr. PLATT. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. PEFFER. Certainly. "In the multitude of counsellors there is safety."

Mr. PLATT. I regret that the Senator from Kansas should have fallen into what I suppose at the West is a somewhat popular supposition, that there is a spirit of antagonism on the part of the East toward the West, and the further error that we in the East have been acting upon a selfish theory in our ideas of protection.

From the day when I first began to advocate the doctrine of protection I have disclaimed any selfish, sectional feeling or motive with regard to that great principle. It has been many years since I have advocated protection, as well for the West and the South as for the East, because I believed it to be for the benefit of the whole country, and I have never failed, in discussing anywhere this subject of wool and woolen protection, to advocate the doctrine of protection for wool just as earnestly as I advocated the doctrine of protection for woolen manufactures. I make no distinction between industries in this country. Protection is for the benefit and the industrial growth and development and prosperity of this country.

I do not wish to interject a speech into the speech of the Senator from Kansas, but I hope before this discussion ends to elaborate more fully what I have stated. I wish to say now that I believe in my own State if this doctrine of protection could be submitted to a vote, independent of politics, five-sixths of the voters of Connecticut would vote for protection and for the protection of wool just as much as for the protection of woolen manufactures.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask the Senator from Connecticut before he sits down what was the attitude of the two Democratic Senators who came here a few years ago from Connecticut, in regard to the matter of protection to wool? I know very well myself, but I should like to have the Senator state for the information of others.

Mr. PLATT. They were in favor of protection to wool.

Mr. FRYE. I think, if the Senator will investigate, he will find that the State of Indiana to-day is running more sets of cards in the woolen industry than Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, and Connecticut combined.

Mr. PEFFER. And her Senators upon this floor are advocating free wool.

Mr. FRYE. Yes.

Mr. PLATT. That is incomprehensible.

Mr. PEFFER. I understand, Mr. President, the good nature and the good breeding and the good fellowship of all mankind. We are all made up more of good than we are of bad. While we are moved by selfish purposes, yet in many instances selfishness is one of the most ennobling attributes of the human character. The man and the woman who want to distinguish themselves in some great undertaking for the benefit of their fellowmen and fellow-women are moved by selfish impulses; they want to do this work; they want to have a hand in it; they want to direct it; they want to be personally known in it; and it is one of the most ennobling ambitions that human nature is heir to. Then, from that on down to the miser there are a thousand grades of selfishness more or less to be approved or to be dispised, according to their character.

The New England people are no more selfish than persons in other parts of the country, not any more selfish than we are; the manufacturer not any more selfish than the woolgrower—not a particle. If they were, I would probably not be here advocating the latter's cause.

But, Mr. President, the effect of the combined action of the people of the Eastern States and the old Middle States upon the interests of the people of the South and the West, is what we are complaining of. So when we speak of selfishness, we do not speak of those people as individuals, but we speak of the aggregate effect of what they do.

But when it comes to a great question of currency, in which the people of the South are intensely interested, so much so that the farmers in their secret meetings undertook to solve the problem and finally published the plan known as "the subtreasury plan," in order that they might get rid of the middleman and get rid of the extortions of the banker, and the warehouseman, and the merchant, here were three classes of citizens who were fattening upon the substance of the farmers; and in order to relieve themselves they formed what is known in political literature as "the subtreasury plan."

The people of the South are trying to get rid of the 10 per cent tax upon State banks for the purpose, and the only purpose, of having more currency circulated among them than they now have. They know the difficulties in the way; but what they want is local currency that they can use in the transaction of their business without being compelled to subject themselves to the whims and caprices, and power, and influence of the Eastern bankers. They want money which they can use in their own neighborhood, which they can borrow and for the repayment of which they can give as security that which their neighbors, which their bankers, will understand to be good, so that they will not have to mortgage their farms in order to borrow money on them at 8 and 10 per cent interest.

Our Eastern neighbors are united upon this matter of protection, so they say, and substantially that is true. They are also united upon the monetary question; and the people of the West are interested in both of these. If the manufacturers of the East and of the Middle States will unite with the farmers affirmatively to solve the problem with which I began my speech this evening, we shall be protected as they are protected now, and we can even up on this matter of transportation.

If they will suggest to me a better method than the one suggested by my California neighbor, or if they will unite with me—I do not know whether they will or not unite with me in a proposition to equalize cost of transportation, so that we may transport wheat, and cotton, and cloth, and clothing, and sugar, and coffee upon the same principle that we transport letters and newspapers, a pound or a ton, no matter what the distance may be, at a fixed rate, so that the farmer or the merchant—I see my friend smiles—may take his ton of wheat, or ton of corn, or ton of cotton to the railway station, and transport them 100 miles or 1,000 miles for the same sum of money; so that the merchant in New England, New York, or Pennsylvania may transport his cotton manufactures or his woolen manufactures, or whatever it may be, to the West, and distribute them there at the same price for a thousand miles that he would pay for a hundred miles, and in this way equalize the cost of our transportation, and in that way equalize the profits of our protective policy—if Senators will unite with me in working out a problem of that kind, we can all be protectionists, we can all be consistent protectionists, and I say in this presence I should be glad if we could adopt a national system of protection which would serve us all alike, and be so liberal in its operation as not to prevent the importation of any goods that ought to be imported, and not to interfere with the rights of people in other parts of the world. But here we find ourselves admitting labor of all kinds without any restriction. We place a duty upon foreign manufactured articles, but we do not put any duty upon foreign laborers who come here and work for one-half or one-fourth of what our people work for.

Mr. PLATT. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him at that point?

Mr. PEFFER. Yes.

Mr. PLATT. Will the Senator say how he would further restrict the importation of labor than it is now restricted? We have a law which prohibits the making of contracts with persons in a foreign country to be performed by service in this country—the alien contract-labor law. We have a law which prevents any criminals, paupers, or diseased persons from coming to our shores; and there are further restrictions which I can not now name. I presume that the Senator would not adopt an immigration law which said that no Irishman, no German, no Frenchman, no Scandanavian should come to this country. What would he propose further than our laws now provide in the way of restriction?

Mr. PEFFER. The Senator's question implies that we are without remedy, and to a very large extent that is true, and it adds force to the argument which I am now presenting.

Assuming, for the time being, that the Senator does believe that we are at the end of our road and that we have gone as far as we can safely go, the result is that as many men and women, being laborers, as wish to come to this country and go to work here, may come, and with that influx of laboring population, does not the Senator see that it is absolutely impossible to maintain wages and keep all the people at work?

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, I do not propose to admit the assumption that I think we are at the end of the law with regard to this matter of immigration. I was inquiring of the Senator if he could suggest some further restriction, because I do not yield to him in my desire to check undesirable immigration into this country. I do not believe it practicable to shut out all the people of every country coming to this country. I should be very glad to have the Senator point out some way in which we may more effectually sift our immigration so as to get only the desirable immigrants and keep the undesirable away from our country.

Mr. PEFFER. I am one of those who believe that the earth, the whole earth, was made for the use of the human family; I believe that every child born into the world has a right to live in the world, and he has a right to as much of the earth's surface as will sustain his life. Following that, I believe that every man and every woman has a right to go at will up and down and across this earth wherever he or she pleases to go, with the exception always that he shall not disturb the peace and the possessions of his neighbor. I believe further that nations, like families, are entitled to exercise certain rights and powers which all other nations and all other families ought to respect.

I go so far as to say that, in case there should be other families or other nations that do not respect these rights, they ought to be compelled to do so by force, if need be.

In my family I have a right to choose who my associates shall be, who my guests shall be, but, Mr. President, I have no right to interfere with the passage along the public highway of those persons who may be distasteful to me.

The first bill which I introduced in the Senate, on the 10th day of December, 1891, was a bill to amend our immigration and naturalization laws, so as to restrict the immigration to this country to such classes of people as we desire here, or rather to prohibit from coming here such classes as we do not desire. The classes whom we have a right not to admit are only such as by reason of differences in our grades of civilization would render our commingling together unprofitable, unpleasant, disagreeable, and finally destructive to both parties concerned.

By way of carrying out that idea I propose that our consuls and our representatives in different parts of the world shall be clothed with power to issue certificates of qualification for citizenship in this country, and that with copies of our laws before them they shall not admit to the right of certificate any person who does not come within the provision of the law. I propose that the consul shall give them a duplicate certificate to a person who comes within the provision of our law, and that copy be retained in his office, so that when the immigrant comes to New York or New Orleans, or wherever he proposes to land, the certificate shall authorize him to land upon our shores, and the duplicate is handed to the officer.

In addition to that I propose to require the oath before the consul abroad to be the immigrant's first paper of naturalization in this country, so that he need not after that swear that he has absolved all allegiance to princes, potentates and powers, etc., and that he will support and defend the Constitution of the United States. Then I propose that he shall be followed by the eye of the law wherever he goes up and down in the United States, and that he shall neither vote nor hold office until he has been here five years. Then let him take out his second paper, just the same as he takes it out now, and from that time forward he will be a full-fledged citizen of the United States.

This is merely suggestive by way of answer to the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] as to how we can keep out undesirable people.

Mr. PLATT. Will the Senator from Kansas allow me to interrupt him once more?

Mr. PEFFER. With pleasure.

Mr. PLATT. I do not think the Senator and I disagree very much, but the difficulty is in securing the plan and putting it in operation. I think the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] also introduced a bill providing for consular certificates. I have thought that probably that would be an improvement upon our law.

But I am told by those who are familiar with the subject that if we should leave the matter of selecting our immigrants to consular officers such as we have in the different ports from which immigrants sail, there is very much doubt whether we would not get more undesirable immigrants under such a system than we now get by inspection at our own ports. I myself confess that I am not satisfied upon that subject, and my idea has been in favor of consular inspection abroad. But when I have, as I have in my desk now, consular certificates and consular invoices which have been left in blank for shipping agents to fill up, with the name of the consul and the consular seal upon them, which are sold for $2.50 in the market for export purposes, I begin to doubt whether we should get any better result in our immigration system if we were to submit the matter to the inspection of our consuls.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator from Kansas permit me a few words?

Mr. PEFFER. Certainly.

Mr. CHANDLER. I take occasion to say that there have been probably twenty-five or thirty bills introduced in Congress within the last four years proposing the restriction of immigration through consular certificates. The subject which is opened up by this feature of the debate would require extensive discussion. I only wish now to say that the bill which was introduced by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEFFER], who served for a short time as a member of the Committee on Immigration, although he is not now a member of the committee, was a very carefully prepared bill, and one which, if it could be adopted into law, or if the main features of it could be adopted into law, would do a great deal to check the tide of undesirable immigration.

I understand the Senator from Kansas to be in favor of checking immigration into this country. I have so understood him, and I trust I do not misstate his position when I term him a protectionist, that he is in favor of using the taxing power of the Government to exclude foreign products made by cheap labor, and is also in favor of using the police power of the Government to keep undesirable immigrants out of the country.

Mr. President, I think the tariff question and that of immigration are cognate subjects, although they are not exactly the same, and I have at times thought that in consequence of the suggestions of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] on the other side of the Chamber, and the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEFFER], there ought perhaps to be a few days given during the consideration of the pending bill to the discussion of the immigration question. I myself have not as yet brought the subject within the debate, but if the Senator from Kansas thinks the subject ought to be fully discussed in connection with the pending bill perhaps it would be well to bring on such a discussion.

Mr. PEFFER. Mr. President, this little digression emphasizes the difficulties in the way of changing our immigration and naturalization laws. There is a great deal of objection to it, as I discovered early. Every time such a proposition is broached in this Chamber, if anything is said about it at all, the same difficulties appear. I have given attention to the situation. I have given due weight to this difficulty. In answer to the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] I said that I believe every man and every woman is entitled to as much of the earth's surface as is sufficient to keep him living. I do not believe that the earth or any part of it belongs to any one person in his own sole right, except only just enough to maintain him. I do not believe that when one nation takes land from another by force there is either right or justice in it. I do not believe that a nation has any right morally or legally to forcibly take any portion of the earth's surface from other people who have it. The natural rights of men and women are paramount to the legal right or the conquests of war.

Starting out with that fundamental proposition of the equal rights of men, for me to defend here or elsewhere an indiscriminate prohibition against foreigners coming to the United States, when generations back all of my ancestry were foreigners, when all the inhabitants of the United States are descendants of foreigners, and many of them foreigners now, would be an inconsistency as well as a very disagreeable performance upon my part.

Now, in view of all the facts I have stated, what are we to do? There was war yesterday or the day before in twelve States of the American Union—actual flagrant war. It all arises out of the fact that we have more working people in this country than we are able to employ.

That tells the whole story. As to the situation in the mineral regions, the men who have brought on these troubles are men who were striking for better wages or against a reduction of wages. Then, in order to protect themselves in their contests with their employers, they said to the cheaper laborers, "You shall not go into the mines and take our places. Go away, and we will settle the dispute and secure fair wages."

Then there was conflict. I heard it said one day, and eloquently spoken from the very place where I now stand, that every man who wants to work in this country not only has a right to work, but that that right ought to be enforced by the whole power of the Government, if need be. To what will that lead us? The men who are out because their wages are not sufficient, say to other men, "You shall not interfere between us and our employers." The men who are proposing to interfere are coming in to work for lower wages. Now, if the power of the Government is to be brought to bear to protect the men who come in to take lower wages, what are you going to do with the men on the outside? How are you going to keep the wages up, Mr. President? You can not do it in that way.

I do not here defend the men who are on the outside quarreling with the men who are going in. I am not willing to do that in the Senate; but if I were one of those men I believe I should do so, just as they have done. It is self-protection, and that is what we are talking about—protection of wages. Here are a thousand men being turned out of mines, being turned out of shops, because they are not willing to work for the wages which are offered. They say those wages are not sufficient, and they ought to know. Then the employer says, "Here are cheaper men; let them come in."

The arm of the Government is used to protect these men. I ask again what are you going to do with the other men? Will you send them to prison and keep them there? Will you tax the people to board them, to clothe them, and to feed them, and keep them in idleness? Had we not better, Mr. President, adopt some other method? Then you ask, What are you going to do about it? That is what we are trying to solve here. We will not do it by increasing duties upon woolen goods in order that we may give well-paid labor to a few of our people, and that the rest may go out upon the highways as tramps. Such men are dangerous men, Mr. President. There are at this hour 250,000 men with arms in their hands in a dozen States in this country, ready at the drop of the hat to use those arms.

The traveling bands are the most peaceful men in the world; not a pistol or a rifle or any other kind of firearms was found in a whole train load of men who passed through Kansas a week or two ago, and yet every one of those men is ready to fight at a moment's notice. I tell you that when men are starving they are dangerous men. A man who has a spark of manhood left in him with a wife or child or more beside him, is not going to stand up in the face of plenty and see the little ones starve; and I should not advise him to do it. Alone he is powerless, but when he meets his companions—five, ten, a hundred, or a thousand—

Iron sharpeneth iron, so a man sharpeneth the countenance of his friend.

They constitute an army without banners, and they are dangerous. It is better for us as men, as statesmen, to look after these things, and now while we are discussing this subject is a fit time to consider them. Hence, when I stand in the American Senate and say that these things are driving me towards free trade, I say speak the truth. I do not see any other way to solve this problem, unless we can restrict immigration so as not to open our doors to the whole world. And if we can not restrict immigration, wages will have to be equalized. I do not like the prospect.

Last summer I said to my Eastern neighbors that I represent in part a great agricultural region, one of the most beautiful portions of the earth that the sun shines upon, containing a noble race of men, inheriting the best blood of Christendom, sober, industrious, enterprising, great, big men. We are near, very near the free-trade door. Our wheat and our corn go to a free-trade market, and you can not help us. If we could not afford to sell to you our wheat as cheaply as you can get it in Liverpool, you would buy it there. You do not buy anything from us unless we can sell it to you cheaper than you can get it from any other place. Not in a spirit of unkindness, not in a spirit of malice, but as neighbors and brethren we say to you that we want these things equalized in some way, and if you can not help us do not ask us to help you. There is nothing unmanly about that. It is fair.

So I say in this wool matter, if you want a duty upon manufactured goods, give the farmer a duty upon wool. If Senators on the other side who are doing me the honor to listen insist that they will give cheaper goods by taking the duty off wool, apply the same doctrine to manufactures and we shall have still cheaper goods. If you say you want the duty for revenue, then divide it; give us some duty on wool and take some of the duties off of the manufactured goods. Take the duty you are now proposing to place upon manufactured goods and divide with the farmer. If it is 50 per cent, divide it; put 30 per cent upon manufactured goods and 20 per cent on wool, and we will be satisfied.

But I say to Senators in all frankness that if you put the entire duty upon manufactured goods and leave nothing on the farmer's wool, you will have trouble in your own ranks. You can not defend it before the people who sent you here. I can not defend such a policy before my people. If the farmer is to have free wool, give him free cloth. Speaking for the woolgrowers of Kansas, and I am satisfied that I may include the the entire number of woolgrowers in the country, they are willing to divide with you upon equitable terms. If the party now controlling the affairs of Government think that an average duty of 50 per cent on manufactures of wool is fair, if that is enough, strike an average; let the manufacturer have the lion's share, as he always gets it; let him have 30 per cent, and give us 20 per cent. Then we can go back to our people satisfied that the Democratic majority have tried to treat the woolgrowing interest fairly.

Mr. President, I had a good deal more to say, but the day is far spent and I will stop with a very few more words. I have here a sample of wool in its finest form [exhibiting]. I wish to present it to the Senate for the purpose of showing to them that this is not something which grows upon trees; it is not something that is drifted about by the wind; it is not something that comes up in a night like a mushroom; it is not a raw material, but a finished product. It is an article that has been produced by hard labor and intelligent effort during a long period of years. We have the finest wool product in the world, ready to be transformed into cloth. Here is a great industry making this necessary product. I ask the Senators from the South, who ought to be able to control their great party, to treat the industry of which this is a product, according to their pledges to the people, fairly. That is all we ask, Mr. President.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I venture to express the hope that we shall make better progress with the bill to-morrow than to-day.

Mr. PLATT. We all hope so.

Mr. HARRIS. I am glad that we do all hope so, and I hope we shall all concur in the effort. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 4 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, June 13, 1894, at 10 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, June 12, 1894.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. B. BAGBY.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read, corrected, and approved.

LAWS OF UTAH.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication from the secretary of the Territory of Utah, transmitting two copies of the laws passed by the Legislative Assembly of Utah at its thirty-first session.

The SPEAKER. These volumes have been deposited in the Library for the use of the House.

LAND GRANT, STATE UNIVERSITY, MISSISSIPPI.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5778) to supply a deficiency in the grant of public lands to the State of Mississippi for the use of the State University.

Mr. KYLE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The amendment will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Before the word "land," in the forty-ninth line, insert the words "unoccupied and uninhabited," so as to read: "Out of the unoccupied and uninhabited lands of the United States."

The amendment was concurred in.

WETMORE & BRO., ST. LOUIS, MO.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 210) for the relief of Wetmore & Bro., of St. Louis, Mo.

Mr. COBB of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read subject to the right of objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to pay to Wetmore & Bro., of St. Louis, Mo., the sum of $220, being the amount in part of fees due to them as attorneys in colored bounty cases, retained and covered into the Treasury.

Mr. SAYERS. I wish to ask if this bill, or a similar bill, has been reported by the House committee?

Mr. COBB of Missouri. I will state to the gentleman that this bill has passed the Senate several different times, and was twice unanimously reported by the House committee. It has not been reported by the committee of the present House, but was in the last Congress. The amount being very small, I was in hopes no objection would be raised to its present consideration, it having passed the House committee and the Senate in former Congresses.

Mr. SAYERS. Well, Mr. Speaker, I would like to have an explanation of this bill.

Mr. COBB of Missouri. I would ask leave to state that this is for the payment of fees due to these attorneys in colored bounty cases, which were retained and covered into the Treasury and withheld without any authority whatever on the part of the Auditor. A bill for the relief of these parties has twice, I think, passed the Senate and has been twice favorably reported in the House. It is money that they are clearly entitled to, and it has been so admitted by the Treasury Department.

Mr. SAYERS. I suggest to the gentleman that he let it lie upon the table until it can be investigated, and call it up hereafter.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Let me ask the gentleman a question. Has the gentleman himself made a personal examination of the claim?

Mr. COBB of Missouri. I have, sir; in the Fifty-second Congress, at which time it was reported unanimously by the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. And after that personal examination the gentleman thinks the bill should pass?

Mr. COBB of Missouri. I do. It is a just and equitable claim, and has been so declared by both the Senate and the House repeatedly.

Mr. COOMBS. What is the amount covered by the bill?

Mr. COBB of Missouri. Two hundred and twenty dollars.

Mr. COOMBS. What is the purpose of the repayment?

Mr. COBB of Missouri. It is for attorneys' fees in colored bounty cases withheld improperly by the Auditor.

Mr. COOMBS. How old is the claim?

Mr. COBB of Missouri. Ten or twelve years, I think.

Mr. SAYERS. I suggest to the gentleman to let it lie on the table for the present, until investigation can be made of the matter. He can call it up to-morrow.

Mr. COBB of Missouri. The amount being so small, I had hoped there would be no objection. But I ask consent that it lie on the table for the present.

There was no objection.

SALARIES OF RAILWAY POSTAL CLERKS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 544) to reclassify and prescribe the salaries of the railway postal clerks.

Mr. BURROWS. I ask unanimous consent that that bill lie on the table for the present.

There was no objection.

HIRAM SOMERVILLE.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 1301) for the relief of the legal representatives of Hiram Somerville; which was referred to the Committee on War Claims.

NATIONAL HOME FOR COLORED PERSONS.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 7095) to provide for the erection of a national home for the aged and infirm colored persons, and for the maintenance of the inmates thereof.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read subject to objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $100,000, out of all moneys, arrears of pay, and bounty which were due the estates of deceased colored soldiers who served in the late war and were in the hands of the commissioner of the Freedman's Bureau and have been repaid into the Treasury, be, and is hereby, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of erecting a national memorial home for aged and infirm colored people, and to aid in maintaining the inmates of the same, the building or buildings for said home to be erected in the District of Columbia, upon lands owned by the association known as the Home for Aged and Infirm Colored Persons, a corporation duly incorporated under and by virtue of the incorporation laws of the District of Columbia: Provided, That no money shall be paid to said association until the deed of said property shall have been approved by the Attorney-General of the United States, and until the association shall have given good and sufficient bond, to be approved by the Attorney-General, conditioned upon the faithful discharge of their duties in the proper expenditure of the abovementioned fund.

SEC. 2. That the plans, specifications, and contracts for the buildings to be erected for said home shall be submitted and subject to the approval of the Secretary of War, and the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay the money hereby appropriated to the association known as the Home for Aged and Infirm Colored Persons, in the manner provided for and upon the fulfillment of the terms of this act.

Mr. COOMBS. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I ask some explanation of this bill.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Speaker, a short explanation of the bill would about comprise what the report embodies, and if there is no objection I ask for the reading of the report.

The SPEAKER. In the absence of objection, the report will be read.

The report (by Mr. OUTHWAITE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7095) to provide for a national home for aged and infirm colored persons, and for the maintenance of the inmates thereof, have had the same under consideration and beg to submit the following report:

The purpose of the bill is to provide for the establishment of a national home for aged and infirm colored people, and a sum of money now lying in the Treasury of the United States which is due the estate of deceased colored soldiers is sought to be used for this purpose. A joint resolution was passed by Congress in 1867 (see Statutes at Large, volume 15, page 26), which provided that all moneys certified to be due colored soldiers should be paid to the commissioners of the Freedman's Bureau.

At that time most of the colored people from the Southern States who would be entitled to this money that had been slaves, had no individual relationship, and where they had, it was impossible to trace it. The law now governing the proper adjudication of these claims requires that the heirs of the deceased colored soldier must prove their lawful marriage relation by record evidence, and that to be certified to by a notary public or clerk of the court in the several States, but as no marriage record was ever kept of the slaves it is impossible that the law can be complied with; so that in a great many instances the proper proof can not be made. The Second Auditor of the Treasury in 1892, in his annual report, makes the following statement:

"When the Bureau (referring to the Freedman's Bureau) was discontinued in 1872 the unexpended balance of said funds was turned over to the Adjutant-General's Department for disbursement, and every effort was made to find the persons entitled thereto. In many instances it was ascertained that the payees were dead, and in all such cases the funds were held for seven years and then repaid into the Treasury on the legal presumption of the death of the payees. The total amount repaid was $504,000. In 1882 it was found that more than one-half of that sum had been claimed, the actual amount remaining unclaimed being $240,233."

Your committee find that while all of the money has been claimed (and in many instances as many as ten persons from as many different States filed claims as the lawful heirs of one deceased soldier) since the date of that report there still remains in the Treasury at least $300,000, which, under existing conditions, can never be paid out on account of the utter insufficiency of the proof furnished to establish the claims. There have been numerous requests made by the colored people generally to apply the sum for the advancement and benefit of their race, but as there was no law in existence whereby this money could be so used no progress was ever made.

In 1893 a number of colored gentlemen in the District of Columbia formed a corporation for the purpose of establishing and maintaining a home for the aged and infirm colored people of the United States, and by private subscription have acquired a tract of land sufficient to erect a suitable home thereon, and have come to Congress for a transfer to them for that purpose of a portion of the fund in the Treasury which justly, equitably, and legally belongs to the colored people. There is no question but that the aged colored people who were once slaves are more subject to destitution and require charitable aid more than any other class of people in the United States, and as it is not the province of this Government to establish charitable institutions, but rather assist those already established in the District, these people suffer for want of an institution of their own.

There are at the present time only ten colored people permitted admittance in the charitable institutions in the District of Columbia on account of a lack of accommodations, and those are provided for in the basement of the Children's Asylum on Eighth street; therefore it is eminently proper that they should receive recognition to such an extent as will enable them to care for the needy and aged of their own race out of the funds which really belong to them, and are withheld in the United States Treasury.

By taking this money for the purpose set out, it is only giving the colored people the benefit and use of the fund that rightfully belongs to them, and which, if not appropriated for their use, or some other, will lie idle in the Treasury of the United States until some disposition is made of it. The fact should clearly be borne in mind that this fund would be paid to the heirs of the deceased colored soldiers if proper proof could be made, but inasmuch as the requirements of the Department can not be complied with, and satisfactory regulations as to identification of the claimants can not be now be made, unless some legislative action is taken whereby the money can be utilized for the benefit of these people it will remain where it is, and the race of people who are entitled to every penny of it will be deprived of what is justly due them. The total number of colored soldies who served during the war was 186,017, distributed among the several States as follows:

Louisiana	24,052
Kentucky	23,703
Tennessee	20,133
Mississippi	17,869
Maryland	8,718
Pennsylvania	8,612
Missouri	8,344
Virginia	5,723
Arkansas	5,526
South Carolina	5,462
Ohio	5,092
North Carolina	5,035
Alabama	4,969
New York	4,125
Massachusetts	3,966
Georgia	3,486
District of Columbia	3,269
Kansas	2,080
Rhode Island	1,837
Illinois	1,811
Connecticut	1,764
Indiana	1,597
Michigan	1,387
New Jersey	1,185
Florida	1,044
Delaware	954
At large	733
Iowa	440
West Virginia	196
Wisconsin	155
New Hampshire	125
Vermont	120
Maine	104
Minnesota	104
Colorado Territory	95
Texas	47
Officers	7,122
Not accounted for	5,083
Total	186,017

Now, the sum proposed to be appropriated in this bill and for this institution and for the benefit of the colored people of the country is less than 60 cents for each colored soldier who served in the Federal cause during the rebellion.

If it were not for the difficulties in the way of individuals making their proof to entitle them to the payment of their just claims against the Government there would not be so many instances among the people requiring assistance.

Therefore, it appears to this committee that there can be no just and reasonable objection to the Treasury of the country contributing in this manner for the object of this bill out of the patriotic earnings of the colored people which must forever remain unpaid to the owners thereof through no fault of theirs.

The committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. COOMBS. I would like to ask first as to the amount of the appropriation contained in the bill?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. One hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. COOMBS. What is the amount of this fund on hand?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Two hundred and forty thousand dollars, as I understand.

Mr. HULL. Two hundred and forty thousand dollars was unclaimed, but the total amount repaid is $504,000.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Yes, that is true; I thank my colleague for the suggestion.

Mr. COOMBS. This does not use the whole of that fund?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Not at all.

Mr. COOMBS. Is it supposed to be for the colored people of all sections of the country?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Yes; all are admitted. It is a national home.

Mr. PICKLER. How is it to be governed?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. By a board of trustees which has been already incorporated, consisting of colored citizens of the District. They have obtained a site by purchase through subscription already made. They expect to continue the present system throughout the country of obtaining subscriptions for the benefit of maintaining the institution.

Mr. HULL. As I understand, this board is composed of representatives from all the colored churches of the District of Columbia. It is under the control of the religious denominations of the colored people of the District of Columbia.

Mr. POWERS. I understand that the bill proposes to give away this money for the purposes of a home for aged and infirm colored people, on the ground that the colored soldiers were unable to prove their legitimacy.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Not the colored soldiers, but those people who are claiming to be heirs of certain colored soldiers.

Mr. POWERS. Now, is it not just as easy to formulate some legislation that will do away with the red-tape regulations which cut off that proof, and to enable the heirs to get this money.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. It is not; because there are conflicting claims. There are in some instances as many as ten claims pending against the same sum. You know that the colored people, who were slaves, in moving about changed their names, and it would be impossible to arrive at any certainty with regard to the proper heirs of many of these persons.

Mr. POWERS. You are proposing to give away the fund that belongs to these heirs.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Not to give it away at all, but to put into use for the benefit of this race that fund which they have been unable individually to draw from the Treasury, owing to the impossibility of establishing their claims.

Mr. POWERS. That fund is in the Treasury, clothed with a sort of trust, in favor of the heirs of colored soldiers.

Mr. BRETZ. Yes; but you can not establish who the heirs are.

Mr. POWERS. Is there any difficulty about framing some regulations by which these heirs may be excused from making technical proof?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. There is great difficulty, because there is no way of establishing who are the heirs in a large number of instances.

Mr. COOMBS. In other words, as long as this fund remains there it can never be of any use to them.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. That is the fact.

Mr. HULL. There are $240,000 of this fund not claimed at all.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. Is this a winding up of the old Freedman's Bureau, established a while after the war?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. It is.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. In connection with funds supposed to be lost?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. No, funds paid back.

Mr. HULL. Pay due to colored soldiers, which has not been claimed.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. There is no way to get it out of the Treasury, excepting by a special enactment of this sort?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. No, sir.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request for unanimous consent?

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I desire to hear the bill read.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. The bill has been read.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I have just sent for a copy of the bill.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I have a copy of the bill, which the gentleman can have.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. (Examining the bill). I just wish to glance at this bill. Mr. Speaker, this thing ought not to be rushed through. If it is right, let us know it; and if it is wrong, let us know it. The light is not going to hurt it.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I am ready to throw all the light upon the subject that I can.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I want to ask the gentleman if it is contemplated here in the District of Columbia, out of the National Treasury, to found a national home for aged colored people, to be supported from the National Treasury?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. It is not expected to support it from the National Treasury; and, answering the gentleman correctly, it is not proposed to establish this home out of the National Treasury, but this is a fund which was paid back from the Freedman's Bureau—unclaimed amounts. It is a portion of that fund, the unclaimed portion of $504,000 which was paid back by the Freedman's Bureau, the amount then remaining unclaimed being $240,233. This is $100,000 of that. Now as to the other proposition, it is distinctly not proposed to support this institution out of the National Treasury. There is an organization of the colored people of the country, which organization expects to support it, and which has proceeded so far as to procure the necessary land for a site. If the gentleman has any doubt about that proposition, I am quite willing to offer, and to have passed, an amendment at the proper place, providing that this institution shall not become a charge upon the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. At any time.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I think that if the bill is to be considered that is an apt amendment, because my experience and observation have been that all institutions, charitable or semi-charitable, national or otherwise, founded in the District, in an exceedingly short space of time come to depend purely upon the Treasury of the United States and of the District.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Then I will offer an amendment at the end of the——

Mr. DINGLEY. If the gentleman from Ohio will pardon me, I understand this fund is the remainder of the Freedman's Bank deposits that have not been claimed under the act of distribution that is now in the Treasury. Of course it has been used in the general expenditures. It is not a distinct sum that is set apart, except as a matter of bookkeeping.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. The gentleman from Maine has a misapprehension as to the origin of this fund. It is not that particular fund that the gentleman refers to, but is a fund made up of the unclaimed amounts due to the heirs of soldiers of the late war for pay, or bounty, or prize money which those heirs are incapable of making satisfactory proof for——

Mr. DINGLEY. Ah! that is a different fund.

Mr. OUTHWAITE (continuing). That is held in the Treasury.

Mr. DINGLEY. It has been expended, except as a matter of bookkeeping.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I suppose the gentleman desires to refer to the condition of the Treasury at this time.

Mr. DINGLEY. That is the case with all these funds. How is it contemplated that this institution will be supported, outside of what may come from this fund. Of course in the future there is to be a large expenditure going on.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I will repeat what I have said twice before—that there is an organization of the colored citizens of the country, which organization is incorporated and has already made subscriptions large enough to buy a considerable tract of land for the establishment of that institution. That corporation expects to support the inmates of that institution by obtaining subscriptions from the colored people of the country.

Mr. DINGLEY. Then it is not to be confined to ex-soldiers, but it is for all dependent and destitute colored people?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. All infirm and aged helpless colored people.

Mr. DINGLEY. And the bill is guarded so that there can be no claim for the maintenance of the institution hereafter?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. With the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Is there any limitation as to the number that shall come from the States?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Not at all.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. My State could fill up any two such institutions. What are you going to do when there are more applicants for admission than you can accommodate?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. It is like all other charitable institutions—when it is full you will have to wait until the number of inmates is reduced.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Have you not made some provision that there shall be so many from each State?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. We did not enter into a scope as wide as that.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I did not feel at liberty to object to the consideration of this bill, but I want to say to the gentleman that, notwithstanding the amendment he places in this bill that the Government shall not be responsible, the Government starts with a direct appropriation of $100,000 out of its Treasury. That is all there is of it.

Mr. BRETZ. It is not a Government fund.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Oh, certainly it is a Government fund; and every dollar, notwithstanding this appropriation, that may be required to be paid by colored people would have to be paid. The Government starts with an appropriation of $100,000 to begin with this building, and I have no doubt, notwithstanding the amendment the gentleman proposes to put in, that next year and the year after, and for a generation, this charity will come to Congress for its exclusive support at the hands and from the coffers of the General Government.

Mr. HAYES. Not exclusive support.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Substantially exclusive; and consequently I want to say to my friend that while I shall not object, as the Government has to foot the bills, I would suggest to him, if we are to authorize this charity, does he think it perhaps better that the Government take charge of it and administer it?

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. SAYERS. Unanimous consent has not been granted.

The SPEAKER. The Chair submitted the request. The Chair understood there was no objection.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I wish to offer an amendment, at the end of the first section of the bill, line 22, by adding this proviso.

Provided, that this home shall not become a charge at any time upon the United States Treasury.

Mr. HULICK. My colleague will notice that in line 11, on the first page, the bill not only appropriates for the erection of a national memorial home for aged colored people, but to aid in the maintenance of that home.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. That is to be done out of this fund.

Mr. HULICK. It states that it is to be done "out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

Mr. OUTHWAITE. That is the usual language.

Mr. HULICK. It does not refer to this fund.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. That is the usual language.

Mr. HULICK. It should be "not otherwise appropriated out of this fund."

Mr. SAYERS. That amendment ought to be made.

Mr. HULICK. I suggest that amendment.

Mr. SAYERS. It must be done before unanimous consent is given.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio suggests an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 11, after the word "same," insert the words "out of said fund."

Mr. HULICK. That will make it consistent with the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I will accept that amendment.

The amendment was read, as follows:

After the word "same," in line 11, insert the following: "out of said fund."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HULICK. It appears to me, Mr. Speaker, that another amendment is required in the line previous to that, where it says, "hereby appropriated out of any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated." Would it not be well to make the same amendment there, so that it would read "out of said fund?"

Mr. OUTHWAITE. No; because the money is not kept separate.

Mr. MURRAY. What amount of money does the gentleman from Ohio say there is?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Two hundred and forty thousand two hundred and thirty-three dollars remained unclaimed. The amount paid back was five hundred and four thousand, but the portion which remained unclaimed is $240,233. The total amount repaid into the Treasury was $504,000.

Mr. MURRAY. And it has been all reclaimed except two hundred and forty thousand?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Yes. It has not been proved up at all, but there was still this amount of $243,233 unclaimed.

Mr. HULL. The $264,000 that has been claimed is claimed by a large number of different persons with conflicting interests, so that practically it is in the same position of the $240,000 that is unclaimed. In other words, it has been demonstrated that the claimants can not make the proof that will entitle them to draw even the two hundred and sixty-four thousand from the Treasury.

Mr. MURRAY. So that practically there is $500,000.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Yes; about half a million dollars.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Speaker, I think this is a very worthy cause. There are in this District and all over this country a large number of colored people who have no institutions of the kind proposed in this bill, where they can be taken care of when they are unable to take care of themselves. I am in favor of making some disposition of this money for the benefit of the colored people, and I think there are a great many worthy causes that are suffering for want of the aid that it would afford. I am in favor of establishing this home in the District of Columbia for aged and infirm colored people, and I shall vote for this bill, because I think the fund is sufficient for that purpose, and also to do what I want done with the balance. The colored people of this country need, more than anything else at this time, institutions in which they can be trained industrially. We want industrial institutions for our people, and while the States have done a great deal for the education of the colored people, they have not established such institutions.

We have two very laudable institutions, one at Hampton, Va., which is doing a great work, and the other at Tuskegee, Ala. I think those two are doing more than any other institutions of the kind in the whole country. I think they are meeting the conditions and requirements of the times better than any others. I believe that a people's training ought to be in keeping with their condition, and, as I have said, I believe that what our people need most of all now is industrial training. I think that the balance of this $500,000 and the amount that is coming to the colored people from the unclaimed funds of the Freedman's Bank should be appropriated to establish and maintain industrial schools in three or four different sections of the Southern country.

As to this particular bill and its object, we find in this District, and not only in this District but throughout the country, a large number of colored people who are in needy circumstances and who require aid. There are a great many institutions for the care of the needy and suffering from which the colored people are excluded, and of course we are desirous of having some places of our own where we can take care of our aged and infirm. I am satisfied that no better use can be made of this money than to appropriate a portion of it for the object set forth in this bill, but I give notice that later I shall prepare and introduce a bill to appropriate all the unclaimed funds in the Treasury belonging to colored people, to establish industrial institutions for the education and training of the colored youth of the country.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio, which will be again read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add at the end of section 2 the following:

Provided, That this institution shall not become a charge upon the United States Treasury at any time.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer an amendment, adding at the close of section 2:

Provided, That if residents of the District of Columbia become inmates of said home, and are supported in whole or in part by appropriations made by Congress, one-half of said appropriations shall be a charge upon the revenues of the District of Columbia.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I shall not object to that amendment, though I think it is holding out an invitation to ask an appropriation for this District to support its inmates of this institution.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Not at all.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to amend the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois so as to provide that the entire appropriation shall be made out of the revenues of the District. I want to protect the General Government.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Why do you do that?

Mr. SAYERS. If the inmates come altogether from the District then the District ought to pay the expense.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. But they will not come altogether from the District.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the amendment of the gentleman from Texas.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] by striking out all after the word "Congress" and inserting "the entire expense shall be a charge against the revenues of the District of Columbia."

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I wish to be heard a moment against this amendment.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I desire to move the previous question.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I want to be heard, and have been recognized. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] has stated that nobody is to get the benefit of this institution except residents of the District of Columbia.

Mr. SAYERS. That is my understanding.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. But that is not the case. The inmates are to come from all the States of the Union, if they can get in; and the District of Columbia ought not to be saddled with the expense of taking care of the indigent people of the States. I think my friend from Texas, in view of this fact, will not insist on his amendment. We have made an agreement with the District of Columbia to pay one-half of the expenses of the District; that agreement has been in existence for sixteen years, and we ought to live up to it. There is no occasion to add to the bill such a provision as the gentleman from Texas proposes; and I hope he will not insist upon it.

Mr. SAYERS. Well, I think wherever the inmates come from the District of Columbia——

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Yes; but they come from the States as well as from the District.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, as I caught the reading of this bill its purpose is to provide for indigent colored people of the District of Columbia.

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no.

Mr. SAYERS. If that is not the case——

Mr. LIVINGSTON. That is the practical effect; there is no provision by which the States can have their fair proportion of inmates.

Mr. TAYLOR of Indiana. Yes, that is practically the effect, whatever the wording of the bill may be.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. How is it "the practical effect?" The gentleman might as well say that the inmates of the lunatic asylum situated in this District are made up entirely of persons from the District of Columbia; he might say the same of the Soldiers' Home.

Mr. TAYLOR of Indiana. The idea of "infirm" people coming from other States to this District to become inmates of this institution!

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I call for the previous question on the bill and amendments.

The previous question was ordered.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. SAYERS to the amendment of Mr. CANNON of Illinois, it was agreed to.

The question then recurred on the amendment of Mr. CANNON of Illinois as amended.

Mr. DINGLEY. I ask unanimous consent that the amendment as amended be read, as many gentlemen do not understand it.

The amendment as amended was read, as follows:

Provided, That if residents of the District of Columbia become inmates of said home, and are supported in whole or in part by appropriations by Congress, the entire expense shall be a charge upon the citizens of the District of Columbia.

The question being taken on agreeing to the amendment as amended, there were on a division (called for by Mr. SAYERS)—ayes 43, noes 48.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. There is no quorum.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. CANNON of Illinois and Mr. OUTHWAITE were appointed.

Mr. HUTCHESON. I make a point of order on the amendment to the amendment, that it is inconsistent with the amendment——

The SPEAKER. It is too late to make a point of order.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 69, noes 87.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. We may just as well have a roll call.

The SPEAKER. As the Chair understands, the point of "no quorum" is still insisted upon.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I demand the yeas and nays, as the gentleman from Illinois wants them.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. The yeas and nays, I presume, would come necessarily, if there is no quorum.

The yeas and nays were ordered, Mr. OUTHWAITE and Mr. CANNON of Illinois being appointed as tellers, to act during the call of the roll.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I ask that some one better acquainted than myself with the members may take my place as a teller.

The SPEAKER appointed Mr. LOUDENSLAGER in place of Mr. CANNON of Illinois.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 113, nays 107, answered "present" 4, not voting 128; as follows:

So the amendment was adopted.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. SNODGRASS, is detained from the House by illness, and I ask leave of absence for him during the day.

There was no objection.

Mr. KEM. I ask that my colleague, Mr. MCKEIGHAN, be excused on account of illness.

There was no objection.

Mr. MCKAIG. I ask that my colleague, Mr. TALBOTT, be excused on account of illness.

There was no objection.

The following pairs were announced.

Until further notice:

Mr. HATCH with Mr. CURTIS of New York.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana with Mr. STRONG.

Mr. GOODNIGHT with Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa.

Mr. ALDERSON with Mr. HITT.

Mr. KILGORE with Mr. WILSON of Ohio.

Mr. SCHERMERHORN with Mr. STORER.

MR. ENGLISH with Mr. BUNDY.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland with Mr. PHILLIPS.

Mr. BLACK of Illinois with Mr. HEINER of Pennsylvania.

Mr. TERRY with Mr. WANGER.

Mr. ENLOE. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE]. If he were present I would vote "aye."

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and was accordingly read the third time.

The question recurred upon the passage of the bill.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit the bill to the Committee on Appropriations.

The SPEAKER. With instructions?

Mr. DE ARMOND. Without instructions.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. This bill did not come from the Committee on Appropriations, and that committee have no jurisdiction of the subject. I make the point of order against the motion. They do not want the bill, and it does not belong to them.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman from Missouri that the motion would be to commit the bill to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I make that modification of the motion.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri, to commit the bill to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I make the point of order, Mr. Speaker, against that motion. A motion to recommit a bill, after or before the previous question is ordered on the passage of the bill, is admissible under the rule; but I doubt whether a motion to commit to a separate committee would come within the purview of the rule.

The SPEAKER. The rule provides that—

It shall be in order pending the motion for, and after the previous question shall have been ordered, for the Speaker to entertain and submit a motion to commit with instructions, etc.

The gentleman from Missouri moves to commit this bill to the committee without instructions.

The question was taken, and on a division (demanded by Mr. DE ARMOND) there were—ayes 44, noes 113.

So the motion was not agreed to.

The question recurred on the passage of the bill as amended.

On a division (demanded by Mr. DE ARMOND) there were—ayes 102, noes 29.

Mr. DE ARMOND. No quorum.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. DE ARMOND and Mr. OUTHWAITE as tellers.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. If the gentleman insists upon the demand we may as well have the yeas and nays. That is, I suppose, the object in making the point.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I have simply made the point that there is no quorum.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Then I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER appointed Mr. OUTHWAITE and Mr. DE ARMOND as tellers at the desk.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 148, nays 52, answered "present" 2, not voting 150; as follows:

So the bill was passed.

The following additional pair was announced:

Mr. SAYERS with Mr. ROBINSON of Pennsylvania, on this vote.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

On motion of Mr. OUTHWAITE, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid upon the table.

BENJAMIN F. JONES.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent to have a bill involving a very small amount considered. I desired to ask this consent earlier in the day, but have been prevented. I ask first that the bill be read, and then the report, which is very brief.

The SPEAKER. The bill and report will be read if there be no objection, after which the Chair will submit the request of the gentleman from Mississippi.

The bill was read, as follows:

Whereas at a time, to wit, the 22d day of April, anno Domini 1883, when Benjamin F. Jones was postmaster at the town of Beauregard, Miss., the said town was totally destroyed by a cyclone and every building in the town swept away, including the building in which the post-office was kept; in consequence of this disaster there was a loss of money belonging to the Government deposited in said post-office building, which said Jones was compelled to make good to the Government. The Illinois Railway, carrying mails to said town of Beauregard, ceased to deposit them at Beauregard depot and carried them to the town of Wesson, 1 mile from Beauregard, compelling said B. F. Jones, at his own expense, to transport the mails from Wesson to Beauregard, the cost being $97, which the Post-Office Department refused to allow, because of want of lawful authority; and the Government sued said Jones, on his official bond as postmaster, in circuit court of the United States for southern district of Mississippi; and said court refused to allow the said item of $97 as an offset; but both the presiding judge, Hon. R. A. Hill, and the attorney for the Government fully recognized the equity of the claim in open court, and signed a recommendation to allow said item of setoff: Therefore,

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be paid to the said Benjamin F. Jones, late postmaster at Beauregard, Miss., or to his order, out of such money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $97 in consideration of the aforesaid loss and services.

The report (by Mr. BUNN) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3592) for the relief of Benjamin F. Jones, have had the same under consideration and recommend that it do pass.

The facts are that Benj. F. Jones, claimant, was postmaster at Beauregard, Miss. On the 22d day of April, 1883, the post-office was totally destroyed by a cyclone. The town as well was destroyed. The Illinois Railway, carrying the mail for that point, ceased to deliver the mail there, but delivered it at Wesson, a station 1 mile away. There was no provision for transporting the mail from Wesson to Beauregard.

The postmaster, this claimant, carried the mail for thirty-four days between said points; for twenty-three days of the time he had to employ a vehicle at $2 per day, and the remaining eleven days carried the mail on his back. He claims $1.50 per day for his services for thirty-four days ($51) and $46 for vehicle, making the sum of $97, total amount claimed in the bill.

There is no doubt that the service was performed, and your committee is of the opinion it was worth the amount claimed.

Mr. COOMBS. Is there any communication from the Post-Office Department in reference to this claim?

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. I have none at all. It has been here a long time, always reported unanimously from every committee to which it was referred. There is no question of the facts stated. All the papers show it.

Mr. LOUD. I remember this case before the Committee on Claims, but my impression is that it was amended, fixing the service at a dollar a day.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. There is nothing of the kind in the report.

Mr. LOUD. I shall have to object to it unless the reduction is made.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. I hope the gentleman will not make that objection. I have stood here a long time trying to get this little claim through. It has been pending here five or six years, and has always been unanimously reported by the committee having it in charge.

Mr. LOUD. I will consent to a dollar a day.

Mr. COX. I will suggest to the gentleman that he do that.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. I do not know of any amendment having been adopted in the committee. There is nothing in the papers to show that any such amendment was adopted.

Mr. LOUD. Unless that amendment is accepted, I shall object.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. What is it that the gentleman wishes to do?

Mr. LOUD. I want to allow a dollar a day for the carrying of the mail—thirty-four days.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request for the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LOUD. I object, unless that condition is accepted.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of committees for reports.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. The gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD] withdraws his objection to the bill just read. I accept the amendment suggested by him.

The SPEAKER. Is there further objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman indicate the amendment which he proposes?

Mr. LOUD. The amendment is to give $1 a day for the number of days the mail was carried.

The SPEAKER. But there is a provision in the bill for so much per day and so much for the vehicle.

Mr. LOUD. I understand that the bill was reported from the subcommittee, allowing simply $1 a day for thirty-four days.

Mr. COGSWELL. This is a question of thirty-four half-dollars, and I think we will save money by passing the bill without discussing the amendment.

The SPEAKER. But there is a provision in the bill to pay for the use of a vehicle. The gentleman will please send up his amendment.

Mr. LOUD. My amendment is to strike out the total amount carried by the bill, which I believe is $97, and to insert $34.

The SPEAKER. As the Chair understands the gentleman's proposition, it is to make the total amount carried by the bill $34.

Mr. LOUD. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The amendment is to strike out the amount named in the bill and to insert in lieu thereof $34. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrosssd and read a third time; and being engrossed, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

CONSTRUCTION OF A MILITARY ROAD.

Mr. GORMAN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported a bill (H. R. 7419) in lieu of H. R. 6920 for the construction of a military road from the city of El Paso to Fort Bliss, Tex.; which was read a first and second time, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

HOT SPRINGS RESERVATION, ARK.

Mr. MCRAE, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported a bill (S. 513) granting the use of certain lands in the Hot Springs Reservation, in the State of Arkansas, to the Barry Hospital; which was read a first and second time, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

CERTAIN LANDS IN MONTGOMERY COUNTY, ARK.

Mr. NEILL, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported a bill (H. R. 3374) to sell certain lands in Montgomery County, Ark., to the Methodist Episcopal Church South; which was read a first and second time, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. PEARSON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 6126) to amend an act to authorize construction of a bridge at Burlington, Iowa, approved August 6, 1888, and amended by act approved February 21, 1890.

A bill (H. R. 2710) for the relief of the heirs of Edward Morrison and Nellie Morrison, now deceased.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, for the consideration of general appropriation bills.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union (Mr. O'NEIL of Massachusetts in the chair) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6913) making appropriation for current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. On Friday, when the committee rose, the committee was dividing on an amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MCRAE]. The point of no quorum had been made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the amendment be again reported, and that we take the vote over.

Mr. HOLMAN. I believe the amendment was voted down.

Mr. McRAE. The point of no quorum was made.

The CHAIRMAN. It is true that there were a greater number of noes than ayes; but the point of no quorum was made. The gentleman from Arkansas asks unanimous consent that the amendment be again reported, and that the vote be taken over.

There was no objection.

The amendment was reported as follows:

Strike out lines 17, 18, and 19, on page 7, and insert: "For pay of five Indian inspectors, at $3,000 each, $15,000."

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I wish simply to call the attention of my friend to the fact that in addition to the salaries, these inspectors are allowed $7,000 for expenses, which is largely more than $1,000 each.

Mr. McRAE. In reply to that, I wish to say that if there is to be any reduction at all it ought to be from that item and not from the salaries. If there is any abuse in that it is the fault of the committee. I am in favor of giving them what the law allows, and no more.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order.

The question was taken on agreeing to the amendment, and the chairman announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. HOLMAN. Division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 25, noes 37.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For necessary traveling expenses of five Indian inspectors, including telegraphing and incidental expenses of inspection and investigation, $7,000.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, before proceeding in connection with that paragraph I simply, for information, desire to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill a question, because it may govern some future action on the bill. In the same page, lines 11, 12, and 13, this language is used:

And all offices in the Indian service not herein provided for are hereby abolished.

I desire to ask the gentleman now, in view of the fact that no appropriation is made for the Civil Indian Commission, whether that provision in that paragraph abolishes the Indian Commission?

Mr. HOLMAN. It would, unless the Indian Commission is restored to the bill.

Mr. BINGHAM. That is the very point I want to reach. You not only fail to appropriate, but by this paragraph you legislate this Commission out.

Mr. HOLMAN. No, not exactly; because they have not been legislated in. They were appointed under an appropriation bill.

Mr. BINGHAM. I simply wanted to ascertain whether it was the determination to abolish the Commission.

Mr. HOLMAN. It does not abolish the Commission; because the Commission was never established by law, but simply put in on an appropriation bill.

Mr. BINGHAM. Does the gentleman assume that if this provision continues in the bill that the Commission will continue?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, because it all depends upon the question of appropriation.

Mr. BINGHAM. But that does not give me an answer. Does this paragraph—and all offices in the Indian service not hereby provided for are hereby abolished—abolish the Indian Commission?

Mr. HOLMAN. It would undoubtedly abolish the Indian Commission if it existed by law.

Mr. BINGHAM. Does that practically abolish the office?

Mr. HOLMAN. Why, certainly it does.

Mr. BINGHAM. That is what I desired to ascertain.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, after line 22, I move the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the expenses of the Commission of citizens serving without compensation, appointed by the President under the provisions of the fourth section of the act of April 10, 1865, $5,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think I ought to retain the question of order—that it is new legislation; but I will not do so for the present, because I think this matter ought to be fully explained. I think the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM] and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. MADDOX] ought to be heard.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. I differ with the gentleman in thinking it is subject to a point of order.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I supposed there was no question about this amendment being in order. The commission is now in service, and has been since——

Mr. BINGHAM. Since 1869.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Since 1869.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Since Grant's first term.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is not made.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I want to submit a few words about this amendment, and I think I can in a very few words say all that I desire. This commission, serving without expense to the Government, has become a part and parcel of the machinery in the administration of this Bureau, and that, it seems to me, ought not to be overthrown without the fullest consideration.

Now, I want to say, in my judgment, since the commencement of Grant's first Administration until the present time that the Indian service, so far as a just and honest expenditure of money under treaties with the Indians for the purchase of supplies and appropriations by the Government are concerned, have in the main been honestly expended.

And, with the attention of the country year by year drawn to the expenditure of this money, with the increase in amounts appropriated for the support of the Indians, in my judgment this commission has done more for the common good, without charge to the Treasury, not only in seeing that contracts were honestly awarded and honestly complied with, but in helping to mold a public sentiment that made honesty the rule instead of the exception, than any other machinery that we have had in operation.

Mr. BOWERS of California. I presume there are other gentlemen here who, like myself, are quite ignorant as to the duties and the powers of these three commissioners, and I wish the gentlemen would enlighten us on that point.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. There are ten commissioners.

Mr. BOWERS of California. Then I would like to know what their powers and duties are.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Is the gentleman a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs?

Mr. BOWERS of California. I am not. If I were perhaps I would not have occasion to ask the question.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Perhaps I am not as well advised as to the details as I ought to be. The amendment explains itself, and the power of the Commission is recited in the act of 1869.

Mr. BOWERS of California. Well, I only want to get a general idea.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. As I understand it, these Commissioners constitute a board for the inspection of the goods that are furnished for the Indians under contract.

Mr. BOWERS of California. Inspection of the goods themselves?

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Yes, sir; and of samples when contracts are made.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. That is under the act of 1870. There was an act passed in relation to these Commissioners in 1869, and another in 1870 enlarging their powers.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Yes. Now I repeat, I am not as familiar with the administration of the Indian Office as perhaps I ought to be in order to give complete and full information as to all the details of the work that is done by this Commission. But I think I am familiar enough with it to say that the scandals which existed prior to the new departure made under President Grant have been largely done away with through the agency of this Commission, and, for one, I am not willing to see the appropriation for the Commission omitted from this bill.

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Chairman, I will endeavor to state the reasons why the Committee on Indian Affairs have refused to include this appropriation at this time. This Commission was authorized under an act of Congress passed April 10, 1869, in an appropriation bill. Section 4 of that bill provides:

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That there be appropriated the further sum of $2,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to enable the President to maintain the peace among and with the various tribes, bands, and parties of Indians, and to promote civilization among said Indians, bring them, where practicable, upon reservations, relieve their necessities, and encourage their efforts at self-support; a report of all expenditures under this appropriation to be made in detail to Congress in December next. And for the purpose of enabling the President to execute the powers conferred by this act, he is hereby authorized, at his discretion, to organize a board of commissioners, to consist of not more than ten persons, to be selected by him from men eminent for their intelligence and philanthropy, to serve without pecuniary compensation, who may, under his direction, exercise joint control with the Secretary of the Interior over the disbursement of the appropriations made by this act, or any part thereof, that the President may designate; and to pay the necessary expenses of transportation, subsistence, and clerk hire of said commissioners while actually engaged in said service, there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. HOLMAN. That was soon after the Sioux war.

Mr. MADDOX. Yes, soon after the Sioux war. It will be seen that an entirely new system of dealing with the Indians was adopted by this Government at that time, and in order to enable the President to put in force this new plan of controlling the Indians, this commission of citizens was appointed, and $25,000 was appropriated for their expenses. Their duties were defined in the act. In the following year another act was passed continuing them in office and providing that they should continue as long as any portion of the $25,000 appropriated to pay the expenses remained unexpended. Clearly the idea was not to continue this commission beyond the period when that appropriation for expenses should be exhausted.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. Was not the appropriation in 1870 $125,000 instead of $25,000?

Mr. MADDOX. No, sir; it was $25,000, as I have read from the act. Now, in any event these commissioners were appointed to aid the President to carry out this new system of controlling and governing the Indians, his peace policy, as it is called. In 1871 it was provided that:

The commission of citizens, serving without pay, appointed by the President under the provisions of the 4th section of the act of April 10, 1869, is hereby continued, so long as the appropriation heretofore made for their expenses shall last.

Mr. BINGHAM. What was the appropriation "heretofore made" as specified in the act of 1871? Does not that refer to the appropriation of 1870 and not that of 1869?

Mr. MADDOX. No, sir; there was no appropriation made in 1870. There was a fund already on hand, and this act provides that they are to continue in office as long as any portion of that fund remains.

Mr. HOLMAN. As far as the $25,000 would go.

Mr. MADDOX. Now, on the 29th of May, 1872, this law was passed.

* * * And the said commission is hereby continued with the powers and duties heretofore provided by law: Provided, That any member of the Board of Indian Commissioners is hereby empowered to investigate all contracts, expenditures, and accounts in connection with the Indian service, and shall have access to all books and papers relating thereto in any Government office; but the examination of vouchers and accounts by the executive committee of said board shall be a prerequisite of payment.

In 1871 another act provided that no payments should be made to contractors for goods or supplies of any sort furnished to the Indians, beyond 50 per cent of the amount due, until the accounts and vouchers should have been submitted to the executive committee of the Board of Commissioners.

It provided, however, that the commission might make a report to the Secretary of the Interior, either agreeing or disagreeing to anything that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs might do, leaving it, however, to the Secretary of the Interior to decide the whole matter as he might see proper—either to approve the report or disapprove it. In the same way the matter is left with him to-day. He is the final arbiter of all these matters.

Now, the later act on this subject is in 1882——

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. I find on an examination of the statutes that $125,000 was not appropriated; but I want to ask the gentleman whether it is not the fact that the duties of that commission were enlarged by the act of 1870——

Mr. MADDOX. Yes, I think so.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. So as to provide that they should inspect goods purchased, etc.

Mr. MADDOX. I want to show, however, that these duties were curtailed in 1882. Here is the last provision on the subject; it is contained in the appropriation act of 1882:

The commission shall only have power to visit and inspect agencies and other branches of the Indian service, and to inspect goods purchased for said service; and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs shall consult with the commission in the purchase of supplies. The commission shall report their acts and doings to the Secretary of the Interior.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended.

The CHAIRMAN. In the absence of objection, the time of the gentleman from Georgia will be extended for five minutes.

Mr. MADDOX. I trust I shall not be restricted to five minutes. All I ask is time enough to explain the statutes bearing on this case.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I hope the gentleman will have such time as he requires, and that similar time be granted to the other side.

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. In the absence of objection the gentleman from Georgia will proceed without restriction.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. The gentleman from Georgia has been speaking of a report from the Indian Committee. He will remember that I, as a member of the committee, was opposed to this provision going out of the bill.

Mr. MADDOX. Certainly; it is, however, the report of the majority.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. It is the majority report, of course.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Do I understand the gentleman from Georgia to contend that under the law the power of this Commission is restricted simply to the inspection of supplies?

Mr. MADDOX. To inspecting supplies and visiting the Indian agencies. They have no authority beyond that, under the law.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Is it not the fact that ever since the law from which the gentleman is reading has been in force that Commission has been discharging a great many other duties than those he has enumerated and to which he says they are restricted?

Mr. MADDOX. I take it from their report that they have done nothing of the kind.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I take it from the report that they have been going on and discharging these other duties. I am satisfied, too, that they are authorized by the law to go farther than the gentleman states.

Mr. EVERETT. If the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JOHNSON] will permit me, and if the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. MADDOX] will yield——

Mr. MADDOX. The question is simply as to the construction of the law which I have been reading.

Mr. EVERETT. I wish to call attention to the fact that in the Revised Statutes of 1878, to which allusion has been made, it is provided on page 359:

SEC. 2039. There shall be a board of Indian commissioners, composed of not more than ten persons, appointed by the President solely, from men eminent for intelligence and philanthropy, and who shall serve without pecuniary compensation.

SEC. 2040. The board of commissioners mentioned in the preceding section shall have power to appoint one of their own number as secretary, who shall be entitled to such reasonable compensation as the board may designate, payable from any moneys appropriated for the expenses of the board.

Section 2041 provides that—

The board of commissioners mentioned in section 2039 shall supervise all expenditures of money appropriated for the benefit of Indians within the limits of the United States.

So that this matter does not depend on any provision of an appropriation bill. The Revised Statutes have recognized this Board of Indian Commissioners; it is established by law for the purpose of supervising all expenditures of money appropriated for the Indian service.

A MEMBER. But that law has been modified.

Mr. EVERETT. I am aware that it has been modified; but I refer to those provisions of the Revised Statutes because the gentleman from Georgia has passed them over.

Mr. MADDOX. What the gentleman from Massachusetts has just read did very well for 1878; but I am reading from the law of 1882—four years later.

Mr. EVERETT. But you skipped what had been done in the interval.

Mr. MADDOX. No, sir. I have been reading the various statutes which apply to this Board. Now, the Indian appropriation act of May 7, 1882, contains the clause which I am about to read. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JOHNSON] says that the powers of the Board have been enlarged. I will leave that question for the House. I read the provision of law, as the Indian Commission reports it, after the revision to which the gentleman from Massachusetts has referred:

And hereafter the Commission shall only have power to visit and inspect agencies and other branches of the Indian service and to inspect goods purchased for said service; and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs shall consult with the Commission in the purchase of supplies. The Commission shall report their doings to the Secretary of the Interior.

The original idea was that the Commissioners were to report directly to the President.

Mr. BINGHAM. And their duties extended to other branches than those mentioned by the gentleman. What does "to other branches" mean?

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. That is the point I desired to make.

Mr. MADDOX. I admit that they may go further; but I desire to show what the idea of the committee was in refusing to make this appropriation.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this Commission has been in service for twenty-five years and have made twenty-six reports. That they have done good service no one will question or deny. But it was the opinion of the Committee on Indian Affairs that they had filled the purpose for which they had been originally appointed, and that there was no longer any necessity for their services. Now, let us see if they have not filled the purposes of their appointment.

According to their report they have been visiting the agencies and reporting upon their condition and surroundings. What have you done fifteen or twenty minutes ago in connection with this very bill? You confirmed the retention in the bill of the five Indian inspectors, whose powers exceed those of these special agents or Commissioners or any of them, and I call attention to the powers conferred on these inspectors:

SEC. 2045. Each Indian superintendency and agency shall be visited and examined as often as twice a year by one or more of the inspectors. Such examination shall extend to a full investigation of all matters pertaining to the business of the superintendency or agency, including an examination of accounts, the manner of expending money, the number of Indians provided for, contracts of all kinds connected with the business, the condition of the Indians, their advancement in civilization, the extent of the reservations, and what use is made of the lands set apart for that purpose, and, generally, all matters pertaining to the Indian service. For the purpose of making such investigations, each inspector shall have power to examine all books, papers, and vouchers, to administer oaths, and to examine on oath all officers and persons employed in the superintendency or agency, and all such other persons as he may deem necessary or proper.

The inspectors, or any of them, shall have power to suspend any superintendent or agent or employé, and to designate some person in his place temporarily, subject to the approval of the President, making immediate report of such suspension and designation; and upon the conclusion of each examination a report shall be forwarded to the President without delay. The inspectors, in the discharge of their duties, jointly and individually, shall have power, by proper legal proceedings, which it shall be the duty of the district attorney of the United States for the appropriate district duly to effectuate, to enforce the laws, and to prevent the violation of law in the administration of affairs in the several agencies and superintendencies. So far as practicable, the examinations of the agencies and superintendencies shall be made alternately by different inspectors, so that the same agency or superintendency may not be examined twice in succession by the same inspector or inspectors.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. What is the gentleman reading from?

Mr. MADDOX. I am reading from the Revised Statutes providing for these inspectors and fixing their duties.

Now, the inspectors are appointed by the President, and, to use their own language, they are the eyes, the fingers, the arms, and the hands of the Administration. They report directly to the President as to the condition of Indian affairs. They are invested with full power, and have nothing whatever to do with the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. They are entirely independent of him. They are appointed by the President, and they are paid regular salaries for discharging the duties similar in every respect, in fact the same as these Indian Commissioners. According to the reports of the Indian Commissioners it seems the service has got to be honest at last; and I do not doubt that that committee of gentlemen, acting without compensation, contributed largely to that end.

But these inspectors are discharging exactly the duties, with other duties added, that were formerly discharged by this Indian Commission. They are doing exactly the same work, and power is conferred upon them beyond what was conferred upon the Commission. They have power to remove at will, for instance. They may report to the President any agent or any other officer of the service that they may think proper, and they make their reports directly to him. They are authorized to administer oaths, and have power to conduct investigations to the fullest extent. What else, then, is the Indian Commission left to do? Nothing, except to visit the agencies when contracts are being made and inspect the supplies. In other words, to see the character of the goods furnished.

Now, I wish to show how this money is expended. I read from a letter from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, D. C., April 23, 1894.

MY DEAR SIR: In reply to your letter of this date, asking in what manner and for what purpose the $5,000 "for the expenses of commission of citizens appointed by the President," etc., is expended, I have to say that $2,000 is paid the secretary of the Board of Indian Commissioners, $300 for office rent, about $50 for care of office, and the remainder of the sum is used to pay expenses of its members or its secretary, as it directs, in attending the letting of contracts for the purchase of Indian supplies, and in making visits to Indian reservations.

The work of the Commission is not under the control of this office, and they report directly to the President.

Respectfully,

D. M. BROWNING, Commissioner.

Hon. WM. S. HOLMAN,
House of Representatives.

Now, you will find on examination of the statutes that the Secretary of the Interior, under this law, controls the matter at last anyway. They may make what report they please to him and he may support, sustain, or set it aside altogether, as he pleases, under the law. So far as visiting the reservations is concerned, it is the duty of the inspectors who report directly to the President. What is the necessity for the President having five inspectors to visit these agencies and report directly to him if ten others, operating throughout the country, are authorized to do the same identical thing. And in addition to that you have five special agents who are also performing similar duties with the inspectors.

Furthermore, let me call your attention again to how this money is spent. Here is $2,000 paid annually to the secretary. What do you suppose he does? He has got an office in this city, paying $300 a year rent for it; $50,000 allowed to keep it up, and $2,000 for his own services; and from what I have been told, I do not think he does ten days' work in the whole three hundred and sixty-five—a mere sinecure.

It was the opinion of the committee that the Commission had served its day. In other words, that it had performed the functions for which it was originally created, and hence we refused to make any appropriation to continue it, not regarding it as necessary any longer. That is, the majority of the committee took that view. These, Mr. Chairman, are the reasons that actuated us in refusing this appropriation.

Mr. BARTLETT. I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I had prepared an amendment in ipsissimis verbis with that offered by one of the distinguished leaders on the Republican side, but I had concluded that the proper place to introduce it was at the end of this section, on page 8, at line 10. The amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois is in the words of the last appropriation bill; that is, the appropriation bill of March 3, 1893, and in the words of the appropriation bill of July 13, 1892.

I shall endeavor to show you certain reasons why this board of philanthropists, and of independent, impartial gentlemen, should be continued in existence. I think it would have been somewhat fairer if the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs in his report had drawn the attention of the committee and of the House to the fact that he proposed to drop this Board of Indian Commissioners out of existence. Our attention should have been drawn to that proposed change in existing law; but, however, we have detected the innovation, and I propose to give certain reasons why this Board should be continued in existence.

You will bear in mind that President Grant, on April 10, 1869, created this Board. He was empowered in the statute passed on that day to select not exceeding ten citizens from men eminent for philanthropy and intelligence, and under that act he selected a board, some of the members of which were men of great distinction and philanthropy. I will mention George H. Stewart and William Welsh of Philadelphia, William E. Dodge of New York, and John Farwell of Chicago. It is conceded that at that time there was an actual, active, pressing necessity for the establishment of such a board of commissioners. Enormous frauds had been perpetrated in the Indian Department. The agent and the contractor were partners. False vouchers, false statements of accounts, were matters of everyday occurrence. So it became necessary to make some effort to check these frauds.

Now, I say that the same necessity exists in a modified form to-day for the continuance of this board. Why? Because the gentlemen composing the membership of that Board are impartial, honest citizens, standing aloof from any supervision or control, except the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, and standing in an attitude of absolute impartiality as between the contractor and the Indian agent and the Indians and the public, their views being inspired only by the instincts of humanity.

Mr. MADDOX. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes.

Mr. MADDOX. Do you know that one of them has made it his business to be here before the Committee on Indian Affairs on nearly all occasions?

Mr. BARTLETT. As to what has taken place in the Committee on Indian Affairs, I know nothing. I only know that the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs [Mr. HOLMAN] is in favor of the appointment of a board partly composed of citizen commissioners; and I wish to direct the attention of the committee to a bill which has been introduced by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], providing for the appointment of a partly military and partly civil commission. I say that position is utterly inconsistent with the position taken by the Committee on Indian Affairs to-day.

Now, what do these gentlemen do? Let me call your attention, in the interest of true religion and of philanthropy and in the interest of the friends of the Indians, to the membership of this Commission. The chairman, Prof. Merrill E. Gates, is the president of Amherst College in Massachusetts. Among the distinguished members are Darwin R. James, of Brooklyn, who was formerly a member of Congress; William H. Lyon, of New York, a man of the highest character and an old dry-goods merchant; Joseph T. Jacobs, of Michigan, and William D. ——, from North Dakota; Albert K. Smiley, of Rhode Island, and Elbert B. Monroe, of Connecticut.

This Board of eight or nine members is made up of citizens from various parts of the Union, and is composed of men distinguished for their high character and for their absolute honesty. They commit what impropriety? They spend $2,000 for the employment of a clerk or secretary, and to that payment of salary the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. MADDOX] objects. Now, I submit that is a wise use of their fund. It is necessary that they should have an office in the city of Washington, and it is necessary that they should employ a secretary or clerk, and the salary is no more than adequate.

[The time of Mr. BARTLETT having expired, by unanimous consent, at the request of Mr. HOLMAN and Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana, it was extended five minutes.]

Mr. BARTLETT. How is the rest of the money spent? Fifty dollars is paid for the care of the room, $300 for the rent of the office, and the balance is paid for the expenses of these gentlemen. Now, what do they do? Accepting the interpretation put on the existing law by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. MADDOX], that the act of 1882 is our guide, and that it controls us, then under that statute they have two functions, one to visit the agencies and inspect them, and the other to inspect the supplies.

Now, the first function, that of visiting the agencies, is absolutely necessary for the continued welfare of the Indians, and it is absolutely essential that this supervision should be exercised over the various agencies. We spend millions of dollars for the agencies and the schools, and yet we hesitate to give $5,000 to an impartial board to visit these agencies and schools, and to see that the work is properly performed. Is that logic? Is that common business sense?

Again, what is their other function? It is to inspect the supplies; and from the 15th of May to the 29th of May, five or six members of this board were present at the warehouse in Chicago and took part in the inspection of supplies. From the 31st of May the Board has been sitting at the warehouse in New York; so they are actually at work to-day while you are debating this question of cutting off this pitiful appropriation of $5,000.

I submit that the interest of the Indian and his welfare, and the dictates of philanthropy prescribe that this Commission shall be continued. I submit also that a proper supervision, a salutary supervision of the contracts and supplies requires the continuance of this provision. Mr. Lyon, the member at New York, is an old dry goods merchant, and last year he was obliged to throw out a good many of the blankets. That is one work you can not secure from the paid employés of the Government. You have got to get an outside man who is a man of impartiality and familiar with the goods to perform this duty.

Now, let me call your attention for a moment to the proposition that the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs has introduced into this House in this Congress. It is the House bill (H. R. 3326) which provides for the creation of a commission composed of three military officers to be detailed and three citizens. It appropriates $20,000 a year for that commission, and it gives to them the same functions that are exercised by this Board of Commissioners, nonpartisan and without compensation. I say that the introduction of any such measure is absolutely inconsistent with the discontinuance of the appropriation we now ask for. I would say in conclusion that we should be fair to the red men.

We have by the right of conquest, and by the right of superior civilization, gradually segregated them into smaller areas and driven them on to smaller reservations, but at the same time we should remember that we are bound to do all we can to improve their condition and to ameliorate their ultimate fate, which must be one either of extinction or absorption. I ask the committee to vote for the amendment and to retain the appropriation of $5,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph be closed in ten minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I object to that. I hope my colleague will give us a little longer than that.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. The gentleman from Indiana wants a little time.

Mr. HOLMAN. What time do you suggest?

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I want ten minutes.

Mr. BINGHAM. I want five minutes.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask unanimous consent that all debate upon this paragraph be limited, then, to twenty minutes.

Mr. BINGHAM. How much does the other side want?

Mr. HOLMAN. I shall only want a few minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Better say forty minutes. This is a pretty important question.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands there is no objection to giving the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JOHNSON] ten minutes and the gentleman from Pennsylvania five minutes, if this is agreed to.

Mr. BINGHAM. The gentleman from Massachusetts desires some time, and there are other gentlemen who may desire to speak.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made to the proposition of the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Make it forty minutes.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will have to insist on less time than that.

Mr. EVERETT. Make it thirty minutes, then.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will only occupy two or three minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I think if the gentleman gets started he will find that he requires more time than that.

Mr. LYNCH. It was suggested a moment ago that gentlemen have twenty minutes on that side. We will reserve ten minutes on this side; and therefore I ask unanimous consent that debate be closed in thirty minutes.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then I suggest that debate be closed in thirty minutes, and that the committee have one-half of that time.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I appeal to the gentleman to yield more time than that. I ask for ten minutes, and I do not desire to cut off other gentlemen by taking that much of the time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to close debate on this paragraph and amendment thereto in thirty minutes, twenty minutes to be given to the other side. Is there objection?

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I would like to have a few moments.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have no idea that we will use ten minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to say in advance, Mr. Chairman, that while the statutes which have been enacted since 1869 are somewhat ambiguous, and possibly the point of order might be sustained, I do not think that it ought to be pressed. I think this is a question on which the committee ought to vote. Therefore I make no point of order on the subject. When the inquiry was made as to the expenditure of this money, and it appeared that more than two-fifths of the entire sum has been expended here in the capital ($2,350 of the $5,000), it occurred to the members of the committee that the object of this organization had long since gone by.

It was a valuable institution originally. It was originated in the Great Sioux war, which occurred just before this legislation commenced, and the object had long since been accomplished, otherwise I am quite confident an agency would not be kept up in this city expending so large a portion of the $5,000. The original amount appropriated for this object was $25,000 a year, which was not spent in one year for a series of years, and after that it was brought down to about $5,000, and some of the purest and best men were engaged in that Commission, if you may call it a commission. They rendered very valuable service and did a great deal to quiet the Indians and to secure honest administration at the Indian agencies. No person calls that in question, but that this Commission should be kept in existence simply because it was able at one time to render valuable service does not seem necessarily to follow, although it is a question on which gentlemen may very well differ.

As to the bill to which the gentleman from New York refers, and which he supposes is inconsistent with this proposition to drop this $5,000 a year, the history of that is this: Eight or nine years ago President Cleveland was anxious to adopt a comprehensive policy with reference to the Indian tribes and had certain views with reference to the Indian Territory, the formation probably in the progress of time of an Indian State.

Comprehensive measures seemed to be necessary, and at his instance, if my memory is correct, Secretary Lamar drew up the bill to which the gentleman from New York refers, and it was introduced in Congress as far back as the Forty-eighth Congress and has been pending ever since. It had no relation whatever to any inspection by this Board of Indian Commissioners. It was a comprehensive plan for settling the Indian question, especially as it was involved in the condition of the Indian Territory. That measure, therefore, was for an entirely different purpose.

Now, I do not feel justified in occupying any material portion of the time on this question. If a majority of this body thinks it is well to continue this small item of $5,000 a year, well and good. I hope, however, that if it is to be continued, some gentleman will devise a plan by which the whole of it may be appropriated for the benefit of the Indians themselves. The great trouble about this Indian bill is that such a large proportion of the money we appropriate for the Indians goes to the benefit of the white man, and not either directly, or in some instances, indirectly to the benefit of the Indian. We have an army of people fastened upon the Indian funds, and it is impossible to abolish any of them, and almost impossible to reduce any of their salaries.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. What remedy would the gentleman suggest as to how the money shall be used? I think that the Government should confine itself to the education of the reservation Indians.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think so. That is one of the objects contemplated in the act to which the gentleman from New York has called attention, which was prepared by Mr. Secretary Lamar.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JOHNSON] is recognized, and asks consent that he may speak ten minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, my attention was called to this matter only last evening. I have given it a hurried examination. I prepared an amendment similar to the one offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], and had intended, like the gentleman from New York, to offer it a little further along in the consideration of the bill, but the action of the gentleman from Illinois relieves me from that necessity.

I am very much surprised that the Committee on Indian Affairs has omitted the usual appropriation for the support of this Board of Indian Commissioners. I say this, notwithstanding the fact that I am familiar with the peculiar and well-known views of the chairman of that committee on the subject of public expenditures. The omission of this appropriation, however, it not only not economy—it is the worst kind of prodigality. It is a saving at the spigot that we may lose at the bung. This Indian Commission, as has been stated here and as is well known, was first appointed under the Administration of President Grant, as far back as 1869. It was composed then, and always has been composed, of intelligent, philanthropic, conscientious men, who have performed their onerous duties free of charge to the Government, an appropriation having been made by Congress simply to pay their necessary expenses.

The Commission has never been partisan in its character, and it has been always composed of men of integrity and ability. During all these years, now a quarter of a century, it has discharged its duties faithfully, and never has Congress refused to appropriate for its expenses except in one instance. In that case the members of the Commission defrayed their own expenses for the year, and Congress subsequently repaid them by a deficiency appropriation. The work its members have done has been such as to commend the Commission to this House. The abolition of the well-known frauds that were practiced against the Government and against the Indians in connection with the furnishing of supplies before the Commission was organized, and which the Commission brought about, was alone a sufficient ground to justify its establishment and also justifies its continuance.

These Commissioners have saved thousands and thousands, and perhaps millions of dollars to the Government by their inspection of the Indian supplies. There is only one class of men upon the face of the earth interested in abolishing the Commission, and that is such men who sell goods to the Government for the supply of the Indians as are inclined to be dishonest. They, I have no doubt, would hail with delight the abolition of the Commission. Under the old system very few men bid for the furnishing of Indian supplies, and they were generally dishonest men, for it was a recognized fact that there was very little honesty in the apportioning of the contracts; and square bidders and live competition among bidders was rare, but under the system introduced and established by this Commission hundreds of people make bids and there is a great reduction in the prices which the Government has to pay for its supplies; a reduction so great that there has probably been more saved in one year than the Commission has cost in all the years it has been in existence.

Not only that, but this Commission agitated the subject and drew the law and presented it to Congress, providing for the allotment system of lands and the breaking up of the tribal relations of the Indians, a measure which has proved very beneficial to the Indians as well as to the Government.

Again, the Commission were largely instrumental in bringing about the abolition of what is known as the treaty system, a change highly approved by those best acquainted with Indian character and with the requirements of the Indian service. This Commission have done more, too, than any other organization in the country to promote the education, and especially the industrial education, of Indian youth and their training in industrial callings, and towards the moral instruction and civilization of the red man.

More than that, they have insisted that the men appointed to the Indian agencies should have moral as well as mental qualifications, and they have done much to raise the standard in that branch of the public service and to improve it and give it character. Tried by its past achievments, this Commission has been a useful and beneficent institution, which deserves well at the hands of Congress instead of having its throat cut in this way by a refusal of this body to appropriate the paltry sum of $5,000 for its necessary expenses.

It has been insisted, sir, that the powers of this Commission have been curtailed. But on examining the very statute quoted in support of this proposition by the gentleman who first spoke in this discussion and who advanced this claim, I find the language sufficiently broad to authorize the Commission to the most extended labor. There can be no question about the matter; and for years past and up to the present time they have gone on, not simply inspecting the character of the goods furnished for the Indian service, but doing much in the way of elevating the morals of the Indians and bringing about their education and enlightenment. They have done, as has been said by the gentleman from Illinois, more to create a healthy state of public sentiment as to the proper manner of dealing with the Indians, than any other organization known to the country.

It is said that these five Indian inspectors perform the very duties which have been assigned to this Commission. But I want to call attention to the fact that this citizens' committee was devised as a system of checks and balances to prevent any collusion or fraud or connivance which might exist between the regularly appointed officers of the Government and those interested in selling goods to the Indians. I am not here to reflect upon any Government officer; but it is a well-known fact that before this system was devised, great frauds were perpetrated upon the Government and great wrongs done to the Indians, and that in almost every instance of wrongdoing Government officials were implicated. This Commission composed of disinterested gentlemen, operating outside of the Government employ, have been above collusion, and in this way have been an effectual check upon misconduct in the Indian service.

This Commission goes out now and visits the various agencies, makes personal inquiry, holds its meetings, makes its reports to the Secretary of the Interior and to the head of the Indian Bureau. It has made a great many valuable suggestions upon which has been predicated some of the most salutary legislation passed by Congress in connection with the government of the Indians. The inspection of supplies, sir, is the smallest part of the valuable services which they render.

It has been said that these Commissioners employ the $5,000 appropriated to their use largely for the purpose of maintaining a home office. From the time of the inception of this body down to the present, covering a quarter of a century, they have of course maintained an organization; they have had a president and a secretary; they have conducted their business in a businesslike way.

It has been absolutely indispensable that they should have an office. The secretary whom they have appointed and who has been paid for his services, has earned every dollar of the money paid him. It is an easy thing for gentlemen to stand here and say that this office is a sinecure, and that this man has been paid extravagantly, as did the gentleman from Georgia; but it is a much more difficult thing to prove any such statement. Dogmatism is one thing, and evidence is another. I assert that it is necessary that this Commission in the proper discharge of its duties should have an extensive correspondence; and its secretary is employed a large portion of his time in that correspondence. His other labors are arduous and require intelligence and discrimination. Even while we are discussing this very matter he is to-day absent upon important business connected with the Commission.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the time has not passed when this Commission can be useful. If it has done so much in the past in the way of elevating the service, have we not the right to expect it still to do good in the future? It is not claimed that the Indian service is now perfected—that there are no defects to be ferreted out, no wrongs to be remedied. And in the work of still further improving this service, upon what class of people can we better rely than upon intelligent, conscientious, and philanthropic citizens who work for their love of the business, and who, giving freely of their time and talents to the work, only ask that the Government shall pay their necessary expenses?

It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that it would be a reproach upon Congress if we should refuse this appropriation. I understand there is no opposition to it by the Secretary of the Interior or the Indian Commissioner. I understand that from those sources this Commission is commended; that its services are regarded as valuable to the Government. Such being the case, the amount of the appropriation being only $5,000—a mere drop in the bucket, a mere bagatelle—it would be to me perfectly amazing if the American Congress should decline to make the appropriation when this money, properly expended, as it would be, tends so much to promote the good of the country and the benefit of the Indian service. I can scarcely deem it possible that this House will consent to such a line of conduct. I earnestly insist that the appropriation shall be inserted, and that this Commission shall not be destroyed in this unfair and left-handed way.

In conclusion, I ask leave to have read at the Clerk's desk a communication addressed to me recently by a committee of the Society of the Indiana Yearly Meeting of Friends, assembled at Richmond, Ind., in my district. This communication covers the subject I have been discussing so fully and ably that I hope the House will indulge me in having it read.

The Clerk read as follows:

RICHMOND, IND., June 2, 1894.

ESTEEMED REPRESENTATIVE: The committee on philanthropic labor of Indiana Yearly Meeting now in session in this city desire to call thy attention to certain proposed actions of the Appropriation Committee of Congress, one of which is the omitting of the usual appropriation to defray the expenses of the Board of Indian Commissioners.

This Board was established at the earnest recommendation of President Grant and is a part of his favorite "peace policy" toward the Indians. He believed that honest dealing with these unlettered children of the forest was the first requisite in gaining their confidence in order to promote their welfare and civilization.

The Commissioners give their services without compensation, and the small sum of $5,000 is for their actual expenses in visiting the agencies; in having the reservations allotted in severalty where practicable; in securing impartiality in the reception of bids and the allotment of contracts for supplies, and, most important of all, a rigid inspection of goods after delivery in a Government warehouse, so as to secure goods equal to the samples offered and to save large sums of money to the Government. At their instance the great principle of giving land in severalty to the Indians has been adopted and the retention of the tribal relations discouraged.

To those who are familiar with the methods in vogue in the Indian Department prior to the creation of this Commission, who can recall the partnerships between agents and traders and contractors, the overestimates of weight of cattle, the blank vouchers filled up with fraudulent sums, the false names carried upon pay rolls, the payment of employés for whom there was no employment, the payment of others at higher or lower salaries than provided by law for the purpose of embezzling the difference, the farming out of appointments controlled by agents, and the selling of their own goods to the Indians, with other like fraudulent schemes—the abolition of the Commission which has inaugurated and secured such vast reforms is hardly short of the grossest folly, unless it could be urged that their services are no longer needed.

Such an argument can not possibly be used at the present time. They still perform the services for which they were appointed; they still attend the opening of bids for contracts, which, through their services, are now open to all, so that in 1892 there were more than five hundred bids, instead of about forty in 1870; they still make visits to the reservations, and, being absolutely untrammeled by any of the traditions of the Indian Department, or any subservience to those in authority, they are enabled to examine, investigate, and criticise with perfect impartiality whatever they may see in the Indian service worthy either of commendation or condemnation.

We earnestly hope thee will make hearty protest against the practical abolishment of the Board of Indian Commissioners. We also desire to enter our protest and ask thy help in opposing the proposed reduction of the salaries of Indian agents. They earn little enough to secure the services of such men as are required for the delicate, and sometimes heroic, service which they have to perform. We understand that a reduction of from 10 to 20 per cent in these already meager salaries is proposed. The saving to the country of this insignificant sum is as nothing compared to the dangers to which the whole country is exposed by the enforced retirement of good agents, who can not be expected to remain at such reduced salaries, and the substitution for them of incompetent and second-rate men.

We hope thee may find it consistent with thy sense of duty to join us in this protest. We also wish to earnestly protest against the proposed reduction of the salary of the superintendent of Indian schools from $3,000 to $2,500. The original salary attached to this position was $3,500. This was reduced last year to $3,000. To reduce the amount still further this year would seem to indicate that those who have failed in their purpose to abolish this post altogether are determined to cripple its usefulness by attaching such meager compensation to it that the superintendency will be untenable to any man whose experience and ability fit him to fill it.

Thy friend,

AARON MORRIS,
Clerk of the Committee.
(Address, Milton, Wayne County, Ind.)

HENRY U. JOHNSON, M. C., Washington, D. C.

Before the reading of the foregoing communication was concluded—

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana (when his time had expired). I ask unanimous consent that, without any deduction from the time allowed for this debate, the reading of this communication be finished. I am satisfied it tends to the enlightenment of the House.

Mr. MADDOX. How long will it take to finish it?

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Not more than three or four minutes.

Mr. MADDOX. We may have some communications on this side that we want to have read.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I shall have no objection to their being read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that his time be extended long enough for the Clerk to finish the reading of the communication which has been sent to the desk.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I object.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I hope the gentleman will not insist on his objection. This is a very clear and succinct statement, tending to the enlightenment of the House. The reading can be finished in two or three minutes.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I withdraw the objection.

There being no further objection, the Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the communication.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I find in reading the report upon this bill that no reference whatever has been made to the proposed abolishment of the Indian Commission, either under the statute or the appropriation bill; nor have any reasons been given why this Commission, which has been in existence for almost a quarter of a century, should be abolished at the present time. I am free to say the statements or arguments made by gentlemen having charge of this bill have failed to convince me as to the wisdom of this proposed legislation.

It is always the rule, accepted in this House, when consideration is asked for important legislation, the expressions of the Department having the supervision of such legislation should be heard upon the floor; and yet in the proposition submitted by the gentleman neither in the report of the Secretary of the Interior nor in the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs is there any reference, by letter or otherwise, wherein this radical change is recommended. This Commission consists of a number of gentlemen—ten, I think—who perform and have performed a valuable service. They are recognized in my community as having done so, and that is my reason for asking the attention of the committee in this debate.

There is in my city a large element of Quaker people, whose views and charitable acts towards the Indians have been well recognized for many years by all the people of this country. Perhaps no Christian or religious sect ever covered in sympathy a wider field of earnest work in regard to the care of the Indians, as the wards of the nation, than have these citizens who form so large, respectable, and influential an element of the community I have the honor to represent. They, with one voice, appeal to me to utter my protest against the change proposed by the abolition of the Indian Commission, together with other changes of cutting down the privileges of the educational clauses in the statute and limitedly appropriated for in this bill.

In view of the provisions of the bill, they are much exercised as to the future care of the Indian, in whom they have felt such a generous and philanthropic interest. Therefore I say to the gentleman that amongst the best friends of the Indians in this country that great Quaker sect is preëminent, and certainly if not the best, at least the most active and watchful in their work; and they have with one voice appealed to me to lay the petition, the prayer, and protest, however humble on my part, or however effective or ineffective it may be, before this House in condemnation of the proposed changes in this legislation.

Everyone knows the character of the gentlemen constituting this Commission. The reading of their report will show the valuable aid that they have rendered not only to the Indian Bureau but to the Indians themselves within the last twenty-five years. And whether the motive that prompted Gen. Grant in the selection of the Commission is such as has been stated by the gentleman from New York, which I do not concur in, I believe its origin to be just as Gen. Grant stated it when he believed it wise to organize the Commission. He said:

From the foundation of the Government to the present the management of the original inhabitants of this continent, the Indian, has been a subject of embarrassment and expense, and has been attended with continuous robberies, murders, and wars. From my own experience upon the frontiers and in Indian countries, I do not hold either legislation or the conduct of the whites who come most in contact with the Indians blameless for these hostilities. The past, however, can not be undone, and the question must be met as we now find it. I have adopted a new policy toward these wards of the nation (they can not be regarded in any other light than as wards), with fair results so far as tried, and which I hope will be attended ultimately with great success.

That the purposes of the Commission as created have been in many respects completed, there is no question. But the field of their watchfulness and the limit of their usefulness, with reference to subsistence, together with the expenditure of several millions of dollars annually, educational matters and things of that character, have not been exhausted. The consideration of educational questions, covering tens of thousands of families, are of vast importance; and their services will be required in the future in that connection; there seems to be no two sides. These gentlemen are nonpartisan. They stand as far as they can as a breakwater against any effort to make this service partisan, and by their efforts the great body of the subordinate force employed is to-day under the rules of the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. Chairman, I present the wishes, as I have said, of a large portion of my community in entering my protest, not only against this feature of the bill, but wherever in it there has been a reduction made of the appropriations for compensation to the subordinate officers and teachers and others connected with this service, and I protest against any effort or legislation which seeks to reduce the appropriations for this important service below what may be absolutely necessary. I hope it will be the wise conclusion of this House to continue the policy that has been so successful during the last quarter of a century.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. BROOKSHIRE having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 1127) for the relief of Francis M. Tomlin.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 203) for the relief of John F. W. Detto;

A bill (S. 686) to amend an act entitled "An act to divide the judicial district of North Dakota," and to provide for the fees and compensation of the officers of the circuit and district courts of the said judicial district;

A bill (S. 1319) for the relief of E. Douglass, late Indian agent at White Earth Indian Agency; and

A bill (S. 1483) to correct the military record of Elisha B. Bassett.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee again resumed its session, Mr. ONEIL of Massachusetts in the chair.

Mr. EVERETT. Mr. Chairman, I can hardly think that the force of the argument that I have furnished from the statutes of 1878, is invalidated by the fact that a subsequent appropriation bill modified the powers of the commissioners. It has been maintained by the Committee on Indian Affairs, as I understand it, that the commissioners were constituted for a temporary purpose, and owed their existence almost entirely to their recognition by the various successive appropriation bills which provided for their support. The fact is that the same Revised Statutes, which have been appealed to as a justification for docking the pay of members, and are held to be permanent in that respect, also recognize this Commission as a permanent arm of the Government, shows that they did depend for their existence on something more than mere appropriation bills, and also that they were constituted for something more than a mere temporary purpose.

With regard to the services they have rendered I have nothing to add to what has already been said by the gentleman from New York, the gentleman from Indiana, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania. But I do say this, that I shall vote for the restoration of the appropriation for their expenses, because I find that item in the estimates for the Indian service, and because I believe that these estimates were cut down to the very lowest possible point that is justifiable in view of our relations to the Indians themselves. The end of this bill shows that the estimates for 1895 were $900,000 less than in the preceding bill. That is a sufficient cut, and I hold that when the committee try to cut a little nearer the bone by reducing the estimates $320,000 more, it is an unworthy attempt to reduce farther what has been already cut down to the lowest admissible point.

I do not agree with the chairman of the committee that the Committee on Indian Affairs of this House is as good a judge of the needs of the Indians as the Department of the Interior. I propose to vote for this amendment, and I propose, with possibly some exceptions, to vote for any amendment that will restore the estimates of the Department of the Interior, and not to go in for this unnecessary, uncalled for, and unworthy cut which is proposed by the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. COOMBS. Mr. Chairman, I ask the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs to give me three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that there are but two minutes left on that side of the question.

Mr. MADDOX. Has the time on the other side been exhausted?

The CHAIRMAN. Two minutes are left, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. COOMBS] is recognized for two minutes.

Mr. COOMBS. Mr. Chairman, I simply want to cover the business reason for the continuance of this Commission. I know two of the gentlemen who compose the Commission, Mr. Lyon and Mr. James. I have been very frequently in the department in New York, and have seen these gentlemen examining samples of goods with as much carefulness and particularity as though they related to purchases for their own account. They are men of a great deal of leisure, and I know that this to them is a labor of love. I know that by their close scrutiny of the purchases of the Government, and of the contracts, the Government saves many times the amount of the expenses of the whole Commission. Anything else that the Commission may do for the benefit of the Indians is clear gain.

Both these gentlemen whom I have mentioned are experienced in the department of goods that they undertake to examine. I know that they save the Government money, I know that they are honest, and I know that their methods are fair. I know that they introduce honest methods for the government of others. Therefore I shall vote for the continuation of the appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. There are but five minutes remaining, and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] has control of the time.

Mr. HOLMAN. I yield the remainder of the time to the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, having lived many years in the very shadow of an Indian reservation, and having in my district as many Indians and as varied tribes as are to be found in any part of this country, I have failed, in my experience of some fourteen years among them, to see any good of any kind resulting from this Commission. I do not know a member of the Commission who lives on the other side of the Rocky Mountains. I do not know any one of them that ever saw an Indian until he was appointed a Commissioner. And yet this is stated by the gentleman from New York to be a labor of love—a labor of love conditioned on $5,000, half of which is to be expended for a secretary, who, according to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. MADDOX] does not perform probably ten days' work in a year.

I will tell you the service of this Commission. It is, as every one on the Committee on Indian Affairs knows, to stand as a block between everything that is attempted by the Government for the amelioration of the condition of the Indians; to make technical quibbles over every contract made for the Indians; to look at supplies. I am not questioning the honesty of any of these men, and it is not necessary to question the honesty of any of them, but I wish to say to this committee that experience has demonstrated that the most dangerous thing on the face of the earth is sincere, ignorant honesty, applied to a thing that they know nothing about. It has been stated that they supervised these contracts, and what is the result of the supervision?

Mr. COOMBS. They save money there.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I will tell the gentleman how they saved it in one instance. The year before last, at the San Carlos Reservation, there was a bid from Arizona to furnish flour and the samples sent here and inspected by the Commission, as I am informed—I do not state that they examined those samples, but if they are as zealous as the gentleman from New York states, they did examine them——

Mr. COOMBS. They are zealous.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Then they examined into this matter, for it was one of the biggest contracts in that country; and the flour furnished was sent from Chicago, at a higher price, and the quality was absolutely inferior; and that is a sample of the work of this Commission, whose members live on the edge of Newfoundland, and Nantucket, and the northeast extremity of the United States of America. Think of their handling a question that lies down on the Gulf of California. And with all the Indian Commissioners, and with all the Indian inspectors, not one man among all of them, as far as I know, ever saw an Indian in his life until he held the office.

Mr. LUCAS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Yes.

Mr. LUCAS. In your long experience among the Indians did you ever know of any one of this Commission that ever came West to inspect the delivery of cattle or horses to these Indians?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I never heard of one of them; and that leads to this suggestion. They are never there to do any of that inspecting——

Mr. HOLMAN. That is under the charge of an officer of the Army.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I was going to say that was all provided for. Now, we do not propose, as suggested by my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM], to abolish this Commission. The bill leaves the Commission just as it was when it was started.

Mr. BINGHAM. Ask the gentleman from Indiana if we have not already passed a paragraph which does that.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona (to Mr. HOLMAN). Does the bill abolish it?

Mr. HOLMAN. We simply drop the salary.

Mr. EVERETT. If the gentleman will read lines 12 and 13 he will see.

Mr. BINGHAM. The gentleman stated this morning that it practically abolished the Commission.

Mr. HOLMAN. On page 7 the provision is made that all officers of the Indian service not herein provided for are hereby abolished.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I ask that the time of the gentleman be extended five minutes.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. With five minutes on the other side.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. You have already had twenty minutes, and we have had only ten.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. With five minutes on this side, if desired.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Arizona be extended for five minutes, with five minutes on the other side, if desired.

There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, I have not seen any of this Commission at all yet deliver any of these goods. I have never heard of any of them being present, and the very purpose for which this Board was originally organized, as suggested by the gentleman, has entirely passed away. There is not an Indian reservation that is not approachable easily. In the olden time it was a difficult matter to get there. It was alleged, and justly alleged, that the same hundred head of cattle would be delivered to the Indians twenty times. That is impossible now, for the people around these Indian reservations, crowding them closer and closer, and the provision made in this bill, as suggested by the chairman of the committee, fills every single position that this Commission could possibly be organized for. Then, why give $5,000, $2,500 of which goes for clerical hire, to that Commission.

Now, let us see how it performs its duties. I read from page 9 of the Twenty-fifth Annual Report of the Board of Commission:

On the 16th of May the Board met at the Indian warehouse, New York, to witness the Commissioner of Indian Affairs in the opening of bids and the awarding of contracts for Indian goods and subsistence, supplies.

How long an investigation was this—to look at the contracts? I guess there is where the service was.

Mr. COOMBS. And to examine the samples and see that they were up to the contract.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I did not know that you were upon the Commission; if I had known you belonged to it I would have had you interpolate that.

Mr. COOMBS. That is what they do.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona:

In accordance with the method practiced for several years, the proposals, four hundred and fifty-eight in number, were read in the presence of many contractors. The samples of clothing, dry goods, shoes, hardware, flour, coffee, tea, and other supplies were inspected——

Mr. MADDOX. With the aid of experts.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona (continuing reading).

with the aid of experts in each line.

By the aid of experts at this particular warehouse; and you had just as well trust to the delivery of those goods by that sample as you would in buying a box of strawberries on the street believing that the good ones were at the bottom of the box. [Laughter.] These gentlemen make an inspection, and simply do it by the aid of experts that are provided for, and who attend to this duty. It is simply throwing away the money, as more than a million is thrown away, as I shall show before we get through with this bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. The experts are appointed by the Indian Office.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. These are the men that are doing all this work for love. It is not worth any more than the love they give it. [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, I consider it an absolute waste of money. These gentlemen can go out, and when they are doing right, God bless them—they can go out and make an inspection of these samples without spending this $5,000. We never find them there making an inspection to see if the goods are delivered as per sample, and we have no doubt they feel an interest in the matter at the opening of the bids, especially from the fact that the contract originates somewhere in the neighborhood of the residence of the Commissioners, and at least I do not see any use of it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Does the gentleman mean to insinuate that there is the least breath of suspicion of misconduct upon the part of the Commissioners in respect to the contracts?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Not at all; but I do wish to suggest this to the gentleman from Indiana: that I know that if to-morrow a contract was to be given out and one of his constituents was a bidder, that he would be inclined to give it to his district rather than see it go to an outsider.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. But most of these supply goods are inspected in New York and Chicago, and would you have the President go west of the Rocky Mountains in order to select the Commissioners for their inspection?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I would see that the goods are carried out there according to the samples.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Does the gentleman know that none of the Commission are present on the numerous occasions when the goods were inspected?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. They can not know that they are the same goods without they have examined the samples.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Does not the gentleman know that when the supplies are delivered in some parts of the country they have been present?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. That may be true. I do not think they have any decided claim for existence. I know something about this system, and have seen something of it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. What does the gentleman know about this system? How much is mere statement and how much actual knowledge?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. How much do you know about it?

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I have talked some with members of the Commission; I have talked with the Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs; I have talked with officials of the Indian Bureau; and I learned something from all of these sources and from various official reports.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Oh, yes.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. COOMBS. I ask that the gentleman's time be extended so as to enable him to answer questions.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I would like to hear the amendment read.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 22, page 7, insert: For the expenses of the commission of citizens serving without compensation appointed by the President under the provisions of the fourth section of the act of April 10, 1869, $5,000.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, to that amendment there is no point of order. It speaks for itself and involves an expenditure of $5,000 only. It refers to the fourth section of the act of April 10, 1869, which I hold in my hand, and which will give the scope of the authority of the President under that appropriation and of the Commission. Section 4 of the act of April 10, 1869, provides as follows:

That there be appropriated the further sum of $2,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to enable the President to maintain the peace among and with the various tribes, bands, and parties of Indians, and to promote civilization among said Indians, bring them, where practicable, upon reservations, relieve their necessities, and encourage their efforts at self-support; a report of all expenditures under this appropriation to be made in detail to Congress in December next. And for the purpose of enabling the President to execute the powers conferred by this act, he is hereby authorized, at his discretion, to organize a board of commissioners, to consist of not more than ten persons, to be selected by him from men eminent for their intelligence and philanthropy, to serve without pecuniary compensation, who may, under his direction, exercise joint control with the Secretary of the Interior over the disbursement of the appropriations made by this act, or any part thereof, that the President may designate.

Then it appropriates to pay the expenses of this Commission $25,000, and authorizes the employment of a clerk.

Mr. HOLMAN. All of which has long since been spent.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Certainly it has been spent. But this appropriation provided for in this amendment refers to that section of the act of 1869, and in the act itself you find the scope of the authority of the President and of the Commissioners. Now, the President has the right to utilize these Commissioners to act jointly with the Secretary of the Interior. They act substantially without expense, and I take it that we shall be slow, in a bill which carries $7,000,000, to dispense with the services of these ten men in the name of economy, when their services are donated to the Government, and when, in fact, for a quarter of a century their services have substituted honesty and economy in the Indian service for extravagance and dishonesty. [Applause.]

Mr. MADDOX. Does not the gentleman know that that law of 1869 has been modified, and there is no such power now vested in this Commission?

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. But this amendment appropriates money, and in controlling the expenditure of that money, adopts section 4 of the act of 1869, by which the President can direct this Commission when and where they shall supervene.

Mr. MADDOX. If that be true I make the point of order that the amendment is new legislation. It is not the law as it now stands.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. The point of order comes too late. The amendment has been discussed, and besides, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] expressly stated that he did not feel at liberty to make the point of order. It is precisely the same statute that we have for the current year.

Mr. MADDOX. It is the same statute. The statute the gentleman has quoted requires these Commissioners to report to the President, and gives them equal authority with the Secretary of the Interior. The statute of 1871 repeals that, and gives the Secretary of the Interior entire control over the matter, and requires the Commission to report to him, and that is the law as it stands now if it stands at all.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. The appropriation speaks for itself. As to the question of reporting, that is not material. As to their power, it is limited by section 4 of the act of 1869.

The CHAIRMAN. The time for debate has expired. Does the Chair understand the gentleman to press the point of order?

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. It is too late.

Mr. HOLMAN. I stated that I would not make the point of order.

Mr. BINGHAM. I just wish to state to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. MADDOX] that the amendment is word for word the same as the provision in the act of the current year.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. CANNON of Illinois, the Chairman declared that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I ask for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 46, noes 65.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. No quorum, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of no quorum being made, the Chair will appoint to act as tellers the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JOHNSON] and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN].

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 59, noes 79.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of no quorum being made, the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll, and the following-named members failed to respond:

The roll call being concluded, the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. O'NEIL of Massachusetts reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union having had under consideration House bill No. 6913 (the Indian appropriation bill), had found itself without a quorum, whereupon the chairman had directed the roll to be called, and now reported the names of the absentees.

The SPEAKER. In accordance with the rule, the names of the absentees will be entered on the Journal. One hundred and eighty-five members have answered to their names. A quorum having responded, the Committee of the Whole, in obedience to the rule, resumes its session without a motion.

The Committee of the Whole having resumed its session,

The CHAIRMAN. The tellers will resume their places; and the question will be again taken.

The question was again taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 67, noes 112.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For contingencies of the Indian service, including traveling and incidental expenses of Indian agents, and of their offices, and of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, also traveling and incidental expenses of five special agents, at $3 per day when actually employed on duty in the field, exclusive of transportation and sleeping-car fare, in lieu of all other expenses now authorized by law; for pay of employés not otherwise provided for, and for pay of five special agents, at $2,000 per annum each, $40,000.

Mr. BOWERS of California. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, in line 4, page 8, by striking out the word "five" and insert in lieu thereof the word "three," and in line 8, same paragraph, strike out the word "five" and insert the word "three," and in line 9, same paragraph, strike out the word "forty" and insert in lieu thereof the words "thirty-five."

Mr. BOWERS of California. Mr. Chairman, the object of this amendment is to reduce the number of these special agents from five to three, and to make a corresponding decrease in the appropriation. I started in this morning to get some information. When I asked the gentlemen who are very desirous to have this Commission maintained as to the powers and duties of the Commission and what it has done, the answer came a little slowly at first; but as the gentlemen began to refer to the books and to compile and collate the various items of information which they individually possessed, they finally got at a statement of what the duties of this Commission are.

I find that among these duties is that of inspecting goods purchased under contract and supervising their delivery. I asked my questions especially with reference to inspection and delivery. Now, we have already provided in this bill for five inspectors; and here is a provision for five special agents in addition. This duty of inspection appears to run through the whole business. The head of the Department, the Secretary of the Interior, does something in the way of inspection; then under him is the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, who is another inspector; then we have ten commissioners to inspect, and five Indian inspectors, and then these five Indian agents. So that we have in all about twenty-two inspectors.

Now, I want to read something showing the value of the inspection we have had in this service which it is claimed has been so creditably and so honestly performed. I read from the proceedings of a board of survey convened at Rosebud Agency, S. Dak. The report is dated March 13, 1892:

Upon the request of United States Indian Agent J. George Wright, the board was constituted as follows:

Capt. J. M. Lee, Ninth Infantry.
A. Judson Morris, M. D., agency physician.
Egbert J. De Bell, M. D., trader.

* * * * * * * *

The board finds that a large quantity of this bacon, 200,000 pounds, was received in March and April, 1890.

* * * * * * * *

The bacon has been sorted out in three lots.

* * * * * * * *

The board finds that the first lot of bacon, about 12,800 pounds, while not of the first-class quality, is issuable.

Second. That the second lot of bacon, of about 27,000 pounds, is not issuable in its entirety, because of its moldy and rancid condition, and because of "skippers" which numerously abound on the outside. By trimming off about one-third of the outside the remainder can be issued.

Third. The third lot, consisting of 245 sides and weighing actually 21,650 pounds, the board regards as totally unfit for issue.

This bacon is covered and permeated by "skippers," is discolored throughout, rancid, and unfit to be eaten by any human being, and in the opinion of the board none of this lot should be issued.

* * * * * * *

Then this report goes on to show why this bacon was in this condition. The board says that the bacon thus put up was the large heavy sides in which the shoulder bones were included, so that, of course, it could not keep. And this is only a specimen of the efficient manner in which inspections are made. Notwithstanding these twenty-two inspectors, the Secretary of the Interior, the Indian Commissioner, these ten good Christian gentlemen (I believe one member referred to them as being in search of pure religion), five Indian inspectors, and five special agents, this skippery bacon passed the inspection. It would appear that we want about twenty-five more inspectors, possibly five hundred more, in order to prevent such unsuitable supplies being furnished. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee in charge of this bill, whether these Indian Commissioners ordered that rancid bacon issued.

[Here the hammer fell].

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. BOWERS of California, it was rejected, there being ayes 7, noes 77.

The Clerk read as follows:

CITIZEN BAND OF POTTAWATOMIES.

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay to the Citizen Band of Pottawatomie Indians, or expend for their benefit, the sum of $13,981.68, now on the books of the Treasury, and being the unexpended balance of the appropriation to carry out the provisions of the agreement between the United States and said band of Indians, ratified and confirmed by act of Congress approved March 3, 1891.

Mr. FLYNN. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 25, insert after the word "ninety-one," in line 17, the following:

"Provided, That the restrictions in patents issued to the Citizen Band of Pottawatomies and absentee Shawnee Indians over 21 years of age, are hereby waived, subject to such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior on lands in Oklahoma, it being understood that they shall only dispose of lands which they hold in excess of 80 acres each; except, where said Indians are nonresidents of Oklahoma, they shall have the power to sell all of said lands."

Mr. FLYNN. Mr. Chairman, there are a great many of these Indians who have lands allotted to them in my Territory——

Mr. HOLMAN. Until I have had an opportunity to consult with some of my associates on the committee, I wish to reserve a point of order on this amendment. I do not make any point at present.

Mr. FLYNN. Many members of this Citizens band of Pottawatomie Indians, who have taken allotments in what is known as Pottawatomie County, in my Territory, do not reside upon these lands, but are residents of Kansas. Many of them, by their appearance, one would not be able to distinguish as having Indian blood in their veins. They are engaged in various avocations of life; and as they do not reside among us, it is desirable that so far as practicable there should be some disposition made of these lands, as otherwise they can not be taxed for twenty-five years.

I introduced a bill for this purpose, which was referred to the Indian Department and received its recommendation. About one-half of Pottawatomie County is made up of lands held in allotment by members of various tribes of Indians. But those in particular who do not reside in the Territory, not occupying the lands, who are capable of maintaining themselves, and do maintain themselves elsewhere, should have the right, in the judgment of the Indian Office, or Congress should grant them the right, to dispose of the lands in Oklahoma, the deeds to be subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Under what limitation does the gentleman propose to sell the lands?

Mr. FLYNN. Under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. LYNCH. How much land is involved in this amendment?

Mr. FLYNN. About 50,000 acres.

Mr. LYNCH. Held by the Indians?

Mr. FLYNN. Yes, sir.

Mr. LYNCH. Where do they live?

Mr. FLYNN. Some of them there, but a great many in Kansas.

Mr. LYNCH. Have they allotments now?

Mr. FLYNN. Some of them have, but quite a number about thirty years ago bought the lands from the Government at a certain price per acre.

Mr. LYNCH. And they ask for this legislation?

Mr. FLYNN. Yes, sir; I have petition after petition asking for it. They own large tracts of land down there in Oklahoma, and they are living in Kansas. They are not leasing the lands or using them in any way, and we are unable now to raise money enough by taxation on actual settlers to pay the running expenses of the county.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Is not that largely due to the fact that the settlements there are of very recent date, the Territory being new, and things have scarcely established themselves as yet upon a permanent footing?

Mr. FLYNN. Well, these lands have been opened up since 1891. A bill for this purpose was referred to the Indian Office, reported upon favorably, and I herewith attach the report of said office in relation thereto:

H. R. bill 6543 provides that any member of the Sac and Fox tribe and of the Citizen Band of Pottawatomies and of the Absentee Shawnee Indians of Oklahoma, being over the age of 21 years, and an allottee of lands under any agreement between the United States and the tribe or band of which such person shall be a member, or under any act of Congress, may appear by petition in any district court of said Territory, asking that all restrictions upon the taxation and alienation of such allotments, excepting 80 acres thereof, shall be removed, and if upon the hearing of such petition it shall appear that the petitioner is a person of sufficient education, intelligence, and experience to manage with prudence his business affairs, the court may, in its discretion, order that all restriction be removed upon the taxation and alienation of all the lands allotted to said petitioner, excepting 80 acres thereof, such finding and order to be entered of record, and whenever a copy thereof shall be recorded in the office of the register of deeds of the county in which the land is situated, the lands therein named may be listed for taxation and the allottee shall be invested with a title in fee simple to the lands so allotted to him, excepting the 80 acres above named: Provided, That in the case of a member of the Citizen Band of Pottawatomies who shall be a nonresident of the Territory and who shall be over the age of 21 years, the court in its discretion may order such restriction to be removed from all of the lands in said Territory allotted to such person.

So far as the Sac and Foxes are concerned, I do not think the proposed legislation is necessary or desirable. By the agreement concluded with said Indians, ratified by the act of Congress approved February 13, 1891 (26 Stats., 749), it was provided that 80 acres of the land allotted to each allottee should be held in trust by the United States for a period of twenty-five years, and that the other 80 acres should be so held in trust for the period of five years, or, if the President of the United States will consent, for fifteen years, at the expiration of which periods, respectively, the United States is to convey the same by patent to said allottee or his heirs in fee. Patents were issued to the Sac and Fox Indians on the 11th of September, 1891, so that the restriction upon the taxation and alienation of 80 acres of their lands will expire in a little over two years, unless the President should extend the time. For this reason I do not think it advisable to legislate in regard to the removal of the restrictions upon the sale of lands patented to these Indians.

So far as the Pottawatomies and Shawnees are concerned, I see no objection to allowing them to dispose of the lands in excess of 80 acres each, as I believe that this is a sufficient quantity of land for any Indian to cultivate. The plan proposed in the bill, however, does not meet with my approval. I think this Department should retain the right to determine whether any allottee should sell his land and to see that he receives a sufficient consideration for the sale of any land allotted him. I have therefore prepared the draft of a substitute for H. R. 6543, providing that any member of the Citizen Band of Pottawatomie Indians and of the Absentee Shawnee Indians of Oklahoma, to whom a trust patent has been issued under the provisions of the act approved February 8, 1887 (24 Stats., 388), and being over 21 years of age, may sell and convey any portion of the land covered by such patent in excess of 80 acres, the deed of conveyance to be subject to approval by the Secretary of the Interior under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, and that any Citizen Pottawatomie not residing upon his allotment, but being a legal resident of another State or Territory, may in like manner sell and convey all the land covered by said patent, and that upon the approval of such deed by the Secretary of the Interior the title to the land thereby conveyed shall vest in the grantee therein named. At the expiration of the trust period the fee-simple title to be issued to any such allottee or his heirs shall convey so much of the land described in the trust patent issued to such allottee as shall not have been conveyed under the foregoing provision.

I have also added section 2, providing that the land sold and conveyed under the provisions of the act shall upon proper recording of the deeds therefor, be subject to taxation as other lands in said Territory, but that neither the lands covered by such patents not sold and conveyed under the provisions of the act, nor any improvements made thereon, shall be subject to taxation in any manner by the Territorial or local authorities during the period in which said lands shall be held in trust by the United States.

It is claimed that there are a number of Citizen Pottawatomies who reside in the State of Kansas and are well to do. The lands allotted them in Oklahoma are of no use to them and for that reason it is thought that they should be allowed to sell all of the lands, if they so desire. If such sale is made, subject to the supervision of the Secretary of the Interior, I have no objection to such course. The Territorial authorities are attempting to tax the improvements of Indians upon their allotted lands held in trust by the United States. I do not think that such taxation is legal or proper, and have accordingly added a provision to that effect in the bill under consideration.

I return the letter of Mr. Mendenhall and the accompanying bills.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant.

D. M. BROWNING, Commissioner.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I suggest to the gentleman from Oklahoma that he allow this to pass over in its present condition; that is to say, that he offers the amendment, has made his statement, and the question of order is reserved upon it; then I will ask unanimous consent to go back to this paragraph at the proper time.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. WILSON of Washington. The gentleman from Indiana says he will ask unanimous consent to go back to this paragraph at the proper time. Now, Mr. Chairman, it is very possible that he could not obtain that consent; and I think it is no more than fair to the gentleman from Oklahoma, if he withdraws the amendment at this time, that it should be understood, or at least that there is a tacit agreement, that we shall return to this item.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is my proposition. The item is only passed over temporarily, to be recurred to hereafter, and the gentleman's amendment is pending with the point of order against it.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana that the paragraph be passed over with the pending amendment and the point of order reserved?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

For blacksmith and assistant, shops and tools, iron and steel, per fourth article of treaty of July 20, 1831, and fifth article of treaty of February 23, 1867, $530; in all, $1,030.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Eastern Shawnees: This amount to be paid per capita to the Eastern Shawnees under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior and now to their credit in the United States Treasury, being the residue of the sum due by the United States to said Indians for session of lands under the third article of the treaty entered into by said band with the United States, proclaimed October 14, 1868, $9,079.12.

Mr. MORGAN. I offer this letter from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs in explanation of the amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. For the present I shall reserve the question of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The letter to which the gentleman from Missouri refers will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, March 10, 1894.

SIR: I have the honor to submit herewith a letter from the United States Indian agent at Quapaw Agency, Indian Territory, dated the 3d instant, in which he incloses a petition of the Eastern Shawnees addressed to the Congress, praying for the appropriation of the sum of $9,079.12 now to their credit in the United States Treasury.

The petition sets forth that they have taken their allotments, are living upon them, and are greatly in need of money to enable them to buy stock, agricultural implements, to erect houses, and prepare their homes as their white neighbors do.

According to the last census this band numbers 93 souls, and the appropriation asked for would give them a per capita payment of $109.28. In view of the fact that these Indians are poor, and have taken their allotments, I respectfully recommend that the petition be forwarded with the favorable recommendation of the Department. I inclose herewith a proposed amendment to the Indian appropriation bill, providing for the legislation requested.

Very respectfully,

D. M. BROWNING, Commissioner.

The honorable SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

Mr. MORGAN. It will be seen, Mr. Chairman, that this amendment——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana make the point of order?

Mr. HOLMAN. Under the recommendation of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs it would seem to be a proper amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question, then, is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of additional employés at the several agencies for the Sioux in Nebraska and Dakota, $12,500, $800 of which shall be used for the employment of a second blacksmith at Cheyenne River Agency, South Dakota.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of asking the gentleman in charge of this bill a question.

I see that this paragraph provides for the pay of additional employés at the several agencies for the Sioux Indians in Nebraska and Dakota, $12,500. That is a reduction of $7,500 for the current year. This year the appropriation was $20,000. Now, I am not prepared to say that the reduction is not a proper one, nor can I say that it ought not to be twice as great. But I would like to know from the gentleman why he makes it $7,500 less for the coming year than for this year; and then, when he has answered that question, I ask why he did not make twice as much reduction as has been made?

Mr. HOLMAN. I am not able to state the exact conditions on which that change was made; but I shall have no objection to going back to it after I inquire into the facts. The consideration of this bill was begun away back last January, and a good many of the facts have passed out of mind.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Then there is unanimous consent to return to this paragraph?

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly; there will be no objection to that.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. We have changed so many things in the bill since we first started that nobody can remember them.

The CHAIRMAN. Has the gentleman from Illinois any request to make?

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] asks that we pass this paragraph, with an agreement that we return to it after the reading of the bill is concluded.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it would be well for the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] or the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] to make the request through the Chair.

Mr. HOLMAN. The request is made, and I hope it will be granted.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. I hope that we shall not have too many paragraphs to go back to when we get through with this bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. This will only take a moment.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. If we do not consider some of these things as we go along, we shall have the whole bill to go over again.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the paragraph will be considered as passed over.

There was no objection.

The Clerk, resuming the reading of the bill, read as follows:

For subsistence of the Sioux and for purposes of their civilization, as per agreement ratified by act of Congress approved February 28, 1877, $1,000,000: Provided, That this sum shall include transportation of supplies from the termination of railroad or steamboat transportation; and in this service Indians shall be employed whenever practicable: And provided further, That the number of rations issued shall not exceed the number of Indians on each reservation, and any excess in the number of rations issued shall be disallowed in the settlement of the agent's account.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, there is an item in this paragraph which I wish to ask about. In lines 17 and 18, on page 32, there is an appropriation, in pursuance of treaty, of $1,000,000 for the subsistence of the Sioux and for purposes of their civilization. The appropriation for the current year is $1,150,000, and this is a reduction of $150,000. I wish to ask why this reduction is made?

Mr. HOLMAN. I think it is according to the estimate.

Mr. LYNCH. Yes; there is a reduction of $150,000 in the estimate.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. For what reason? Are these Indians on the decrease?

Mr. LYNCH. I can not give you any reason, except that that is the amount called for in the estimate.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is the estimate. The cost of maintaining these Indians is very large, and the estimate has been reduced.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Then, that is the explanation of the reduction? I noticed that it was a large reduction, and I did not know why it was.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

For support and maintenance of day and industrial schools, including erection and repairs of school buildings, in accordance with article 7 of treaty of April 29, 1868, which article is continued in force for twenty years by section 17 of the act of March 2, 1889, $80,000; in all $1,395,600.

Mr. PICKLER. I desire to offer an amendment.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Amend by adding at the end of line 13, page 33, the following:

"Provided, That when in pursuance of any treaty an appropriation has been heretofore made to erect schoolhouses for the accommodation of children of any tribe of Sioux Indians, out of any fund belonging to said Indians, which appropriation is still in force, the Secretary of the Interior shall proceed as early as practicable to erect such school building."

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I hope there will be an explanation of this amendment. I do not understand its terms.

Mr. PICKLER. This takes nothing out of the Treasury, and it is not new legislation. It simply provides that where by an act of Congress schoolhouses have been ordered to be built for any tribe of the Sioux Indians, to be paid for out of their money, the Secretary of the Interior shall proceed to build these schoolhouses. An appropriation was made some two years ago to build two such schoolhouses in my State. The schoolhouses are needed, and yet for some reason or other the building of them has not been proceeded with. One of them is to be built at Chamberlain, S. Dak., and one at Rapid City, S. Dak., near large bands of the Sioux Indians.

All that is asked by this amendment is that the Secretary of the Interior shall carry out the act of Congress; and I think when Congress has ordered the building of a schoolhouse it ought to be proceeded with as early as possible.

Mr. HOLMAN. Have you inquired of the Commissioner to know why the money had not been spent?

Mr. PICKLER. Yes, I have inquired about it. An agent is sent out, and he looks the ground over and makes a report, and talks about changing to another piece of land; and so it is delayed along.

Mr. HOLMAN. As the law stands now it is discretionary with the Commissioner to expend the money, is it not?

Mr. PICKLER. The building of these schoolhouses is directed by an act of Congress. There is no discretion about it, only to carry out the act of Congress.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does the act specify where the schools shall be located?

Mr. PICKLER. Yes, and the amounts to be paid; and they are to be taken out of the funds of the Indians. There is no appropriation out of the Treasury of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of asking the gentleman from Indiana a question about the provision in line 11 of page 23 of the bill, of $80,000 for the support and maintenance of day and industrial schools, including erection and repairs of school buildings, in accordance with the treaty. There was appropriated under that treaty $100,000 for the current year; this bill only carries $80,000. Now, why?

Mr. HOLMAN. Well, certainly; but the language that is in the present law, as well as in the bill, was "for the support and maintenance of day and industrial schools, including the erection and repairs of school buildings." There was a larger appropriation made for the present current year, and a considerable portion of the money has been expended in the erection of buildings; and this is a comparatively slight reduction when that is taken into consideration.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. It is $20,000. The buildings have already, I presume, been furnished.

Mr. HOLMAN. This is fully up to the estimate. A large amount of the expenditure, I think, as will be seen, was for the erection and repair of buildings. I think that the gentleman will find that this is the estimate.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Well, I believe that in this item the full amount ought to be given, because the gentleman will notice that this is an appropriation for day and industrial schools on the reservation under the treaty that we made with the Sioux. I think that is a very valuable kind of school, and it seems to me that if we owe them the money under the treaty that we should be as vigorous as possible in expending it.

Mr. HOLMAN. We do not owe that specific sum. The appropriation is $100,000 for the present current year. I have no doubt that the larger appropriation made for the maintenance of schools and the erection of a school building was due to the necessity for the erection of schoolhouses, and the absence of the latter consideration especially justifies this reduction. I know that this matter was very carefully examined, because the purpose was to be very liberal in this expense, so far as these Indians are concerned.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I will state to the gentleman that I will examine the question before to-morrow, and I will then ask him to return to that paragraph.

Mr. HOLMAN. Perhaps the gentleman from South Dakota can explain it.

Mr. PICKLER. I did not catch the question. I think there will be no objection to returning to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair wants it understood that requests for unanimous consent must be made from the Chair.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Well, I desire to ask unanimous consent to return to this item to-morrow.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that this paragraph be passed over until to-morrow. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

SPOKANES.

For third of ten installments, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, in the removal of the Spokane Indians to the Cœur d'Alene Reservation, in erecting suitable houses, in assisting them in breaking lands, in furnishing them with cattle, seeds, agricultural implements, saw and grist mills, thrashing machines, mowers, clothing, and provisions; in taking care of the old, sick, and infirm; in affording educational facilities, and in any other manner tending to their civilization and self-support, as per article 5 of agreement with said Indians, dated March 18, 1887, ratified by act of Congress approved July 13, 1892, $8,000: Provided, That any moneys heretofore or hereafter to be appropriated for the removal of said Spokane Indians to the Cœur d'Alene Reservation shall be extended or expended to such members of the tribe who have removed or shall remove to the Colville or Jocko Reservations.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. I desire to offer an amendment. It was evidently overlooked in the print of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "Colville," in line 22, page, 34, insert "Spokane;" so as to read: "Colville, Spokane, and Jocko Indian Reservations."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, so as to make an inquiry of the chairman of the committee or the gentleman from Washington about this provision contained in this paragraph, which seems to be a pretty broad proposition:

That any moneys heretofore or hereafter to be appropriated for the removal of the said Spokane Indians to the Cœur d'Alene Reservation shall be extended or expended to such members of the tribe who have removed or shall remove to the Colville or Jocko Reservation.

And now, as amended, the Spokane Reservation. Now, how much would have to be expended for those who have removed, and what is the object of this appropriation?

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. In the Fifty-first Congress legislation was had looking to the removal of the upper and middle bands of the Spokane Indians. The treaty provided that they should be removed to the Cœur d'Alene and Jocko Indian Reservations.

But there were three, four, or five families who wanted to move to the Spokane Reservation, so as to be among their kinsmen. The entire amount appropriated for this purpose was not given in cash to the Indians, as to the Cœur d'Alenes, but it made provision for the purchase of agricultural implements, machinery, building houses, and giving them homes, and teaching them that which was believed to be the proper and legitimate way of civilizing the American Indians, by labor. Now, I have a letter here that I want to read in my time, which will more fully explain the matter than any statement that I can make.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, April 28, 1894.

SIR: On March 12 last, I received by your reference for my consideration, a communication dated February 1, 1894, from C. A. Coulson, master of Union Grange No. 109, Patrons of Husbandry, asking by resolution on behalf of said grange that such action as might be necessary be taken to throw open to settlement the Spokane Indian Reservation, Washington, and reciting in the preamble of the resolution referred to certain reasons for such prayer.

In connection with this subject I have to state that on March 21, 1894, Capt. J. W. Bubb, United States Army, acting Indian agent of the Colville Agency, Fort Spokane, Wash., was instructed to communicate with the Indians of said reservation and advise them of the action taken by the said grange and the desire of certain citizens in that vicinity to have the Spokane Indian Reservation thrown open to settlement.

He was instructed to ascertain from the Indians whether it is their desire to take allotments of land in severalty and then to negotiate with the United States for the surrender of their surplus lands and to report upon this matter his views as to the advisability of appointing a commission to treat with the Indians referred to for the surrender of a portion of their reserve.

I am now in receipt of a communication from the said agent dated the 19th instant, stating that in compliance with said office instructions he called a council of the Lower Spokane Indians, residents of the Spokane Indian Reservation referred to in the said resolution, at which Chief Lot, with his principal headmen and at least two-thirds of the male adults of his tribe, were present; that the resolution and said office letter were carefully interpreted and fully explained to the Indians, as well as the laws governing the allotment of lands in severalty; that after some little discussion they adjourned for a time to talk the matter over among themselves; that upon reassembling Chief Lot announced in open council that it was the unanimous decision that the Indians did not wish to give up any portion of their reservation and take allotments of land in severalty, and that commissioners be not sent to them to negotiate for the disposal of any part of their reservation.

Chief Lot, in announcing the decision in open council reached by the Indians after conference among themselves, spoke as follows:

"This is the land my Father purchased for us from the other tribes of Indians with such money as we had at that time (furs, skins, horses, etc.), in order that his people might have a home and be at peace with all other tribes as well as with the white people. Washington has already taken away from us much of the land my Father purchased, and for which we have never received any money or other consideration. Now, all we have left is this little reservation and it seems that Washington is now after that. This land we now have is small, but it is too dear for us to give it up. We would like Washington to study over this a long time before taking it away from us.

There has never been a thing that Washington has asked us to do but what we have done cheerfully. But this is too much, we can not do it. None of my people know anything about acres or surveys, and they are not able to carry out this thing of taking land each for himself. We have never had the schools promised us and my young people are not much better fitted for a change than us old people. We did not complain when some of the Upper and Middle Spokanes came to live with us. They told us they would not get any of the treaty money. We have shared our land with them and have made them welcome and we all live happy together. We depend on you, Washington, for everything and need your help for a while longer, and would like you to wait a little longer about our land until our people can learn to read and write and are better able to do as they will have to do when we sell part of our land. All these years I have been urging you to give us schools so we would be prepared to live among white people. So far I have only had promises."

According to the agent's further report some of Lot's head men expressed themselves in a similar manner.

The agent adds, that after carefully considering this matter in all its phases, he is of the opinion that the time has not yet come for these people to take their lands in severalty and be mixed up with white people, as they would be in that event; that the reservation is small, being 8 miles wide and 35 miles long, and not so well adapted to agricultural purposes as said resolution would seem to indicate; that it is hilly and much of it rocky and heavily timbered; that there are at least four hundred and fifty Indians now living there, which number includes many of the Upper and Middle Spokanes, who seem to prefer living there even at the loss of their share of "treaty" money, to which they would be entitled should they go to any one of the reservations named in the agreement with the Upper and Middle Spokanes, to wit, the Colville, Jocko, or Cœur d'Alene; that the farms of these Indians are necessarily small, owing to the small amount of land available for farming purposes, and the number of Indian families now living there; that one reason why these people are still in need of the fostering care of the Government, and a continuance of their reserve as it now exists, is that they have not had schools; and that they have had only such religious teachings as they have been able to obtain from their own scanty contributions.

The agent concludes his report by stating that he does not recommend sending commissioners to that reservation for the purpose of negotiating with the Indians thereof for a surrender of a portion of the same.

In view of the statements contained in Capt. Bubb's report, and the condition of the Indians referred to, I do not think that it would be wise to take any steps now looking to negotiations with them for the surrender of any portion of their reservation.

Very respectfully,

D. M. BROWNING, Commissioner.

Hon. JOHN L. WILSON, House of Representatives.

Now, these Indians have gone there. They are living together in peace, and I only want to give them a little of this money to purchase agricultural implements and to enable them to make homes. Since receiving this letter I have called the attention of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to this appeal in relation to schools, and he has already ordered the construction of a schoolhouse on that reservation——

[Here the hammer fell.]

On motion of Mr. CURTIS of Kansas, by unanimous consent, the time of Mr. WILSON of Washington was extended.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. There was a large number of them around Spokane when we made this treaty. They have gone out on that reservation. They are there with Chief Lot. They want education, they want to learn to till the soil, they want agricultural implements to do it with. They want to be taught how to work, for the only way you are going to civilize a barbarian is by and through labor. Give him a primary education and teach him to labor, and then let him take care of himself.

Mr. REED. I desire to call the attention of the Chairman of the committee to the fact that it is 5 o'clock.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. O'NEIL of Massachusetts, from the Committee of the Whole, reported that they had had under consideration a bill (H. R. 6913), the Indian appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. MARSHALL, by unanimous consent, obtained indefinite leave of absence, on account of sickness.

The House then, on motion of Mr. HOLMAN (at 5 o'clock and 7 minutes p. m.), adjourned.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

By Mr. COFFEEN (by request): A bill (H. R. 7438) to provide for the improvements of public roads, and for other purposes—the Committee on Ways and Means.

PRIVATE BILLS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills of the following titles were presented and referred as follows:

By Mr. BARTHOLDT: A bill (H. R. 7420) to correct the military record of Capt. Henry Troll—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7421) to correct the naval record of Robert A. Russell—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. CLARK of Missouri: A bill (H. R. 7422) for the relief of Harriet Clayton—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7423) for the relief of heirs of Samuel A. Craddock—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7424) for the relief of Frank Richardson—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7425) for the relief of Catharine Bedel—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7426) for the relief of William Donald McLean—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CURTIS of Kansas: A bill (H. R. 7427) for the relief of J. R. Wasson—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. HOUK: A bill (H. R. 7428) to perfect the military record of Henry R. Gibson—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HUDSON: A bill (H. R. 7429) for the relief of Thomas J. Newport, late of Company C, Sixth Regiment Iowa Volunteers—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WARNER: Petition of the New York City Branch Granite Cutters, for legislation preventing sale of convict-made goods outside of the State where they are made—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, June 13, 1894.

The Senate met at 10 o'clock a. m.

Prayer by Rev. E. B. BAGBY, Chaplain of the House of Representatives.

The VICE-PRESIDENT resumed the chair.

On motion of Mr. HARRIS, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of yesterday's proceedings was dispensed with.

LELAND STANFORD, JR., UNIVERSITY ENDOWMENT.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President, it is with a feeling of some hesitancy that I rise in the Senate to a question of privilege. It is not, however, of myself that I wish to speak, but it is to do a simple act of justice to the memory of one who for eight years occupied a seat on the floor of the Senate, and whose place I am for the time called upon to fill.

It was charged by a member of the House of Representatives on Monday, before a committee in this Capitol, and the statement has been telegraphed all over the country that Senator Stanford founded the great university of learning at Palo Alto, Cal., "from motives of revenge, because he could not be elected a trustee of the University of California."

I desire to say that from my own personal knowledge I know the statement to be entirely erroneous and without foundation in fact or truth. During the latter part of my term as governor of California and during the recess of the Legislature, I, without his knowledge or consent, appointed Senator Stanford a regent of the University of California. He declined to accept or qualify, for the reason that he had not the time to devote to the work. His name, however, was sent to the Legislature with other nominations, and failed of confirmation, as I understand it, at his own request.

My successor as governor, Gen. Stoneman, of national reputation, would have reappointed him regent, but was informed by Senator Stanford's friend and attorney, Col. Creed Haymond, that he would not accept the position for the reason that his sympathies were more inclined towards a college of manual training, a place where the youth of the country could learn professions and trades that would enable them to more easily earn a livelihood, and that he intended some day to build such an institution.

His extensive business affairs so engrossed his time and attention that he did not carry into effect his plan until death entered his home and took away their only son, the light of the home and the idol of the father and mother. Then he realized more fully the transitoriness of all earthly things; and he and his good wife resolved that the most appropriate and enduring monument they could erect to the memory of their beloved son would be an institution of learning that should be free to the youth of the land. In his own loving words he said: "The children of California shall be our children. It is our hope to found a university where all may have a chance to secure an education such as we intended our son to have." And from that time until his death Mr. Stanford consecrated his life to this work.

There is a fitting time and place to deal with the sins of omission and commission of the different railroad companies that owe obligations to the Government. But the way to do it is not by impugning the motive that influenced the munificent endowment of the Leland Stanford, Jr., University, for if there ever was an inspired and unselfish philanthropic act it was the endowment by Senator and Mrs. Stanford of an institution of learning second to none in the land, and whose fountain of knowledge is free to the poorest boy and girl in the land.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I ask to be allowed to say a word in addition to the statement made by the Senator from California. I do not regret that he has vindicated the late Senator, Mr. Stanford, from the aspersion made against him, and yet I take occasion to insist that there could be no need of any such vindication for the satisfaction of the Senators now upon this floor. Mr. Stanford had his faults, possibly, but no one who ever knew him could believe that he would act on any subject from a spirit of revenge. I think all will agree that no kindlier or more warm-hearted man ever lived, or one less likely to be influenced by any such motive. Certainly it was most preposterous for any person to suggest that a man who never showed the spirit of unkindness in any way in any dealings whatever with his fellow-creatures would found the magnificent university to which he has devoted his great fortune from a desire to revenge himself upon anyone.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 5th instant, in relation to certain described official reports, a letter from the Acting Adjutant-General, dated June 9, 1894, together with copies of the reports desired; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. SHERMAN presented a petition of sundry mining men, of Spokane, Wash., praying that section 2324 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be amended so as to suspend for the year 1894 the performance of $100 worth of labor upon mining claims; which was referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

He also presented petitions of 9 citizens of Miami County; of 44 citizens of Findlay and Toledo; of 16 citizens of Gibsonburg; and of 44 citizens, all in the State of Ohio, praying that mutual life insurance companies and associations be exempted from the proposed income-tax provision of the pending tariff bill; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of 18 citizens of Leetonia, Ohio, praying that fraternal beneficiary societies, orders, or associations be exempted from the proposed income-tax provision of the pending tariff bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. PATTON presented a petition of sundry citizens of Portland, Mich., praying that the funds of fraternal beneficiary societies, orders, or associations be exempted from the proposed income-tax provision of the pending tariff bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. HARRIS presented sundry memorials of wholesale and retail liquor dealers of Memphis, Knoxville, and Nashville, all in the State of Tennessee, remonstrating against an increase of the internal-revenue tax on whisky, and also against an extension of the present bonded period; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. TURPIE. I present a memorial of the National Furniture Manufacturers' Association of the United States on the subject of tariff rates upon looking-glass plates. The memorial sets forth that what are known as looking-glass plates consist of thin glass silvered, and are used only in the manufacture of cheap and medium furniture; that looking-glass plates are manufactured only in Europe and have to be imported into the United States; that by the addition of duties upon looking-glass plates, the cost of furniture in which such plates are used is increased without benefit to any manufacturers in the United States; and that the addition of such duties will only add to the cost of furniture which is purchased only by the poorer classes of consumers in this country. I move that the memorial be referred to the Committee on Finance, as the bill has not yet been reported to the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. TURPIE presented memorials of sundry wholesale and retail liquor dealers of Indianapolis, Terre Haute, and Evansville, all in the State of Indiana, remonstrating against an increase of the internal-revenue tax on whisky, and also against an extension of the present bonded period; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin presented the petition of John S. Wright and sundry citizens of Wisconsin, praying that the funds of mutual life insurance companies and associations be exempted from the proposed income-tax provision of the pending tariff bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented the petition of A. R. Autland and sundry citizens of Green Bay, Wis., and a petition of Council No. 40, Royal League, of Milwaukee, Wis., praying that the pending tariff be so amended "that fraternal beneficiary societies, orders, or associations, operating upon the lodge system and providing for the payment of life, sick, accident, and other benefits to the members, and dependents of such members, shall be exempt from all the provisions of the bill requiring taxation in any form;" which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented memorials of P. F. Moran and sundry other wholesale and retail liquor dealers of the State of Wisconsin, remonstrating against an increase of the internal-revenue tax on whisky, and also against an extension of the present bonded period; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. PASCO. I present resolutions of the Legislature of the State of Florida, in the nature of a petition, praying that an appropriation be made for improving and deepening the waters of Charlotte Harbor and the mouth of Peace River. I do not wish to take up the time of the Senate in reading the resolutions, and I ask that they be referred to the Committee on Commerce and printed in the RECORD.

The petition was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

House concurrent resolution requesting our Senators and members of the House of Representatives in the Congress of the United States to urge an appropriation by Congress for improving and deepening the waters of Charlotte Harbor, and the mouth of Peace River.

Whereas thousands of tons of phosphates are now annually shipped from Peace River and the adjacent country, through the mouth of Peace River and thence through Charlotte Harbor to various foreign and domestic ports; and

Whereas the improvement of said waters would release commercial restrictions upon an article now necessarily used by the farmers of the United States and of the world at large: Therefore be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Florida (the Senate concurring), That our Senators and Representatives in the Congress of the United States be, and they are hereby, requested to urge upon Congress the necessity of a sufficient appropriation for the improvement of the mouth of Peace River and the waters of Charlotte Harbor; be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state be, and he is hereby, directed to forward a copy of this resolution to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

Approved May 11, 1893.

Mr. MORGAN presented petitions of C. W. Hare and sundry other citizens of Montgomery County; of C. I. Daughtry and sundry other citizens of Lee County, and of John P. Adams and sundry other citizens of Pike County, all in the State of Alabama, praying that the funds of mutual life insurance companies and associations be exempted from the proposed income-tax provision of the pending tariff bill; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. PALMER presented memorials of J. M. Gross and sundry other citizens of Illinois, remonstrating against an increase of the internal-revenue tax on whiskey, and also against an extension of the present bonded period; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. MORRILL presented petitions of sundry citizens Sheldon, Highgate, and Montgomery, all in the State of Vermont, praying for the enactment of legislation to enable the States to enforce State laws regulating the sale of substitutes for dairy products; which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. CAMERON presented petitions of Edward C. Woods, general manager Equitable Life and Assurance Association, and sundry other business men of Pittsburg; of sundry citizens of Philadelphia, Lancaster, and Allegheny, and of sundry citizens of Dauphin County, all in the State of Pennsylvania, praying that in the passage of any law providing for the taxation of incomes the funds of mutual life insurance companies and associations be exempted from taxation; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Athens, Pa., praying that fraternal society and college journals be admitted to the mails as second-class matter; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Oil City, Hanover, and Pottstown, all in the State of Pennsylvania, praying that fraternal beneficiary societies, orders, or associations be exempted from the proposed income-tax provision of the pending tariff bill; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented memorials of sundry wholesale and retail liquor dealers of Harrisburg, York, Philadelphia, Reading, McKeesport, Allegheny City, and Allentown, all in the State of Pennsylvania, remonstrating against an increase of the internal-revenue tax on whisky, and also against an extension of the present bonded period; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a memorial of the Maritime Exchange, of Philadelphia, Pa., remonstrating against the proposed transfer of the Coast and Geodetic Survey to the Geological Survey and the Navy Department; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented a joint petition of the Board of Trade, Commercial Exchange, Maritime Exchange, Drug Exchange, Grocers and Importers' Exchange, Vessel Owners and Captains' Association, Board of Wardens of the port of Philadelphia, Manufacturers' Club, and the Trades League, all of Philadelphia, Pa., praying that an increased appropriation be made for the opening and maintenance of a channel from the city of Philadelphia to the sea, in width not less than 600 feet, and in depth at mean low water of 26 feet; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. QUAY presented resolutions adopted at a convention of independent producers, refiners, and exporters of petroleum from the States of New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, and West Virginia, held at Warren, Pa., on June 7, 1894, favoring the enactment of legislation providing for an investigation into certain evils against the interstate-commerce law by the Standard Oil trust; which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented the petition of John B. Haley and sundry other citizens of Lawrence County, Pa., praying that the funds of mutual life insurance companies and associations be exempted from the proposed income-tax provision of the pending tariff bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented petitions of William M. Westerman and sundry other citizens of Verona; of D. H. Stoner and sundry other citizens of Mt. Pleasant; of John Curtis, jr., and sundry other citizens of Philadelphia, and of the members of the Equitable Aid Union of Columbia, all in the State of Pennsylvania, praying that the pending tariff bill be so amended that "fraternal beneficiary societies, orders, or associations operating upon the lodge system and providing for the payment of life, sick, accident, and other benefits to the members and dependents of such members, shall be exempt from all the provisions of the bill requiring taxation in any form;" which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented memorials of T. Brecht & Son and sundry other liquor dealers of the State of Pennsylvania, remonstrating against an increase in the internal-revenue tax on whisky, and also against an extention of the present bonded period; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. DANIEL presented memorials of sundry wholesale and retail liquor dealers of Norfolk, Fredericksburg, and Richmond, all in the State of Virginia, remonstrating against an increase of the internal-revenue tax on whisky, and also against an extension of the present bonded period; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. HOAR. I present the petition of Julia Ward Howe, Edwin D. Mead, and sundry other citizens of New England, whose title to respect is unquestionable, praying for the passage of the joint resolution for the abrogation of the extradition treaty with Russia. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR presented memorials of J. A. and W. Bird & Co., and sundry other wholesale and retail liquor dealers of Boston and Lowell, in the State of Massachusetts, remonstrating against an increase of the internal-revenue tax on whisky, and also against an extension of the present bonded period; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. LODGE presented the petition of F. O. Baston and 36 other citizens of Middlesex County, Mass., praying that the funds of mutual life insurance companies and associations be exempted from the proposed income-tax provision of the pending tariff bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented the petition of L. P. Winchenbaugh and 21 other members of Neponset Council, No. 136, of Hyde Park, Mass., and a petition of Howard Council, No. 46, Royal Arcanum, of Boston, Mass., praying that fraternal beneficiary societies, orders, or associations be exempted from the proposed income-tax provision of the pending tariff bill; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented sundry memorials of citizens of Lowell and Boston, in the State of Massachusetts, remonstrating against an increase of the internal-revenue tax on whisky, and also against an extension of the present bonded period; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. MCMILLAN presented petitions of C. C. Billinghurst and sundry other citizens of Muskegon; of Edwin L. Wright and sundry other citizens of Hancock, and of T. H. Soddy and sundry other citizens of Houghton, all in the State of Michigan, praying that in the passage of any law providing for the taxation of incomes, the funds of mutual life insurance companies be exempted from taxation; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented the petition of F. H. Leavenworth and sundry other citizens of Detroit, Mich., praying that premiums paid for life insurance by individuals, who are subjected to taxation, shall be deducted from their taxable incomes; which was ordered to lie on the table.

INCOME TAX EXEMPTION OF BENEFICIARY ASSOCIATIONS.

Mr. GALLINGR. I present several petitions of citizens of New Hampshire, praying that fraternal beneficiary societies, orders, and associations, be exempted from the operation of the income-tax provision of the pending tariff bill. I give notice that at the proper time I shall offer an amendment exempting such associations from the operations of that proposed law, as I believe the request of the petitioners is a just one. I move that the petitions lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CHANDLER. I present a petition for the same purpose from A. M. Wilkins, Charles P. Hartshorn, C. F. Wells, W. B. Rotch, and 7 other citizens of Amherst, N. H., praying that fraternal beneficiary societies, orders, or associations be exempted from the proposed income-tax provision of the pending tariff bill. I move that the petition lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. VEST. A great many of those petitions are coming in, and I wish to make a few remarks, in order to relieve some apprehension. The Committee on Finance were unanimously of the opinion that the amendment asked for in regard to these societies is not necessary, but as an amendment has been suggested on behalf of all these societies——

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator can not be heard on this side. I am interested in this matter, and should like to hear him.

Mr. VEST. I say the Committee on Finance were unanimously of opinion that no amendment is necessary to exempt religious, benevolent, or fraternal societies. The bill, as it now stands reported, expressly exempts from taxation all corporations that are not organized for profit, and then goes on and states besides that all corporations or associations organized for charitable, religious, or educational purposes shall be exempt. But these societies seem to have agreed upon an amendment, to which the committee have not the slightest objection, because it simply makes clear and beyond question the meaning of the bill. That amendment is to insert:

Including fraternal beneficiary societies, orders, or associations, operating upon the lodge system and providing for the payment of life, sick, accident, and other benefits to the members, and dependents of such members.

That is, that the exception shall extend to these corporations, including fraternal and beneficiary societies, orders, or associations operating upon the lodge system, and providing for the payment of life, sick, accident, and other benefits to the members and the dependents of such members.

Mr. GALLINGER. Do I understand the Senator to say that the committee would be in favor of such an amendment.

Mr. VEST. Unquestionably, because that is the meaning of the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am very much gratified to hear it.

Mr. VEST. We conferred with the attorneys and officers representing these societies and undertook to show them that that is the meaning of the proposed law now; and this is the amendment which they agreed upon, and to which we have no objection.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to have the attention of the Senator from Missouri to one point. These orders in New England have very generally, at any rate in Massachusetts, been framed on the system I will state. They begin by paying into a common treasury what they call their monthly or weekly dues. That money is invested, and at the end of seven years or fourteen years, or whatever time is prescribed for the investment to run, each member draws out what he has paid in with his share of the accumulated interest, the earnings. But a member has a right at any time to stop the payments of his monthly dues, as it is called, and borrow a sum of money which is secured by a lien; and then the monthly payment goes to paying off the principal and interest of that money. In that way, when he gets ready he buys a little lot of land, puts a little house on it for himself and his family, and it is paid for in this manner by monthly payments.

Probably not one in a hundred of the original members of the institution will come out at the end a creditor. The money is simply paid in for the purpose of having a fund that the association may loan in that way for the purpose of getting dwelling houses for the members.

But under the bill as it now reads, and I am afraid under the amendment if I heard it correctly, if there be one man out of the thousand or three thousand members who remains simply a lender of money, then the concern is not exclusively a beneficiary or home-getting institution, and still in regard to the other ninety-nine one-hundredths it comes within what the Senator very properly says is the desire of his committee.

I wish to call the Senator's attention to that point. I will not stir up debate on it at this time, but it is very desirable that where there is an association nine hundred and ninety-nine thousandths benevolent, and the other thousandth a mere investment of money, either the association should be exempted altogether, which I think would be the most convenient way (because the other part is so little it is not worth troubling yourself about), or we should make a provision which limits the income tax to so much of the institution as does not come within the principle of exemption stated by the Senator.

Mr. VEST. I think the Senator from Massachusetts is now discussing the provision of the proposed law in regard to loan and building associations.

Mr. HOAR. Yes.

Mr. VEST. We are talking about fraternal beneficiary societies, such as the Knights of Pythias and the Royal Arcanum, which is a different branch of the subject.

Mr. HOAR. The loan and building associations contain very often this other element. They mix the two classes together.

Mr. VEST. That is another provision of the bill. I understand that these are simply mutual aid societies. When one of their members is taken sick he receives so much a month or week during his disability, or where he dies his widow and children are taken care of. But they are not in the nature of associations for loaning money to obtain homes, such as loan and building associations.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will give his attention to it at the proper time, I do not want to detain either him or the Senate from other things now; but when this question comes up in the bill I suggest that the committee can probably very easily frame a clause which will cover all classes, savings banks and everything else, and which will provide that in the payment of the tax so much of the funds of the society shall be exempted as belongs, in the judgment of the officials of the Treasury, who must decide it, of course, to the kind of benefit which it is wished to exempt. I think it would be very easy to draft such a provision in regard to this class of associations.

Mr. VEST. We have an amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. The associations which are intended to be protected by the amendment, if not protected in the bill, are associations, as the Senator from Missouri has suggested, who pay a sick and a death benefit to their own members and to dependents of their own members. They number hundreds of thousands in this country, and they have paid out hundreds of millions of dollars without any profit whatever to the membership beyond a proper salary to two or three officers in each order. I have drafted an amendment, a little different from that suggested in the petition which has been sent in, which I ask be printed and referred to the Committee on Finance.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered.

Mr. DANIEL. I present the petition of William S. Blankingsby and sundry other citizens of Richmond, Va., praying that fraternal beneficiary societies, orders, and associations, operating upon the lodge system and providing for the payment of life, sick, accident, and other benefits to the members, and dependents of such members, shall be exempt from all the provisions of the bill requiring taxation in any form. The petitioners pray for the adoption of such an amendment as has just been referred to by the Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from Missouri. I beg to say that there seem to be very many people in my State who much desire that such an amendment shall be adopted, and I hope it will be agreed to at the proper time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The petition will lie on the table.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. CAMERON introduced a bill (S. 2116) making appropriations to the Department of Justice to pay Ellery P. Ingham, United States district attorney for the eastern district of Pennsylvania, for extraordinary services rendered in relation to the condemnation proceedings for sites for a new United States mint at Philadelphia; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. TURPIE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CAMERON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

RECEIPTS AND PAYMENTS OF GOLD.

Mr. MORGAN. I submit a resolution and ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury is directed to send to the Senate a statement in answer to the following questions:

1. What amount of gold coin has been actually received into the Treasury and the subtreasuries of the United States since the 1st day of November, 1893, and on what account the same has been received.

2. What part of the coin so actually received has been obtained from the sale of bonds of the United States, and to what persons, banking houses, banks, or corporations said bonds were sold and delivered; naming them.

3. What payments or redemptions have been made in gold coin or bullion by the Treasury or subtreasuries of the United States since the 1st day of November, 1893, and what were the several descriptions of the obligations of the United States, and the amount of each of such classes of obligations to which such payments or redemptions have been applied, and the names of the persons, banks, bankers, or corporations on whose demand, or to whom such payments or redemptions have been made or applied, with the dates of such redemptions or payments.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. SHERMAN. The only doubt that occurs to me about the resolution is the propriety of calling for the names of subscribers to public securities.

Mr. MORGAN. The names of subscribers for public securities are not called for in the resolution.

Mr. SHERMAN. I thought so, and the resolution was so understood by Senators around me.

Mr. MORGAN. It is the persons to whom gold coin has been paid in the redemption of obligations.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection to that, but is has never been the custom to call for the names of subscribers to public securities.

The resolution was agreed to.

REPORT OF DISTRICT HEALTH OFFICER.

Mr. HARRIS. I submit a concurrent resolution, and ask its reference to the Committee on Printing, with the accompanying paper.

The concurrent resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Public Printer be, and he is hereby, authorized to print and bind in cloth 1,500 copies of the annual report of the health officer of the District of Columbia; 100 for the use of the Senate; 350 for the use of the House of Representatives, and 1,050 for the use of said health officer of the District.

Mr. HOAR. Before the resolution is referred I should like to say that neat leather backs, half morocco, are now about as cheap, I believe, in point of expense as cloth binding, and are very much more convenient for the preservation of such documents, as well as more attractive on the shelf. I shall not move any amendment, but I would suggest to the committee that they consider the practicability of having our public documents bound in half morocco instead of cloth.

Mr. HARRIS. I have asked that the resolution may go to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. HOAR. Very well. I do not ask to have it amended.

Mr. HARRIS. I am glad to have the Senator's suggestion go with the resolution to the committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The concurrent resolution will be referred, with the accompanying paper, to the Committee on Printing.

TRADE RELATIONS WITH GERMANY, ETC.

Mr. HOAR submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That if not incompatible with the public interests, the President be requested to communicate to the Senate forthwith all representations, written or oral, that have been made to the Government of the United States, or the Department of State, by the representative of any foreign government in relation to the probable action of such governments by way of retaliation for the proposed imposition by the United States of a duty upon sugar, and especially as to the probable exclusion of the agricultural products of the United States by such governments from their territories; and especially whether any, and what, representations have been so received in relation to the probable action of Germany and of Guatemala, or either of them.

Further, That the President be respectfully requested to furnish to the Senate any information which he has received as to any measure pending in the Cortes of Spain looking to retaliation upon the United States for the proposed abrogation of the reciprocity with that country, secured by the statute of 1890.

HARBOR AT EVERETT, WASHINGTON.

Mr. CALL (for Mr. SQUIRE) submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War is directed to cause a survey and estimate to be made of the cost of dredging the bar at Everett, in the State of Washington, so as to make a fresh-water harbor in or near the river with the greatest depth of water practicable: Provided, That if the information necessary to make such estimate is now in the possession of the Chief of Engineers it may be made without any further survey. The Secretary of War is directed to cause such estimate to be made and reported to Congress without delay.

REPORT OF COMMISSIONER OF EDUCATION.

Mr. MANDERSON submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Be it resolved by the United States Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That of the Report of the Commissioner of Education for 1891-'92 there be printed 6,000 copies for the use of the Senate, 12,000 for the use of the House of Representatives, and 20,000 copies for distribution by the Commissioner of Education.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills:

A bill (S. 210) for the relief of Wetmore & Bro., of St. Louis, Mo.; and

A bill (S. 513) granting the use of certain lands in the Hot Springs Reservation, in the State of Arkansas, to the Barry Hospital.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 3592) for the relief of Benjamin F. Jones; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A bill (H. R. 1127) for the relief of Francis M. Tomlin; and

A bill (H. R. 5778) to supply a deficiency in the grant of public lands to the State of Mississippi for the use of the State University.

SEVENTH JUDICIAL CIRCUIT.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed.

Mr. VILAS. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 1478) providing for an additional circuit judge in the seventh judicial circuit, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That there shall be in the seventh judicial circuit an addional circuit judge, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and shall possess the same qualifications and have the same power and jurisdiction now prescribed by law in respect to the present circuit judges therein.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADDITIONAL JUDGE EIGHTH CIRCUIT.

Mr. GEORGE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1390) providing an additional circuit judge in the eighth judicial circuit.

Mr. VILAS. That bill is in the same terms as the bill which has been passed for the seventh circuit.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That there shall be in the eighth judicial circuit an additional circuit judge, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and shall possess the same qualifications and shall have the same powers and jurisdiction now prescribed by law in respect to the present circuit judges.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NINTH JUDICIAL CIRCUIT.

Mr. VILAS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate bill 1813, which is in identically the same terms as the bills just passed, providing an additional judge for the ninth judicial circuit.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1813) providing an additional circuit judge in the ninth judicial circuit.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 3592) for the relief of Benjamin F. Jones was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

THE REVENUE BILL.

Mr. HARRIS. Regular order, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The regular order is demanded. The hour of half past 10 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4864) to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I ask unanimous consent to make a correction in paragraph 229, in which there is a mistake. The paragraph should read:

Cocoa, prepared or manufactured, not specially provided for in this act, 2 cents per pound; chocolate, sweetened, flavored or other, valued at 35 cents per pound or less, 2 cents per pound; valued at exceeding 35 cents per pound and chocolate confectionery, 35 per cent ad valorem.

I ask unanimous consent that this correction may be made.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the paragraph will be corrected in accordance with the suggestion of the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, the subject-matter immediately before the Senate is of vital interest to the people of the State of Ohio, which I in part represent. There is but little difference of opinion among our people in regard to it. As I said early in this debate, they look upon this proposition to put wool upon the free list as the culminating atrocity of this bill. It is made more so by the rapid and great changes which have been made in different portions of the bill in order to give protection to local interests. Since this declaration was made the duty on iron ore and the duty on coal have been proposed and adopted.

Very many changes have been made in the schedules looking to the protection of American industries, and markedly so in the cotton schedule, which I hope will be a great benefit to the people of the Southern States and enable them to convert their cotton into cloth. I have no objection, and I do not wish to make any objection, to any such amendments which have been made or which have been proposed, but I call the attention of the Senators having this bill in charge to the great injustice and wrong that is done to the growers of wool in the United States, and I beg them, in all possible sincerity, without respect to political opinions or political actions, not to give this destructive blow to this most important and valuable industry.

Mr. President, wool is by far the most valuable and the most necessary material for the clothing of the people of the United States. It enters more largely than any other article into the common consumption of all classes of our people; it is the product of every State and Territory of the Union. There is no part of our country where wool can not be produced, sometimes at greater cost, but always more or less produced in every State and Territory of the Union. It is, therefore, a subject of general importance; and although the State of Ohio is more interested, as I have said, than any other State on account of the number and value of her sheep, yet it is an interest that appeals to every man in every section of the country.

It is perfectly certain that we can not compete with various foreign countries in the production of wool; it is certain that we can not compete with Australia or the Argentine Republic, and many other countries of South America. The reason of that is obvious. Those countries have only recently been opened to settlement. Australia has been, comparatively speaking, but lately occupied by England, and England has spread the influences of her industry over that vast region of country.

Sheep-raising there is one of the chief employments of the people. That is to civilization is a new country, with vast plains and great wastes, where nothing of value, for a time, could be produced except by the growth of sheep and of wool. It became quite the fad among the semiaristocrats of England either to go to Australia themselves, or to send their sons to that far-off region, to raise wool. In a short period of time they had vast flocks of sheep roaming free, without cost, all over those extensive plains, and with ample food, so that one man, a boy, and a dog could take care of three thousand sheep. They were only required to be, at the proper season of the year, driven in and the clip taken off, and that was the entire cost of the wool. The same may be said, though in a less degree, of the Argentine Confederation.

The tables and books and information which have been laid before us show amply the condition of that new and interesting country. The Argentine Confederation, however, is very much like California. They have gradually settled some of their waste places, the land is divided out, and owned in severalty. Therefore sheep can not be allowed to roam at large over all those extensive ranges in the Argentine country. In Australia, however, the conditions continue as formerly. It is perfectly manifest that as regards wool-raising, we must either abandon the field and give up this important branch of industry or we must have some support, some protection from the Government of the United States.

The same condition exists in other parts of the world. It must be remembered that these flocks roam near the sea coast, so that the clip can be shipped by sea, the cheapest possible form of freight. Wool and other products can be shipped from Australia to England at a less cost than wool can be shipped from the State of Ohio to the sea coast and then across to England. The cheapness of freights in English bottoms is one of the most important elements in the cost of productions of our day. I have here a statement made on official authority, which I read:

NECESSITY FOR PROTECTION—FREIGHT CHARGES.

To-day we have 45,000,000 of sheep in the United States, 27,500,000 of which and over 60 per cent of all are located west of the Mississippi River. The freight on the wool from these sheep from the ranch to the Eastern markets varies from 2 to 3 cents per pound, while the freight on wool from London is only one-fourth of a cent per pound. How can the American woolgrower pay from 800 to 1,200 per cent more freight than his foreign competitor, when the freight alone under such unequal competition would of itself bar the American woolgrower from his own market? Thus, with the removal of protection, the difference in freight alone would be so heavily against the American woolgrower that he would be compelled to go out of the business.

Mr. President, I had the good fortune to travel over the State of California some twenty-odd years ago. I there met, amongst the early pioneers of that country, a gentleman by the name of Col. Hollister, who was then a conspicuous citizen, but is since dead. I knew him as coming from that part of Ohio where we were born. He was about my age. It was reputed that he had from fifty to one hundred thousand sheep, and he told me all about the mode and manner of his treatment of those sheep. He had a large ranch not far from the Pacific Ocean—one of the Mexican grants—and kept his sheep, during the short and very brief and mild winter of that country, with slight feed, because they could graze most of the winter. In the early spring they would start eastward in great droves over the Coast Range Mountains, gradually approaching that magnificent valley which divides the Coast Range from the Sierra Nevada, feed there with little cost, and tended by one man, a boy, and a dog in the same mode which is adopted in Australia.

I met these flocks of sheep feeding on the wayside not far from the Yosemite Valley, costing only this cheap care. At the beginning of August they were started back westward and driven to their home near the Pacific Ocean. In this way the raising of sheep and the raising of wool was a very cheap process, and this gentleman made a large fortune out of it.

Mr. Hollister established at that time in San Francisco the manufacture of woolen goods and pure woolen blankets, which were famous all over the country and all over the world as magnificent specimens of the manufacturer's handiwork.

Since that time conditions have greatly changed in California as well as in the Eastern States. There are serious obstructions now to the raising of sheep. The land of that great valley has been parceled out and is occupied more or less, and where it is not occupied the owners demand rent at so much an acre for the pasture use of those waste plains. So the difficulty of raising sheep in California is largely increased. The people of that State now are compelled to compete with the wool grown in other countries where land and pasture are free and open to all without cost or rent.

I might say the same in regard to Texas, but there is this peculiarity about the Texas sheep, that they are neither so valuable nor is the wool grown upon them so valuable as the sheep or the wool grown in the Northern States or in California or in any other part of the country. The wool produced in Texas, whatever may be said of the extent of the industry in that State, which is next to that of the State of Ohio as to the number of sheep, is not worth one-half as much as is the wool produced from the sheep of Ohio.

I have here a statement of the number of sheep in Texas. According to the statement in 1893 the number of sheep was 4,334,551, and the value of their wool was $6,924,445. In Ohio we have about the same number, a very little difference, 4,378,725 sheep, but the value of the Ohio sheep is $13,900,263, or more than twice as much as the Texas sheep.

The native-bred sheep of Texas can be kept in the same manner as I have described in regard to Australia, although the land in Texas is now constantly being limited by the smaller ownership of tracts in the western part of that State; but still they can raise sheep more cheaply than elsewhere in the United States. Probably Texas is the only part of our country where the industry might survive, with wool duty free, although, as I shall show a little further on, some of the most eminent men of Texas maintain that their wool industry will be entirely destroyed under the operation of free wool.

Mr. President, sometimes it is said that a duty on wool is no protection, because the price of wool is constantly declining. That also is a very grave mistake. Undoubtedly, wool, like other products, is declining, like wheat, flour, etc., is declining; but wool is a more stable product in price than any other product of the farm. There is no other product which yielded so certain and sure a price as wool.

I have here a table taken from the Statistical Abstract for 1893, recently issued by the Secretary of the Treasury, which gives the prices of wool. Ohio wool is taken as a specimen; it is called Ohio wool, although similar wool is produced in five or six States in the Northwest:

NOTE BY MESSRS. MAUGER & AVERY.—This table exhibits, in a concise form, the prices of the three grades of a standard domestic fleece wool in the seaboard markets at the beginning of each quarter. In its present shape it is deemed to be comprehensive to all who are interested in wool. In the special features of character and condition, "washed Ohio fleece wool" is less subject to variation than any other description, and thus is more a basis of value than any other class. Wool, owing to its wide variety, difference in character, and condition, liability to shrink in cleaning, is precluded from speculative operations which apply to products which may be dealt in as "futures." For these reasons the prices of wool are not liable to the same changes as cotton, wheat, etc.

This table shows that from 1852 to 1861, when we had coin payments, the wool crop in 1852 was worth 42 cents a pound, and in 1861 45 cents a pound, and varied between those figures, sometimes a little below and sometimes a little above, never over 60 cents a pound and never below 42 cents a pound. So during this period there was scarcely any fluctuation. So also during the period when we had currency prices, from 1862 to 1878, the prices ranged from 48 cents in 1862 up as high at one time as $1. It kept pace exactly with the depression of our paper money year by year. In 1865 it rose to $1.02, because at that time our money was worth only one-half—50 cents on the dollar. After that the price gradually lowered with the increasing value of greenbacks, until in 1878, when the specie standard was resumed, the price of wool was 44 cents a pound, exactly the price at the beginning of the civil war. So the price had not changed, measured by the specie value.

From 1879 to 1893 the variation was from 34 cents in 1879 to 29 cents on the 1st of January, 1893, varying a little above and below, but never going above 50 cents a pound, dependent entirely upon the state of the market and the demand for wool.

Therefore, wool under a fair protective system, such as existed during all this period of time, showed a fixed degree of value; the farmer could depend upon it as a crop which was always reliable, from the proceeds of which he could pay his taxes or meet other emergencies.

Mr. President, the very threat of this bill, as is shown here by authentic statements without contradiction or qualification, has had a most serious effect on this industry. On the 1st of January, 1893, as I have said, before Mr. Cleveland was sworn into office, the price still remained precisely as it had been before and was no lower during the years 1890, 1891, 1892, and 1893; for two years of that time it was 33 cents a pound; for one year 30 cents, and for one year 29 cents. So that there was but slight variation, but the very moment it became reasonably sure that the Democratic party was committed to free wool and a proposition was made here to that effect, that moment it fell at once to free-wool prices.

I know this of my personal knowledge. I live among a people where every farmer raises more or less sheep, having a small flock of probably from fifty to two hundred on his farm, and he relies upon his wool for a fixed income of a certain sum. When the farmer met the purchaser in the summer of 1893, he was told that in all probability wool would be made duty free, and that the manufacturers could not afford to pay any more than free wool, or London prices, because they could not convert this wool into cloth for nearly a year after its purchase. It has to be put in the warehouse and kept there, and is very rarely used until the expiration of a year. The result was that the farmers of Ohio, as well as the farmers all over the country, had to submit to a reduction of the price of their wool fully 11 or 12 cents a pound; and here is a table which shows exactly the prices of the different kinds of wool:

†Before which time the McKinley law was in full force, but since which date its practical effects have been as nearly null and void as though the bill had actually been repealed.

This table shows in the two right-hand parallel columns the free-wool price of the principal grades of American wool on the farm or ranch, June 1, 1894, and the minimum price received on the farm under the McKinley law previous to March 1, 1893.

The McKinley price on the farm is in the outside column.

The free-wool price on the farm is in the next column.

As I showed a while ago, the Ohio wool of the first grade was worth 29 cents on the 1st of January, and finally on the 1st of June, 1894, it was reduced to 12 cents a pound, even more than was proposed by the repeal of the duty. So that the actual loss to the farmer from the prospect of this great injury is a very severe one, and is a matter of universal complaint.

I have here a specimen of Ohio wool, cleaned, scoured wool, carded and combed, ready to be manufactured into cloth. [Exhibiting.] Anybody who will look at this sample and feel its texture will see that it is equal to any wool that has ever been woven. It is called Botany top, and is the standard for American wools of merino blood. It takes, I am told, about 3 pounds of ordinary wool to produce 1 pound in this form ready for weaving. When in the summer of 1893 the farmers were met with free-trade prices for their wool by the English standard, some of our people, finding the market so low here, undertook to export wool abroad, and they sent it to England. There it was sold alongside of the Australian and other wool, and it was a loss from beginning to end.

I have here a statement of shipments made to England, which shows the sacrifices our farmers were compelled to make. In eight months we exported 342,813 pounds of American wool. They did not like the proposition made by the manufacturers to pay them for their wool only one-half what they had received the year before, and therefore they thought they would send it to the foreign market to see if they could not get a higher price; but, as I have said, when it reached the foreign market it was compelled to be sold alongside the wools of Australia and of other countries at even a less price than was offered here. I say, therefore, that the mere threat of wool being made duty free has already inflicted upon the people of the United States an enormous loss.

I have here a table—and I wish Senators would mark the figures which it contains—taken from the Statistical Abstract, issued by the Secretary of the Treasury, and there can be no question about it. It will be seen from it that on the 1st of January, 1893, we had in the United States of America 47,273,553 sheep; and that their market value was $125,909,264. In 1894, on the 1st day of January last past, the number of sheep had been reduced to 45,048,017; over 2,000,000 sheep had been sacrificed and slaughtered, and then the market value of the wool of these sheep was $89,186,110. So that the actual loss to the farmers of the United States, as shown by these tables, is something like $36,000,000 on a single crop.

Is it desirable to emphasize the passage of this bill by such a sacrifice of the interests of more than one million farmers of the United States of America?

I wish to say, also, that the production of wool in the United States in the past has always increased or decreased according to the extent of protection. It so happened that in early times no one cared about a duty on wool or a duty on sheep, because our people had complete command of the market. Sheep were then grown in every part of the United States, and their growth was encouraged by the States, so that there was no duty paid upon wool until 1816, but the terrible experience of the war of 1812 demonstrated the absolute necessity of our having control of the growth of sheep and having an ample supply of wool in our own country for American needs.

It was then that Mr. Madison called attention to the necessity of a duty for the purpose of protecting American sheep, so that the production of wool might be increased. Mr. Jefferson, who was strongly in favor of the same doctrine, refused to wear any goods brought from abroad, and insisted that he would clothe himself in American cloth made from the wool of American sheep. In fact, the universal feeling of our country at that time, without regard to party, was that we must be independent of the world in the protection and development of this important interest.

Now, who does not feel, who does not know, that the sheep industry is not only necessary for the comfort of our life in time of peace, but that it is absolutely necessary in time of war for the clothing of our soldiers? It is just as important as ammunition. It is just as important as guns. From the beginning in 1816 to this time, there has always been more or less a protective tariff on wool. It has varied somewhat, and the result has been that as it varied the number of sheep increased or diminished. That is a remarkable fact shown by the figures. From 1877 to 1884, a period of eleven years, the production under the tariff then in force increased from 170,000,000 pounds to 340,000,000 pounds, as shown by this table from the Statistical Abstract for 1893.

Quantities of wool produced, imported, exported, and retained for consumption in the United States during 1840, 1850, 1860, and from 1863 to 1893, inclusive.

a Year ending September 30.

b From estimates of the Department of Agriculture.

In 1883 a new tariff was passed, which reduced somewhat, much to the complaint of the farmers of the West, the duty on wool. The result was that from 1884 to 1890 the number of pounds produced decreased from 340,000,000 to 290,000,000 under the operation of a slight reduction. Then from 1890 to 1893 the production increased from 290,000,000 pounds to 364,000,000 pounds. There was that increase in four years under the operation of the McKinley act. It will be seen, therefore, that the production of wool and the growing of sheep increase or diminish according to the extent of protection.

Let me go a little further. The number of sheep increased from 1880 to 1884 from 44,500,000 to 52,000,000. It decreased under the operation of the act of 1883 from 50,500,000 to 44,000,000. It increased again under the McKinley act from 1890 to 1893 from 44,000,000 to 47,000,000. This year the number of sheep, owing to the fear only, the shadow only of your action here in the Senate Chamber, has been reduced 2,000,000, and the value of those sheep has been reduced nearly $30,000,000. These facts are taken from the official statement furnished by our Secretary of the Treasury. I will add this table to my remarks:

Mr. President, I should like to read a few paragraphs from a statement made by a gentleman who must be known by the Senator from California. I should have read it at the proper place, but I will read it now. It is the statement of Mr. Thomas McConnell, who I believe is president of the Wool Growers' Association, or holds some official relation with it. In speaking of the difficulties of raising wool in California now in comparison with the olden times, the time of Hollister, which I described, he says:

There are very few free ranges, either in the valleys or in the mountains; the land has all been reduced to private ownership, and the sheepmen pay rent from 10 to 40 cents per acre for the use of the valley or foothill land where the sheep are wintered.

There are some free ranges in the mountains. But the mountain counties where the sheep range in impose a license of 6 cents per head, and their right to do so has been upheld by the supreme court.

The profits of the business have only been reasonably remunerative for several years past. The climatic conditions are such that the sheep have to be sheared twice each year, which also adds to the expense of running sheep in California.

The large shrinkage in the value of their wool in 1893 has very generally discouraged the sheepmen of California, and they are now sending ewes and wethers alike to the slaughterhouse, where they are sold at a great sacrifice.

Two millions of them were sold last year.

He says further:

The business can not be carried on under present conditions and prices without an actual loss of at least $740 to $1,000.

My estimates are all conservative, and the facts can not be gainsaid or successfully controverted.

I speak from an actual experience of thirty-seven years on the Pacific coast in this business.

The shrinkage in the past year on wool has been full 40 per cent below the prices of 1892.

The destruction and the annihilation of woolgrowing in California will be completed when wool is put upon the free list, as proposed by the so-called Wilson tariff bill, now pending in Congress.

I voice the opinion of at least nineteen-twentieths of the woolgrowers, wool-dealers, and manufacturers of the Pacific coast.

I am also—

He says—

familiar with the sheep business as carried on in the States of Nevada and Oregon. They have some free ranges, which is more than overbalanced by the greater expense incurred in carrying on the business. They have to provide more or less feed for winter, railroad freights and provisions are much higher, and also herders' wages are paid $35 per month and board.

Mr. PERKINS. I am personally acquainted with Mr. McConnell, the gentleman referred to. He is thoroughly reliable, and has the confidence and respect of the people of California. I can bear testimony to the truthfulness of the statement he has made which has just been read by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I wish to say a few words more in respect to the magnitude of this trade. As I have already said, the number of sheep January 1, 1893, was 47,273,553. Their value was $125,909,264. The quantity of domestic wool produced was 303,153,000 pounds, and all this was consumed in our own mills. We exported no wool. That is one of the greatest advantages of this production, that it is consumed by our own manufacturers, worked into cloth, and then consumed by our own people. We imported mainly what are called carpet wools of a cheaper grade to the extent of 172,433,838 pounds in the year 1892. The table gives the statistics up to the 1st of January, 1893.

I wish to call the attention of Senators who have charge of the bill to the revenue features of this proposition. We collected as duties from 1891 to 1894 on the imported wool I refer to $24,800,000. It is proposed by the bill, as I will show, not only to destroy the sheep industry of our country, but to repeal and throw off an income of $24,800,000 in four years. I ask Senators whether they are prepared for that sacrifice. Here we are in a condition where we are borrowing money to pay the ordinary expenses of the Government; where our expenditures will exceed our revenue to the extent of nearly $100,000,000 this year. Already they exceed our revenue by seventy or eighty million dollars. There is a deficiency, and there is talk about selling bonds. Yet now, in the face of this condition, on a tariff bill intended to provide revenue for the support of the Government, Senators propose to strike down a revenue which in four years was $24,800,000.

But that is not all. That the destruction of the wool industry will affect very seriously the manufactures of woolens is also true. We have collected duties from imported wool manufactures to the extent of $127,000,000 in the four years—from 1891 to 1894. This revenue of $127,000,000 in four years, amounting to $32,000,000 a year, is proposed to be stricken out from our revenue, because no doubt the revenues will be largely decreased by the reduction of the rates of duty on the various articles imported from other countries. In other words, we reduce our revenue from imported wool and woolens, for the benefit of foreigners. They get the benefit of the reduction. They expect to make increased sales to us, as the duty upon these articles will be greatly decreased by the operation of the bill. Yet such a bill is offered to us at a time when we are deficient in revenues and when it is proposed to resort to the domain of State taxation in order to carry on the operations of our Government.

			Per cent.
1891	$41,000,000	$34,500,000	84.14
1892	35,500,000	34,000,000	95.77
1893	28,000,000	27,000,000	97.37
1894	22,500,000	21,900,000	97.37
Total	137,000,000	127,400,000

The figures for 1894 are all estimates, based on the reported imports for the first nine months of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1894.

This $24,800,000 duties collected on wool are by the pending bill to be given away at a time when the Government needs revenue.

This $127,400,000 duties collected on woolen manufactured goods, which are almost exclusively luxuries used by the wealthy classes, are by the pending bill to be reduced two-thirds, thus making a present to the wealthy classes of over $80,000,000. This loss of revenue of over $100,000,000 heretofore collected under the McKinley law on wool and woolens is to be replaced by a tax on sugar, a necessary of life, the per capita consumption of which is as great by the poor as the wealthy.

Mr. President, I beg also to remind our friends on the other side that when they propose a measure like this they propose to destroy the hen that lays the golden egg. The enormous revenue derived from wool is to be absolutely stricken out from our tables of revenue, and the duty on woolen goods is so largely reduced as greatly to impair the revenue.

Now, there is another consideration. You may destroy the flocks, as they will be destroyed in my judgment, because the people of Ohio and the other States can not afford to raise sheep under the proposed condition. In Ohio our flocks are small. Very rarely are there more than 200 sheep on a single farm of 160 acres. But some are on almost every farm. Sheep are raised on the farms in the State of Ohio to the vast number of 4,300,000. Under these circumstances, if by your measure you compel them to destroy their sheep, if you destroy and suspend for a moment the sheep industry, you can not replace it. You may stop a coal mine and commence it the next day; you may stop an iron-ore mine and commence it the next day; but when you destroy a flock of sheep, it can not be restored again except in years. The whole experience shows that the fluctuation in the number of sheep grown is very regular, and any attempt to increase the number is met by the laws of nature. You destroy the existing sheep industry, and as a matter of course you can not readily replace it.

Remember too, Mr. President, that the sheep industry in what is called the Ohio range, including Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota, are nearly all of the finest breeds in the world. Our people have gone to great expense. I have known of gentlemen paying $600 to $1,000 for one sheep for stock raising. All this money has been expended, and yet all the sheep are to be destroyed by this sudden movement to make free wool, because it is said it is a raw material. I should like to have some of the gentlemen who think that wool is a raw material go and follow the farmer shepherd day by day. Let them follow the shepherd when in the winter time he goes out, gathers the sheep and takes them to some kind of protection and cover, to care for them and nurse them and feed them. In summer they must be protected from the heat, and in winter from the storms.

Mr. PLATT. Sometimes the shepherd has to dig the sheep out of the snow.

Mr. SHERMAN. Sometimes the shepherd digs the sheep out of the snow. It is the most severe labor. The labor performed by the farmers in sheep raising and producing wool is one half of all the cost of the clothes made in this or any other country. It is said to be a general rule that the work of the farmer contributes one-half to the value of all the cloth manufactured, whether it is fine or coarse. If that that be so, I appeal to you whether it is wise for us to disturb this industry.

Remember that the men who pursue this industry are the very base and corner stone of society. The most conservative element in our Government are the farmers. They think and think and think, while other people are acting foolishly. As I say, they are the conservative element of society. I say to Senators on the other side with all kindness, when you strike a blow at them you may not hear the noisy vaporings which would come from the machine shop or the manufacturing establishment, but you will hear their quiet voice in a way that will command your respect.

Mr. President, I have been somewhat amazed that our friends from Texas have not called our attention to this particular industry. Perhaps it is because they may be so bound up by party trammels. I know that those Senators will not dispute the facts which I will give to them from some gentlemen of the highest character in the State of Texas. I will read from what is said by Mr. A. E. Shepard, of the National Woolgrowers' Association, long a resident of Texas. He says here:

Now, as to the effect that the Wilson bill will have upon the woolgrowers of Texas, and, in fact, of all growers west of the Mississippi. It is total annihilation. Their flock and herds will be gotten rid of in every conceivable way possible (when I say growers I mean those engaged solely in the sheep industry), as no man can raise wool at the present prices and live thereby. The sheep of Texas have already decreased about one-fifth, or from over 5,000,000 to about 4,000,000, and soon, instead of being the leading State of the Union in woolgrowing, will fall to the third or fourth place, and it may be lower.

Last fall wool in San Antonio, the nearest market to where I live, was sold at from 5 to 7 cents per pound, and it costs to get wool from where I am to that market 1½ cents per pound, and it cost 1 cent per pound to get it shorn from the sheep. In fact, it costs at least from 2 to 4 cents per pound to raise the wool more than was got for it last fall, saying nothing about the money invested in land or sheep, and this was only in anticipation of free wool. Now, let me say, that when free trade in wool does come it means a further reduction of at least 33⅓ per cent, or from 2 to 4 cents per pound for our wool, and this is the only section of our country that is akin to those foreign countries that are our competitors. In fact, the woolgrowers will have to go out of the business and come East and become importers of woolen products of all kinds, as that is the only thing or concern that I can see will be benefited by free wool at the cost of the utter destruction of the most beneficial and far-reaching industry of this country.

Mr. President, I could here in the same connection read to you from the declarations made by all the Presidents up to and including James Monroe, emphasizing the special importance of the independence of our country from foreign control in clothing, and especially in wool. I shall not do so, however. I may embody some of them in my remarks.

Sir, there is no higher object of national desire, no stronger object for the public good than to make ourselves absolutely independent of all foreign production of wool and woolens. The woolgrowers and woolen manufacturers are akin to each other. They are bound to each other. If one falls the other falls as sure as fate, because if the farmers of our country can get no protection or bounty or help from the Government in the raising of wool, which is more than half the cost of the cloth, then surely it is not just to give the manufacturers any duty whatever upon woolen products. If we must have foreign wool as a substitute for domestic wool, let us buy cheap clothes in the markets of the world, and then, perhaps, some of our friends on the other side will be satisfied. We may get them a little cheaper at the expense of the destruction of one of the great industries of the country.

I am glad that the woolen manufacturers are pretty fairly treated and well treated in the pending bill. I shall vote for all the protection that is given to them. But I trust Senators on the other side will review or reconsider the question of their duty to the farmers of the country of affording protection to them as well as the manufacturers. Our friends on the other side of the Chamber have from time to time yielded to the manifest demands of the people as expressed through their Representatives and Senators. I hope, sir, they will do the same with this industry, and that in due course we shall have some proposition that will relieve the present distress.

To emphasize what I have said about woolen manufactures, I wish to read a few extracts from an important memorial submitted by the wool merchants of Boston. I thank them for it. Indeed, it is so good I may put the whole of it in my remarks. I will read certain parts of it.

Having waited for final and definite action by the committees of Congress in framing a bill for changes in the revenue laws, and much to our disappointment finding the bill to have come from the Senate committee full of inequalities and of especial injustice to the wool interests of the country, we feel that the time has now arrived for the wool trade of this, the acknowledged leading wool market of the country, to make itself heard with no uncertain expression of its views.

Then I omit some.

Hence, as the woolgrower has sought the great West for the prosecution of his enterprise in this new country with his numberless flocks, he has proved to have been, while the pioneer, a most important factor in the settling up of the vast areas of our public domain from Texas to Oregon, into which have flowed multitudes from the most desirable populations of the world.

At the same time the Eastern, and particularly the Middle States, being well adapted by soil and climate for the production of the choicest of wools, through years of skillful and expensive experiments and industry, now produce wools which are second to none grown upon the face of the earth and which, under favorable conditions, may supply nearly if not quite all the wool of certain classes required for the machinery of this country.

That the wool-producing industry of the United States and Territories, already the third largest of the world, needs only an adequate protection to increase rapidly in importance until it may rival the product of the most prolific of the English colonies, is shown by the fact that under the favoring system now threatened with removal, the increase in 1893 over 1892 was over 31,000,000 pounds, bringing the product of the last year up to the enormous sum of 304,000,000 pounds. Is this hitherto profitable and increasing business to be transferred from our own people to the hands of the foreigner? Already in a single year, from the mere fear of such legislation, the flock of the United States has shrunk in numbers from 47,273,563 to 45,048,017. In a single year the farmers of the United States, according to the Department of Agriculture, have seen the total value of their sheep decline from $125,909,264 on January 1, 1893, to $89,186,110 on January 1, 1894, showing a shrinkage of about $37,000,000 in this brief period; and if we take into account the shrinkage in value of farm and ranch property devoted to the sheep industry during the twelve months, we may say, without any fear of contradiction, that the direct loss on the fixed property of woolgrowers during one year has been not less than $50,000,000. But this is not all. It is a very moderate estimate to state that the decline in the value of the wool taken from these sheep from 1893 reduced the purchasing power of the woolgrowers by at least $20,000,000 more.

If such losses have already been inflicted by the possibility of passing this bill, who shall measure the damage to follow if the bill itself becomes a law?

It goes without saying that the interests are mutual of the woolgrower of America, the manufacturer who manipulates the staple, and all who handle wool in any of its stages or in any capacity, and that they are natural allies. Hence what benefits the grower is for the good of all.

Therefore, frowning upon all sectional legislation, which is too apparent in the Wilson bill, with the interests of the woolgrowers of this broad land from Maine to Texas and from Georgia to Oregon in view, we, the wool merchants of Boston, without distinction of party, whose signatures are hereto affixed, representing with few exceptions the entire catalogue of wool dealers and commission merchants of this market, earnestly protest against the adoption of the inconsistent provisions of Schedule K of section 1 and paragraph 685 of section 2 of the measure now before the United States Senate known as the Wilson bill. Its adoption will be, in a great degree, destructive to the business of the wool-producer, and whereas it is his right to demand the perpetuity of his industry, its continuance will also add, we believe, to the general prosperity of the country.

The memorial is signed by over eighty firms, said to be the leading business men engaged in the manufacture of or in dealing in wool.

Mr. President, it must be remembered that this earnest memorial comes from people who are not represented here, except by Senators and Representatives. It is true that a committee of woolgrowers came here, but they came at a time when the Committee on Finance thought it proper not to open their door to further investigation, and they were refused a hearing. There is no lobby here. There is no trust; there is no combination which can bind these million men together. Their demand of you ought, for that reason, to be heard with more favor.

There is no $85,000,000 trust here to demand a large increase of taxation upon the people. There is no combination of interests coming and mousing about, appealing to us in every way to do this or that in the benefit of its particular interest. Here is a demand from one million hardy yeomanry of our country who only ask justice and what has been granted by every Administration from Madison to this time. They only demand some reasonable protection. I do not care in what form it is made. It may be in the form of specific duties, if desired, or it may be in the form of ad valorem duties. Senators on the other side can determine that question. But these people do demand and do ask that some protection shall be given to them.

Mr. President, I wish to say a few words only, the truth of which is known to all the Senators who hear me. The condition of the farmer at this time is a very harsh one, to say the least. All kinds of agricultural products have declined in value. It is because of the enormous production within the last few years. That has been brought about especially by developments in India, in Russia, and in other countries of the world. Only a few years ago, all within my active lifetime, the wheat and produce of the United States were shipped to all parts of Europe, and supplied their wants entirely. Now the people of India have come in as competitors in the market. Since that time South America has been opened to active civilization. Australia, as I have said, has been opened, and it now supplies wheat as well as wool. So with all the other countries in the world. India is made to supply wheat, a thing not dreamt of in the olden times. Therefore the condition of the farmer at this time is a harsh one. It is difficult for him indeed to make ends meet from year to year or from day to day.

I know from my observation that the farms of Ohio are not worth so much to-day as they were thirty or forty years ago. That is because the vast region of country west of us has been opened to production, and there, with fresh soil, with free lands given to everybody who would go and settle upon them, with every advantage, with railroads equal to ours, they can send their wheat and their produce into our markets.

Now, the other side of the Senate by their votes have opened the markets of our farmers to free competition. There is to be free rye, free wheat, free everything that can be produced in Canada along the line 4,000 miles long. The farmers of this country are not protected on a single article of their industry. Every one of the articles which our farmers produce in the Northern States is left naked and bare without the ordinary protection, and yet the farmers are required to pay taxes.

Yes, sir; free rye, free wheat, free everything, because the only condition dependent is that Canada and other countries shall impose no duty on wheat and rye and other cereals sent by us to them. Within twenty-four hours after the passage of this bill they will make their laws conform to our law, and all this region of country will be open and free.

Mark it, Senators, I do not want to draw sectional lines. All parts of this country are mine. I look upon all with favor, and I would not make any discrimination; but, in conclusion, it must be remarked that throughout this whole bill there are wide discriminations made in favor of a certain section of the Union. If Senators on the other side would extend the same rule and the same principle to all our Northern industries it is all I ask of them.

Now, this bill is not satisfactory to the farmers of Ohio whom I represent. I hear from them by letter. We have no remonstrances made here, no noisy declamation, but I assure Senators that the people of Ohio, like the rest of the United States, feel a deep and bitter hostility to this bill.

I believe that if the question of the passage of this bill were left to the people of Ohio to-day it would not receive one-fifth of the vote of our people. They believe it is poisoned all through with sectionalism and favoritism; that it is destructive to their interests; and they will demand its repeal as soon as possible. They demand that every resistance shall be made to it that will secure at least a full and fair consideration of every interest.

Now, the chief points in this whole controversy, so far as the farmers of Ohio are concerned, is free wool and the admission of grain from Canada free and without conditions into our markets to compete with our productions. These are the chief objections made by the farmer. I do not speak of other features of the bill at this time, but as long as some provision is not made for fair protection of their chief productions I shall continue my oppositions to the bill and I know my action will meet the approval of my constituents.

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President——

Mr. POWER. If the Senator from Idaho will permit me, I wish to ask the Senator from Ohio a question.

Mr. DUBOIS. I will yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. POWER. Referring to the sample of wool which the Senator from Ohio exhibited a little while ago, let me ask the Senator what it is called.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is Botany top, made from Ohio wool, XX, I believe.

Mr. POWER. Will the Senator state what is understood by Botany top?

Mr. SHERMAN. XX, Botany top, that is the best wool, of the highest grade scoured and combed ready for weaving into cloth.

Mr. POWER. On account of the name a great many, particularly those not friendly to the protection of the wool industry, claim that it is from Australia.

Mr. SHERMAN. Oh, no; this is the top made here. The schedule shows it. I have also a sample of Australian wool of the same grade, but I did not bring it with me. I will read the tag attached to this sample.

BOTANY TOP.

Botany top, like the sample to which this tag is attached, is such a standard, and such as is made of the average American wools of Merino blood, which comprise over 75 per cent of the whole American clip. The average value of top like the inclosed sample, in free-trade Europe for a whole year previous to March, 1893, was 37 cents, while the average value of the same article in the United States under the McKinley law previous to March, 1893, was over 85 cents. Its free wool value to-day all over the world is not over 35 cents, and the value of raw scoured wool in the free-trade markets of the world is from 5 to 8 cents per pound below the value of top.

Mr. POWER. It is merino wool, the Senator understands?

Mr. SHERMAN. It is merino wool, carded and fixed ready for spinning.

Mr. POWER. And equal to Botany top produced in Australia?

Mr. SHERMAN. It is equal to any wool in the world.

Mr. POWER. That is the point I wished to bring out.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Boston authority, in their memorial, say that the wools produced by us are equal to or better than any others in the world.

Mr. POWER. That is what I want our friends on the other side to understand.

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President, if the Democratic majority in this Chamber were willing to stand by the declaration of their last national convention, that all protective duties are unconstitutional; if they were willing to put in operation the mandate they profess to have received from the people at the last general election, to give effect to that declaration; if they were willing to give their constituents and ours an honest chance to experience the alleged blessings of a tariff for revenue only, the remarks I now intend to offer would have remained unsaid. The young State of Idaho is in the Union for better or worse, and the worst that can happen to our common country will never blench the cheek of an Idahoan to a paler cast than that worn by a true patriot anywhere, be it East, West, or South.

But from the very inception of this now fatherless tariff bill, the Congressional representatives of the Democratic party have trampled on their national convention; they have torn up their professed mandate from the people, our masters; they have denied to that people the opportunity of testing in the high school of experience the rival theories of protection and free trade, and, worse than all, they have unsettled the bases of any tariff worthy to be called national, and discredited the capacity of Congress to do its proper and appointed work, by presenting to us a set of tariff schedules in which as much protection as is demanded is yielded to those unjustly selected to enjoy it, while to all others is denied that equality before the law which is the broad foundation on which our Republic rests.

Mr. President, speaking as one of the representatives here of the little Commonwealth of Idaho, I say that if it should be the will of a majority of the people of the United States to strike down the interests and industries of the minority of that people, we should receive the blow in loyal submission and patiently await the turn of the wheel that should bring us to our rightful position again. But what threatens us now is not the popular will, but a perversion of that will by those in whose hands the execution of it has been for the moment placed. In such a situation, to salute our executioners would be cowardly; to protest against their betrayal of their trust, the right and duty of their temporary victims. This is my protest against this indefensible bill. I hope to live long enough to bear an humble part in removing the reproach of it from the statute book.

What I have said, Mr. President, bears with especial force against the wool schedule of this proposed tariff act. Raw wool, one of the great staples of the country, a product in which the struggling farming interest throughout the whole land is concerned, an agricultural commodity peculiarly exposed to a destructive because unequal competition with foreign fleeces, is to be denied the benefits of a newly-fangled protective policy, while other products, boasting of no greater intrinsic merit and far less importance, are to be the favored recipients of a syndicated protection. And this is the gospel according to St. Democratus.

Mr. President, the Republican party is a protectionist party; but it is more, it is a national party. It does not pick and choose the objects of its care and fostering solicitude, but it looks over the whole Union and considers the interests of every class of the people. When moved by the popular will to experiment with the industries of the country, it bids all to participate in the benefits, and expects all to share in the losses of its adventures. Thus, sir, it is true to the people, even in its errors; and thus the people return to it again and again, after trying, for brief periods, a change of servants.

From the first tariff, that of 1789, to the latest, that of 1890, the principle of protection has always been asserted. The principle itself was first challenged, with any show of authority, in the Democratic platform of 1892; a challenge from which the party shrank the moment its representatives were required to act up to it. Can you wonder, gentlemen of the Democratic party, that hosts of our people have put their energies and resources into industries dependent upon some form or degree of protection, in full confidence that protection would not be withdrawn from those industries without giving those engaged in them reasonable time and opportunity to prepare for the change? That is just the case of the woolgrowers of Idaho.

I assert that it was not within the bounds of human probability that our Idaho people, who had found in woolgrowing an outlet for their unemployed capacity, should foresee that their new, useful, and expanding industry would be struck out of the category of possible vocations without a fair chance of saving what they could from the wreck and devoting it to some other means of livelihood. Yet so swiftly is the stroke falling that though your tariff bill is still almost in embryo, it is not possible to-day to sell a pound of wool in Idaho except at a discount from the nominal market price equal to the present rate of duty on raw wool. The fleeces have been grown under a system of protection, and are now to be sacrificed under a system of free trade in wool, accompanied by an exasperating because unjust and partial reservation of protection for favored and selected industries.

Mr. President, I am not asking, and shall not ask, for partial favors to my State and people. I covet nothing that is not just and fair to all. If the majority in this Chamber are willing to pass a tariff bill for revenue alone, and raw wool shall not be considered a proper revenue-producing import, let it go on the free list with the many other things that would have to go on such a list in such a bill. But the bill being what it is, I must denounce the injury done to my constituents by this wool schedule, and done to all woolgrowers in the United States, as an outrageous injustice, without palliation or excuse. The circumstances that make up this injustice vary in the several woolgrowing communities, and I speak briefly of those of my own State only to add our contribution to the general sum of circumstances that protest loudly against any sudden and total abolition of the raw-wool duty.

Idaho entered the woolgrowing field under the encouragement of the McKinley tariff. That tariff came at an opportune time for the young State, affording the means of putting to use a large area of unproductive land, of employing unused labor and additional capital, and of making the future surer by increasing and diversifying the industries of the community. In the reports and debates preceding the conversion of the former Territory into the present State, woolgrowing was foreshadowed as one of the potent means by which the proposed new State would win and maintain a suitable position in the Union and contribute to the welfare of the sister States. Until now, the expectation has not been disappointed. Between 1890 and 1893 the flocks of the State more than doubled in number.

The menaces of the Wilson bill fell upon nearly 800,000 sheep, worth but a little less than $2,000,000, and yielding an annual clip of considerably more than 5,000,000 pounds of wool. The estimated losses of the Idaho woolgrowers, since free raw wool has been proclaimed, have been, in decline of values in sheep and clip, almost equal to the value of the flocks before the threat was heard. You will understand, Mr. President, that with present prosperity destroyed and a promising future wiped out, our Idaho woolgrowers needed at least the consolation of knowing that they have been sacrificed to the general good. What they do know is that they and hundreds of thousands of other of their fellow-countrymen have been marked for destruction, for reasons which nobody has ventured to explain or dared to justify.

The Idaho wool clip is part of that Rocky Mountain fleece which constitutes 60 per cent of our whole domestic production. Its market is in the East, and its present cost, laid down at Boston, 16 cents per pound. The present selling value at the railroad station in Idaho is less than half the cost of delivering it there, and this because of the determination of those in power here to reverse the policy of seventy-five years of direct protection to raw wool without giving even seventy-five days in which to face the change. This Congress has been asked to leave one-half of the present duty on raw wool for the time being, so that woolgrowers may adapt themselves to the change, but to all appearances this reasonable appeal is to be denied, while at the same time protection "to the hilt" is to be granted indefinitely to other and favored industries. For me to remain silent, under such an accumulation of injustice, would be disloyalty both to the people of Idaho and the people of the United States. Half the present rate would be a revenue duty, beneficial to the public Treasury, and hurtful to no meritorious private interest. What just reason is there for not imposing it?

There is just one discernible reason for ruthlessly sweeping away the whole duty on woolen fleeces. It is the persuasion of those who desire the nearest approach to free trade that revenue necessities will permit, that with wool on the free list the whole system of protection will crumble to pieces. That such would be the ultimate result I make no doubt, but let us at least start fairly; let us all sink or swim together. Senators of the Democratic party, pull down the American system, which has stood so long a pillar of national pride and prosperity, the creation of a long line of American statesmen, including those of your own party, as the Parisian communists did the Vendome column; openly, boldly, and all at once. Do not pretend that you are remodeling or reconstructing it, or fitting it with modern improvements. Do not bargain with esteemed or influential friends, that they shall profit by the plunder of it while it is coming down piecemeal. Let it stand for all, or fall for all. That is the only manly course.

If the woolgrowing industry is destroyed by this bill, as it must be by the present tariff schedule of the bill, it will not be possible to immediately restore it when a day of repentance comes. Legislation is the embodiment of practical statesmanship, and, appealing to the force of that argument, I urge upon the Senate not to exemplify a mere theory by an immediate and total surrender of the wool duty, but to test the soundness of the theory by deliberate and successive steps, thus minimizing the actual damage and the possible peril of the experiment.

Mr. President, while all parts of the country have suffered through the advent of the Democratic party to power it seems that the Pacific coast has been the most conspicuous victim. Notwithstanding the fact that the Democratic platform and a large majority of the Democratic party was favorable to silver, President Cleveland called Congress together in extraordinary session five months after his inauguration for the avowed purpose of taking away every recognition of silver. I do not intend at this time to review or renew that controversy. It is sufficient to state that his influence over the representatives of his party in Congress was so powerful that he accomplished his object.

By this blow the Democratic party paralyzed an industry in the Rocky Mountain region amounting to about $100,000,000 a year, considering the value of the lead and silver product, which were both affected. It is impossible to estimate the loss which this act entailed on various other industries of that section. The condition was such that all business enterprises were dependent, more or less, on silver-lead mining.

I am speaking of this question now, of course, from an entirely local standpoint and considering only the direct and plain injury which was inflicted on our people. It has been abundantly proven, and I think is rapidly becoming accepted as a fact, that the demonetization of silver has injured the balance of the United States and the entire world as much if not more, comparatively, than it has the silver-producing States.

At the end of President Harrison's term of office and when he was a candidate for reëlection I made a thorough canvass of Idaho, advocating Republican principles. At that time all of our people were employed at good wages. Our farmers were receiving good prices for their products, our business men were prosperous, and the outlook for our future growth and development was most gratifying. During that campaign, in every section of the State I publicly challenged any man in the audience to rise up and state that he could not get employment at good wages. There was work for all.

What a contrast now after a year and a half of Democratic supremacy! Our mines are closed, our railroads are in the hands of receivers, and business of all kinds injured to a greater or less extent. The Union Pacific Railroad, which has more than 1,000 miles of track in the State, is being run at a loss of more than $1,000,000 per month. In consequence, it has reduced its force about 50 per cent in Idaho, thus throwing out of employment hundreds of our best and most industrious citizens. It was only last week that the United States district judge in our State sentenced over two hundred so-called commonwealers to various county jails for terms of imprisonment for from one to six months. It will not do to say that all of these idle men are vicious and will not work. They are foolish and badly advised, and are justly punished for violating the laws of the land, but there is something wrong in the administration of so rich a country as ours which produces such distress and lawlessness throughout the length and breadth of the land.

You will all recall the Homestead strike in Pennsylvania which occurred about two years ago, during the summer preceding the Presidential campaign. It made such an impression upon the country that a committee of Congress, with Representative Oates as its chairman, was appointed by Congress to investigate and report the causes. From the printed testimony submitted by that committee it appears that "the wages paid by the firm of Carnegie, Phipps & Co. at Homestead ranged from 14 cents per hour for unskilled and common labor, or $1.40 per day of ten hours, to about $280 per month, say of twenty-four or twenty-five days of eight hours each, for labor of the highest skill." "That the average paid to laborers in the 119-inch plate mill, which is the largest in the works at Homestead, is about $120 per month per man." The point in controversy between the workmen and the company was the proposition by the company to make a change in the contract under which the men worked which would have had the effect of making a slight reduction in the wages of the workingmen.

I do not care nor intend to enter into the merits of the controversy nor to say who was right or who was wrong. Had the men quietly submitted to the proposition of the company the fact stands out that they would have received steady employment at good wages.

The Democratic party utilized the strike at Homestead and made it a conspicuous feature of their campaign. They pointed to it as an example of the injury which protection inflicted upon the workingmen.

Such a strike, accompanied as it was by bloodshed, was so unusual as to startle the entire country. Occurring as it did under a Republican Administration, there is no doubt that it aided the Democratic party in its campaign.

How insignificant it seems as compared with the present situation! Let me read a few extracts from the newspapers, taken at random, showing the condition of business and the workingmen throughout the country.

R. G. Dun & Co.'s Weekly Review of Trade will say to-morrow: "The obstacles to improvement do not lessen. The strikes of coal miners and coke workers have not ceased, but have caused the stoppage of numerous works this week and embarrassment to some railroads. The conference at Cleveland exhibited much angry feeling and wider differences than was expected, and seems to render agreement more distant."

MISSOURI MINERS DETERMINED—BETWEEN SIX AND EIGHT THOUSAND MEN ON STRIKE.

JEFFERSON CITY, MO., May 31.

State Coal Mine Inspector Charles Evans returned yesterday from a visit to the various coal mines of the State. He says that there are less than 1,000 men now at work in the entire State, and only two of the railroad mines are operated. The miners working are scattered and working to supply local demands, such as flouring mills, waterworks, electric-light plants, etc.

Inspector Evans does not see any indications of an early settlement. The miners, he says, are determined to fight to the bitter end. He adds that the miners are peacefully disposed, and he does not think violence will be resorted to. Mr. Evans said that usually 7,000 men worked during the summer months and 9,000 during the winter. This leaves the number of strikers at somewhere between 6,000 to 8,000.

It is unnecessary to multiply these extracts. Every paper which you pick up is filled with them. These riots, accompanied by bloodshed, have become so common that we have ceased to read them any more or to discuss them. Thousands of men out of employment, starting from every part of the land, are endeavoring to reach Washington in order to lay their grievances before Congress in the hope of getting some relief. So serious has the situation become that the Senate has appointed a select committee to hear their complaints—a most unusual and unheard-of thing in this Republic.

The land is filled with misery and woe. Hundreds of thousands of honest and willing men are seeking employment in vain and are unable to earn the necessaries of life for themselves and families. Here in Washington we do not appreciate the distress which prevails throughout the country. This is peculiarly a Government city. Twenty thousand employés of the nation reside in the District, to whom is paid $3,000,000 per month in wages. They receive their compensation in cash at stated times and short intervals. This vast amount of money being disbursed every month sustains the various business enterprises of the city. We can not and should not shut our eyes to the hapless condition of the country at large.

I am glad that a decision is near at hand on the pending bill. The situation being as it is, I feel sincerely that it is the patriotic duty of the Senate to act promptly. This rearrangement of the tariff should be completed as quickly as possible, or the bill under discussion should be defeated with promptness.

When the bill is disposed of and Congress adjourns there will be no incentive or motive for these large bodies of restless men to wander over the country in an endeavor to reach Washington and the National Legislature. No votes in the Senate will be changed by discussion and argument, and I would say to my Republican friends that from a political standpoint no additional argument is needed by the people. The Democratic party itself, since it came in to power a year and a half ago, by its own conduct has spoken more eloquently in behalf of Republican principles than all of us on this side of the Chamber can hope to. Nothing will appeal so strongly to the American voters as the contrast between the Republican and Democratic administration of affairs.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I understand the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] desires to reply briefly to some remarks made by the Senator from Ohio, and I have consented to yield to him for that purpose.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, we are engaged in discussing a discriminating protective tariff bill. Every gentleman who has discussed it on either side has considered the effect of the bill upon industries and prices. The question has been at all times how industries would be affected. Many industries, and particularly those which are conducted by trusts, have been amply provided for. If there is any great trust which has not received consideration, I have overlooked it.

The proposition to put wool on the free list, I say to my Democratic friends, is unfortunate in the extreme. It is more, it is cruel. This industry is peculiarly situated in the West. About two-fifths of the area of the United States is either arid or semiarid. It is a mountainous country and peculiarly adapted to raising sheep. It is an entirely similar country to the larger portion of Mexico, South America, and Australia. It is equally well adapted to growing sheep with any other country in the world. It is impossible to conduct the industry in the United States as cheaply as in the other countries named. Wages are much higher necessarily. Our rivals are all silver standard countries. That gives them an advantage of about 50 per cent in wages over what they had formerly. The railroads have placed Mexico nearer to the markets of the East than the great interior of the United States; the country is narrow between the two oceans, and the distance to water transportation is short. They have gone largely into woolgrowing. The same condition obtains along the coast of South America and in Australia. They are largely engaged in the business, and it costs for labor three or four times as much in the United States as it does in those countries. Transportation is in their favor. Consequently it is impossible to utilize our country for that purpose. There is an ample region in that part of our country for producing all the wool the United States can possibly consume and even a surplus, provided there was such protection as would make competition equal.

Now, the region of the country that this provision falls especially heavy upon has already received at the hands of this Congress a most fatal blow. Its great industry is destroyed. Thousands are thrown out of employment, and they are trying every way to make a living. If you destroy the wool industry you cut off one of the principal avenues still open to them.

The duty on wool has been a very small one, a much lower duty than you figure it on paper, because the countries that compete with us are nearly all on the silver basis, and the tariff is lowered every time the commercial value of silver falls, because it is estimated at the custom-house according to the commercial value of the bullion in the coin. That fixes the price in foreign markets. It is according to the commercial value, according to the value of the dollar. The statute says that it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to state the value of foreign coins according to the pure metal of standard value. This is not done. The statute is disregarded, and it is measured according to the pure metal of commercial value, and we have nominally now, say, 12 cents a pound duty on wool, but it amounts to only about 6 cents a pound.

The duty is very small as it now exists; but since this proposition was made to put wool on the free list my neighbors and friends write me that they are unable to sell their wool without making a still further reduction. Transportation from the interior is heavier than from some other countries. Labor is three or four times as dear, because we use white labor; we use Americans, and we can not get them down to the labor of the Mexican. They can not live on it. They can not live on the food the Mexican lives on; it is impossible. And to-day what enables the American laborer to exist? It is a lower grade of living than we have. Our people could not for generations be brought down to the low grade of living of other countries, and we can not compete with them.

Now, this is a protective tariff bill, and you are discussing what the industries will bear without any disposition to destroy them. There would be some reason in placing wool on the free list if woolens were free, so that we could buy where we sell. But the nonprotected industries buy all the exports and pay all the interest on our foreign obligations, and are compelled to sell their products to bear that burden in the lowest market in the world, in a market made at gold prices in Europe, where they come in competition not only with the cheap labor of Europe, but with the cooly labor of Asia. But we are compelled to buy our clothing in a protected market under this bill. Why should not our wool be protected?

I concur with the Senator from Ohio. I did not rise to reply to him except to one remark he made. He said that the cause of low prices was overproduction. I deny it. It is underconsumption. Last year for example—I need go into no other argument—the wheat crop of the world was 325,000,000 bushels, less than an average crop, and still wheat has never been as low as this year for three hundred years. With population increased and the world's crop falling off over 300,000,000 bushels, wheat is cheaper than it has been for three hundred years. So there must be some other cause besides overproduction.

You may take any article of that kind. You may take clothing. The consumption of clothing, like the consumption of everything, is falling off. People are economizing because they have not money to buy. The idea of overproduction is absurd. The whole world can not produce more than they consume. The wants of man multiply much more rapidly than production can be increased. It can not keep pace with the wants of man. It is only the question of the grade of living. In India the ryot lives on a mere pittance. He receives from 6 to 8 and 10 cents a day, and sometimes 4 cents a day, and ekes out a miserable existence with that compensation, but he does not consume what he would consume if he had the money to buy. See how your houses would be furnished and see how your children would be clad and educated if you had the money to do it. It is underconsumption to get down to a gold standard.

The property of the world is measured by the gold standard, and there is not gold enough. Gold can not be obtained. The gold of the world is pooled and it can not be obtained. Just see where your gold is. The amount of gold in the world to-day is estimated at from thirty-five to thirty-seven hundred million dollars, and it is said that a large portion of that, which is not exactly estimated, probably three thousand million, is in the United States and Europe. Where is that three thousand million? Five hundred and fifty million are said to be in the Russian war chest, $150,000,000 or thereabouts in Austria, bought with a view of resuming specie payments and held there; $900,000,000 are in France, and $700,000,000 of silver, and with all the obligations payable in silver, if you attempt to export gold they will make you take silver.

Besides France keeps up her circulation and keeps money among the people to enable them to produce still more than she buys, and the balance of the trade is in her favor. With $900,000,000 of gold, $700,000,000 of silver, and about seven or eight hundred million dollars of paper there is a very large per capita for that people. So you can not get any part of the nine hundred million of gold out of France. That you can not have. Germany, with between four and five hundred million dollars, say $450,000,000, was compelled to adopt the same policy with France and use silver to protect her gold from export. She has $150,000,000 of silver to protect her gold and keep it in the country. England with about $450,000,000 of gold pretends to have free gold for the commerce of the world, and the world owes her ten billion according to Gladstone, or twelve billion according to Goschen, on which she is receiving interest to the amount of $500,000,000 per annum, and she has to raise the rate of interest to keep her gold at home.

We have no way of protecting our gold under the policy of the Treasury Department, notwithstanding all our obligations are payable in silver. It goes out and there is no way of getting more. The United States is now said to have $600,000,000 of gold. We have no such amount. If we have $400,000,000 it is a high estimate. That gives about $3,000,000,000, which is all the gold there is in the United States and Europe, except in the small states. There may be from one hundred and fifty to two hundred million among the little governments, and they hold it for a reserve and you can not get it.

The reason why there is underconsumption in this country is because the people can not sell their products for money. If they could sell at fair prices the produce that they have for money they would clothe their children well. They would build good houses. They would live in comfort if they could, but under the existing conditions they must adopt a lower scale of living; they must live as the poor in other countries. That is the condition of things.

What a people will consume is measured by what they can get to consume, and it is underconsumption by means of falling prices, stagnation, and hard times which affects the country now.

See how these mountain States are situated with that class of people, with their principal industry destroyed, relying upon the few sheep and cattle, the few things they can transport, to buy clothing and the necessaries of life. You see that they would be discriminated against in this protective bill.

Now, this bill can never be satisfactory to the American people, and particularly to the people of the West. I know Senators may give figures and say the price of wool has fallen under the McKinley tariff law. Everything else has fallen, and wool particularly has been reduced by the falling price of silver, because it comes from silver-standard countries. The price in the foreign market is estimated by the commercial value of silver. So you have nearly wiped out the benefit of the duty by the destruction of silver.

There is no article on which the duty has been so affected as this one. You may well say that the McKinley act could not keep it up. The reduction by the price of silver has been twice as much since the McKinley act was passed as the increase by the McKinley act. So the duty has been lowered by the fall of silver since the McKinley act passed. That is the reason why the price of wool has fallen. It has fallen because the prices of all property have fallen to the gold standard. It has fallen because the duty is estimated in foreign countries upon which the duty is based according to the commercial value of silver, and every drop in silver has reduced that duty. Consequently we might expect a fall in the price of wool.

But this bill will make a still further fall and must destroy the industry. We can not produce wool upon the same conditions with our labor as in Mexico and South America. It is impossible. Our people will be driven to Mexico. I met a gentleman last night, a man of wealth and enterprise from Illinois, who had been down to Mexico. He said he was going to Mexico because he could do business there. He was going to plant a colony in Mexico, because with the range of labor and the free coinage of silver and plenty of money he said he could make some money there.

Mexico is being filled up by our best citizens in their cotton factories, their woolen factories, in their railroad building, and in their mining, because they have money with which to do business there. Here on the gold basis in this country if you strike down this tariff on wool you will strike a cruel and a fatal blow at a region of the country that has been affected more than any other because we have suffered in common with all others the baneful effects of the gold standard. We have not only realized the fall in prices which we have suffered, but our industry has been destroyed, our towns depopulated, and our people thrown out of employment. I beg of the Democratic party not to place wool on the free list.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President, although I am a firm believer in the principle of protection, and want to see that policy sustained and perpetuated, I am opposed to the protective tariff bill now before this Senate. I am opposed to it because of its discriminations, its sectional inequalities, and its false pretenses.

It discriminates against the people of the Northwest by placing wool upon the free list, and in favor of the people of another section by giving rice a duty of 90 per cent. It further discriminates against us in that it levies a duty which has been estimated at more than 50 per cent upon sugar, and almost on the next page provides that Canada and all other grain-producing countries in the world may bring their products here free of any duty whatever.

Its other great inequality is the general principle which it establishes of placing the raw materials of the West upon the free list and giving protection to those institutions of the East and the Southeast that can no longer lay claim to being "infant industries." In view of this discrimination against our raw materials, the trifling reduction provided for in this bill upon manufactured articles does not remove the burdens that our friends on the other side claim were imposed by the act of 1890.

While its authors assert that it will extend the market for agricultural products, they have provided for the repeal of the beneficent reciprocity clauses of the act of 1890, thereby narrowing the American farmer's foreign market by many millions of dollars. Thus it is full of false pretense and flagrant deception.

I am aware, Mr. President, that this may be considered a narrow, selfish, sectional view to take of a great question which concerns the whole country and all the people in it, but when I find in the bill now being considered a decided advance over the rates in the Wilson bill as it came from the House upon certain manufactured products of the States of Maryland and New Jersey; upon Tennessee marble and upon the Trojan industry of collars, cuffs, and shirts—the latter equaling the duty under the McKinley bill—I feel that in complaining over that which we of the West did not get, I should not meet with any severer condemnation than is accorded to those who remain silent because of receiving that which they demanded. There is ground for the complaint I enter here against this measure which puts raw materials of my State upon the free list and gives the Louisiana Senators 40 per cent duty on raw sugar.

There is reason in my opposition when we know that the industries which sustain the people of North Dakota are to be subjected to open, unrestricted competition from every quarter of the globe, while coal, iron, steel, clothing, and in fact all the principal necessaries of life which they must buy are to be subjected to a duty ranging from 40 to 60 per cent. Nearly 42 per cent duty is levied upon woolen clothing, while raw wool comes in free. Little wonder that the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS] declines to share the responsibility for so unjust a measure, but his friends at the hustings and the county fairs in the West, where his voice has so often been heard against the "robber barons," will marvel deeply over the small part he takes in tariff tinkering this year. He may acquit himself, however, by telling our people, when he comes West again, that his colleagues on the committee relieved him of all responsibility, agreeing to do the "fat frying" themselves. So, too, may the senior Senator from New Jersey enjoy the benefits of protection by telling his constituents he had nothing to do with it.

Why are these discriminations made? The senior Senator from Maryland declares that the duties have been levied in the interest of revenue. The senior Senator from New York tells us that the bill will raise $75,000,000 more revenue than is required. If the latter statement is correct, it seems to me that it was the plain duty of the Senator from Maryland, who has emphasized his leadership on the majority side of the Chamber, to give the people on the Western prairies free coal, and to leave the duty on cotton duck out of which their overalls are made at 25 per cent, as in the House bill, instead of putting it up to 35 per cent, as in the Gorman bill. It may not be out of place to incidentally mention the fact that the manufacture of cotton duck is a leading industry of Maryland.

The census of 1890 returns eleven cotton-duck establishments in that State, producing 21,000,000 yards, valued at $4,000,000. It also shows seventeen establishments engaged in the wool industry. It is perhaps only a coincidence, but there is also a decided increase in the Senate bill over the House bill in the rates on manufactured woolens, and it appears that they were all agreed upon only a short time before the distinguished Senator from Maryland made his compromise speech in this Chamber, predicting that the New York Senators and all the Democratic Senators would eventually follow his lead and vote for the measure. The returns from New Jersey show fifty establishments engaged in the wool industry and seventeen in the cotton industry. Doubtless another coincidence. Yet the fact remains that manufactures of woolens have been given high protection; likewise cotton duck.

Does anyone believe that the able junior Senator from California has agreed to support this protective tariff bill because apples, dates, olives, figs, and raisins were taken from the free list of the House bill and put upon the dutiable list of the Senate Finance Committee's bill at rates varying from 20 to 30 per cent ad valorem, and that the duty on plums, prunes, figs, raisins, and other dried fruits, including Zante currants, has been increased here on the floor to 1½ cents per pound? Perish the thought! We know that he will support it solely for the sake of tariff reform.

The senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON] tells us that the protection in this bill represents simply the amount of higher wages paid in this country. If this is true the labor cost of sugar and shirt making must be enormous, but we have reason to rejoice over the fact that the slogan of the Democratic stump orator that protection does not place the rate of wages paid in this country above the rate paid in foreign countries is to be heard no more in the land forever. Wherefore I am profoundly impressed with the belief that some people are content to sleep with their own consciences if they only may be permitted to enjoy the spoils of office.

Mr. President, under this bill wool, wheat, wheat flour, oats, corn, corn meal, buckwheat, rye, and rye flour are on the free list—wool absolutely so, and the other articles will be, so soon as foreign countries take the hint and remove the duties upon our exportations of these articles.

The most serious shock to the institutions of the West will be caused by the removal of the duty on raw wool. When asked why this should be done, the theorists responsible for this proposed legislation answer that we can not produce in this country the wool necessary to carry on the business of manufacturing certain lines of woolen goods. This unpatriotic proposition has been refuted repeatedly. If it were true, why not except from the operations of this discriminating measure the classes of wool that we can produce? The best authorities on this subject say that every class of wool required for manufacturing all kinds and grades of woolens, including carpets, is produced in the United States, and that adequate protection, continued as the policy of this Government, insuring safety of investment in sheep-raising, would result in the production of an abundant supply of wool for home comsumption.

Under this head I desire to submit to the Senate some extracts from a circular on the wool question recently issued by Justice, Bateman & Co., of Philadelphia, under date of March 1, 1894. I ask that the extracts marked with a pencil be read at the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as indicated.

The Secretary read as follows:

1. Effect of the threat of free wool.—Rumors from Washington with reference to the probable passage or defeat of the tariff bill now influence the market. With the waning prospects of securing any duty on wool, the demand has fallen off and is now limited to the temporary requirements of the mills.

Although prices are the lowest ever known in this country, there is no certainty that the bottom has yet been reached.

Many industries that were on the eve of revival have been halted, and a more general paralysis of business prevails. This contraction is shown in the falling off in bank clearings which for the month of February were in the neighborhood of 35 per cent below those of the previous month, and it is also shown by the falling off in railroad earnings. Business recovery is seriously impeded by the diminished purchasing power of the nation, owing to the loss of earnings by the army of unemployed. The heavy shrinkage in the value of property and merchandise during the past nine months involves the wool market by the very great curtailment in the sale of clothing, the home production as well as the imports of which have so greatly fallen off.

2. Why should wool be free?—No satisfactory reason can be given why wool should be exposed to the destructive influences of foreign competition. It is a necessity of our comfortable existence, and no army without wool could successfully conduct its operations in time of war. Wool is as much a munition of war as any other material. If coal is not to be considered a raw material, there is much more reason why wool can not be so considered, as it takes a whole year for a sheep to produce its fleece; yet coal in one hour can be got ready for market. The element of labor in marketing a ton of wool exceeds many fold that which is expended in marketing a ton of coal; yet there seems to be much greater chance for a duty upon coal than upon wool. If unfavorable legislation should close the coal mines of this country for a thousand years the coal would still remain there, ready for use whenever the nation was once more permitted to resume its industrial activities; but when the flocks of sheep disappear, as they are now doing, they can not be suddenly restored. If this industry is to begin anew it will take many years to reach its present proportions, and if the blow now aimed at the woolgrowing industry is struck it will cause its practical destruction.

3. Free wool will cause the export of gold and bring financial panics. The ultimate result of this would be not only dependence upon foreign countries for our wool supply, but the loss to the nation of the value of the domestic clip, for, instead of distributing its cost among woolgrowers at home, to be spent at home, it must be paid in gold to foreigners, with the ultimate result of higher prices for clothing. This would be a decided loss to the whole nation without any corresponding gain.

4. American woolgrowers can soon produce all needed wools under adequate protection. The American sheep husbandry under adequate protection has twice made such rapid headway in the increase of flocks as to lead to the assurance that with the continuance of that protection we would soon produce the total amount of wool consumed by this country. During the last twelve years of the tariff law of 1867 the American clip increased 100 per cent, that increase being from 170,000,000 pounds in 1873 to over 340,000,000 pounds in 1884. If the duties had not been lowered at the end of that period, it is fair to assume that the same ratio of increase would have continued, in which case we would have produced in 1895 over 650,000,000 pounds, which, including the raw wool imported in the shape of manufactured goods, is the total amount of wool consumed by this country. A serious check to the growth of the wool industry was given by the reduction of duties in 1883, but with the restoration of a portion of those duties by the McKinley law in 1890 such an impetus was given to the woolgrowing industry that the clip again increased at a rapid rate. The increase was from 310,000,000 pounds in 1891 to 360,000,000 in 1893, so that if the McKinley law had not been assailed it is fair to assume that by the year 1900 we would produce 650,000,000 pounds.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I also send to the desk and ask to have read a short article from the Philadelphia Manufacturer, of February 24, 1894, showing that adequate protection would soon give us all the wool we need.

The Secretary read as follows:

The figures respecting American wool published last week by the Bureau of Statistics were intended to prove that American sheep husbandry had made no headway under protection. They concealed the fact that between the years 1881 and 1890 the number of American sheep rose to high figures and then, under the influence of reduced duties, fell again. The correct figures demonstrate conclusively that the business prospers under high duties and decays under low duties. Under the high duties of the tariff of 1867 the American clip expanded from 170,000,000 pounds in 1873 to 340,000,000 pounds in 1884. That is to say, it doubled in twelve years. If the duties had not been lowered in 1883 we may fairly suppose that the same ratio of increase would have continued.

In that case we should have produced 680,000,000 pounds of wool two years hence, in 1896. The total consumption at the present time (including the wool in imported fabrics) is about 650,000,000 pounds. This is the industry that is marked for slaughter by the free traders at a time when the low prices of wool and the increasing consumption show that the high duties oppress nobody. It is selected for sacrifice, not for the advantage of the people; not for the benefit of anybody, but solely because the purpose of the free traders is to root out the system of protection to home industry, and this can not be accomplished while the farmers are interested with the manufactures in maintaining it.

Wool is the very last of the raw materials of industry, now dutiable, that should be exposed to the destructive influences of foreign competition. In the first place, it is a positive necessity of comfortable existence in this country. Without it our people can not live safely in time of peace. Without it no American army can conduct operation in time of war. Coal and iron ore are no more essential to the vital force of the nation. But no power in Congress or out of it can deprive the country of its mineral resources. If American legislation upon industrial matters should be controlled by jackassery and treason for a thousand years, the coal and the iron ore in our minds would remain as they are, ready for use, whenever the nation once more permitted reason to resume its sway. The coal could be placed in marketable shape within a few hours.

The iron ore would be ready for the furnace fires as quickly. But, when American flocks of sheep shall disappear, as now they are disappearing, they can not suddenly be restored. Beginning anew, sheep husbandry could hardly within twenty years regain its recent proportions. The blow aimed at the business now is, therefore, intended to produce destruction which may possibly be irreparable, for, while no assurance of continued protection shall be given, Americans will find small inducement again to invest capital in the industry. The ultimate result will probably be, not only dependence upon other countries for a material which this country can easily produce, and not only the loss of the whole cost of the domestic wool clip, but higher prices for both wool and mutton.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. The ability of the American wool-raiser to eventually produce all the necessary grades is not seriously questioned by intelligent men; it is not even questioned by the members of the Finance Committee, who sent out a long list of interrogatories to wool men.

Now, as to the necessity for protection. The domestic wool-raiser can not compete upon an equal footing with the wool-raiser of Australia and South America. First, climatic conditions are against him; and second, his mode of living is far above that of his foreign competitor. Details on these points are unnecessary; they are understood by everyone.

If, however, there were not this great disparity in conditions, the advantage to the foreign wool-raiser in the matter of freights is so great as to leave no two opinions on the subject. That we may have the whole question stated in a nutshell, let us understand that as to the cost of production the figures are 2 to 1 against us, and in the matter of carrying charges they are 9 to 1. To be more explicit, wool can be and is produced in foreign countries at 6 cents per pound, as against 12 cents in this country, while the freight rate from London to Liverpool is one-fourth cent per pound as against 2½ cents from Rocky Mountain points. Now, when it is understood that about 60 per cent of the sheep in this country are located west of the Mississippi River, we are at once confronted with reasons of the most emphatic nature why there should be some encouragement for the domestic wool producer if he is to continue in the business against all comers.

The passage of this monstrous measure means the complete annihilation of the wool industry in the West. Sheep will hereafter be reared only for their mutton. The seriousness of the situation may be seen when it is known that the value of investments in the woolraising industry in this country is about $200,000,000, and that at least 2,000,000 of people are engaged in it. Their plight will be much more serious than that of the factory hand, who, under this act, may accept the wages of the European workman. Deprived of a market for their wool by reason of the great disparity in freights, our farmers must produce it at any cost or sacrifice or go out of the business, because the market will be entirely controlled by the Australian and the South American. Especially will this be true as regards the Western wool-raiser. In his case the triumph of free trade will be complete.

It has been said that wool producing has not progressed under protection. The figures refute this statement. Under the law of 1867, which was repealed in 1883, sheep-raising progressed rapidly. In 1881 there were 290,000,000 pounds of wool produced in the United States. The amount had increased to 337,500,000 pounds in 1884—47,500,000 pounds increase in four years. These favorable results were under the operation of a duty of 12½ cents per pound, which Congress in 1883 reduced to 10 cents per pound. This reduction in duty was the work of a Republican Administration in response to a great outcry by free traders and other superficial minds that the people were being robbed.

The Democrats in various parts of the country at once took political advantage of it, and in Ohio strong resolutions were passed at Democratic conventions denouncing the Republican Congress for destroying the sheep industry. Well, there was some truth in the resolutions, notwithstanding their origin. Under this reduced wool tariff the product in the United States fell off about 30,000,000 pounds by 1891. But the effect of the act of 1890—the McKinley law—was almost momentary. The increase in sheep was very rapid and the output reached the unprecedented figure of 364,156,666 pounds in 1893—an increase of 18½ per cent in three years, under a duty of 11 cents per pound.

Mr. President, it is said further that protection has not helped prices of wool. How utterly unworthy of sober serious thought is this statement. Prices did decline after the passage of the McKinley act, but was that decline the fruit of that act? Let us see. For thirty years the price of wool in free-trade London has been 50 per cent lower than the price in America under protection. Mr. Theodore Justice, perhaps the best authority in the United States on wool, says that the—

> London value of wool during the two years previous to Mr. Cleveland's inauguration fell off over 30 per cent, and during the same period American wool declined less than 7 per cent. If it was not the protection of the McKinley tariff that stood between Ohio woolgrowers and the cheaper wool markets of the world, what was it?

Mr. Justice sums up the situation during the two years succeeding Mr. Cleveland's restoration to power in the following terse language:

> Since President Cleveland's inauguration, and the assault by his Administration upon the American wool industry, American prices have declined from 25 to 30 per cent, when the outside markets of the world are unchanged, and why? Why did American wools hold up before this Administration came in and fall immediately afterwards? It was because it was well known by everybody in the business that the London or free-trade price could not be reached without a decline in American prices of at least 50 per cent, and the movement toward the London market is in progress.

The condition of the wool market for the past year or more is very accurately described in a recent number of the Boston Herald. I quote from its commercial columns:

> The wool market is in a peculiar state. The fear of tariff legislation bringing free wool is terrorizing both producer and dealer. The producer is being alarmed into selling his wool at prices lower than ever dreamed of in the industry, while the dealer is alarmed to the extent that he dares not buy this wool, however low it may be offered. For these reasons very little wool is being purchased by the trade here, notwithstanding that it is at the beginning of the new clip, and a time when a good deal of wool would naturally be negotiated for in the country markets.
> Receivers are also afraid of advancing too much money on wool offered on consignment. They lost money last year by overadvances, and they are very cautious this year about doing the same thing again.
> It is true that freights are against the domestic grower of wool, as compared with the grower abroad. Wool has been landed here from London as low as 1 cent per pound, while from some of the Territories it has cost, at the same time, 5 cents per pound. But such freights must come down. Indeed, they are already lower, till to-day 3 cents per pound on Territory wool is considered a very high price. In the meantime, if the American wool-grower were allowed a protection equal to the difference in freights, it would be the sentiment of very many in the trade substantially expressed.

This, as I have indicated, is from the news columns of the Herald. The opinions of the editor in the editorial columns are widely different, being in favor of free wool and advocating the beauties of that ignis fatuus, the "world's markets." It is the old story again fully illustrating the difference between fact and theory. The reporter who went out among the buyers and dealers, the men who know something about wool, writes of the situation as it really exists, while the editor, his head filled with free-trade theories, continues to dream of the beauties of "the world's markets." He persists in looking for great oceans, when we know that he will find only duck ponds; his mind running to the airy and indefinable altitudes of commercial æstheticism, although he must soon realize the inevitable importance of returning to a plain everyday diet of home markets and baked beans.

Mr. President, if we accept the statement of those in authority in this Chamber that the protective duties in this bill have been levied with a view to fortifying the American workingman against the low wages of his European brother (the senior Senator from New Jersey has declared that to be the case) where is the consistency of putting wool upon the free list, when we all know that 90 per cent of the cost of producing it is labor?

Here is an item showing the importance of the sheep industry in this country. At the date of the Republican victory of 1888 there were perhaps 50,000 head of sheep in the State of North Dakota. The exact figures are not known, because the industry was small, being confined under a hostile Administration solely to the demand for mutton. At the date of the Democratic victory in 1892 the official figures showed the number of sheep in the State to be 557,590, an increase of 1,100 per cent. Under the impetus to woolgrowing given by Republican success, the sheep industry increased until it reached third or fourth place in importance among the industries of the State. Sheep were brought there from the widely separated States of Washington, Texas, and Ohio. The price paid ranged from $2.50 to $4 per head.

Last fall, under the baneful influence of this free-trade and gold-standard Administration, sheep sold in North Dakota for 75 cents to $1.25 per head. There was practically no market for wool at any price.

The free-wool value on the farm to-day for the leading grade of wool in North Dakota is 7½ cents per pound, while the minimum price for the same previous to March, 1893, which was before the McKinley law was assailed and before the effects of its repeal had been discounted, was 16 cents per pound on the farm.

It must be a very beautiful political theory, the success of which will compensate my constituents for their loss. It is doubtless near akin to the theory of the junior Senator from Texas that that other foreign relative of free trade, the Russian thistle, may spread itself, unopposed by Federal authority, over every acre of land in every State of the Union, to the permanent injury of agriculture, but he will agree to invoke the aid of the Constitution and go forth to do battle against it only when the District of Columbia is invaded by it.

I find some very interesting statistics in a recent circular issued by Justice, Bateman & Co., and I will ask at this point to insert in my remarks a tabulated statement showing the prices of wool at various periods.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FAULKNER in the chair). The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

The table is as follows:

†Before which time the McKinley law was in full force, but since which date its practical effects have been as nearly null and void as though the bill had actually been repealed.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. This circular also contains an introductory paragraph to the effect that if only 5 cents per pound duty is put upon wools of the first and second classes, which are mainly those qualities grown in the United States, over $18,000,000 more than the free-wool price will be put into the hands of the woolgrowers for the wool crop of 1894, which is now being shorn and prepared for market.

If raw materials like coal and iron ore are to be protected, although in one hour after lying dormant in the mine they can be got ready for market, why should not wool also be protected, when it requires a whole year to prepare it for market as against one hour for coal and iron ore? If the free raw material planks of the Chicago platform are to be waived with regard to coal and iron ore, why should the same policy not be applied to American wool?

"The tariff is a tax," has ever been the shibboleth of free traders. Is it true? Only partially so. Those who assert it rely upon theory for proof. What are the practical facts? Every mill or fraction of a mill placed upon imported sugars, raw or refined, is added to the cost of the article when it reaches our shores, because we make so little sugar in this country that there is no competition here among producers. So that the 45 or 50 per cent placed upon sugar, if this bill becomes a law, is a tax collected from the consumers. If we controlled the sugar market, as we would if we produced all or nearly all the sugar we consume, there would be competition at home, and competition would adjust the price.

By continuing the system of bounties inaugurated under the act of 1890 we would in a very few years produce all the sugars we need for our own use. A tariff on raw sugar simply permits the cane-sugar industry to exist, but it will not grow, because it has reached its limit. A continuing bounty upon beet sugar would build up that industry and enable the people of the United States to supply themselves instead of relying upon foreign countries.

Now, let us pursue this proposition that "the tariff is a tax" a step further. Take the item of barley as a fair illustration of the effect of a duty upon all imports of agricultural products. Practically all of these imports come from Canada. During three years under the McKinley act we have imported 5,037,663 bushels of barley, upon which a duty of 30 cents per bushel was collected, amounting to $1,511,300.

Now, if the New York price of barley was, as has been given, 60 cents per bushel, and "the tariff is a tax," then the price of barley in Canada must have been 30 cents per bushel. So in truth it was a tax upon the Canadian farmer and not upon the domestic consumer. The Canadian farmer paid the extra 30 cents per bushel for the privilege of selling in our market, and the $1,511,300 collected upon barley imports was in the form of a contribution from him and went into the Treasury to help pay the running expenses of our Government. Our domestic output of barley during those three years was about 170,000,000 bushels. Consequently there has been competition at home, and this has regulated the price. If in that time we had produced only 5,000,000 bushels, being obliged to buy the 170,000,000 needed for consumption, "the tariff would be a tax," because the original price of barley would have been fixed abroad. To this price would have been added the amount of the tariff.

The wisdom of a bounty upon sugar, of which we produce but 10 or 12 per cent of our needs, must be apparent. Under the McKinley act we are paying about $12,000,000 annually in sugar bounties, and at the same time building up the industry of beet sugar making in this country; under the Gorman bill we will pay a tax on sugar amounting to $50,000,000 or $60,000,000 per year, and the sugar-making industry here will come to a standstill. There is no demand from any quarter for the abolition of this bounty. It is now generally conceded to be a most economical and farsighted provision. Nor is there any clamor for the imposition of enormous duties upon this one of the great necessaries of life. It is demanded only by the theorists.

These illustrations might be carried through the entire list of agricultural products. The people of Canada have been under the present law contributing large sums of money to our Treasury every year in return for the privilege of selling their products in our markets. Now it is proposed to change this policy and give them free access.

Under the policy of a tariff for revenue undoubtedly the "tariff is a tax" upon our people; under the operations of the practical policy of protection it is not strictly so, because in hundreds of instances the foreigner pays it.

I have found in my mail recently a most interesting statement upon the general subject of protection, made officially by the National Grange of the Patrons of Husbandry. It is so complete that I desire to have it read for the information of the Senate, and I send it to the Secretary's desk for that purpose.

The Secretary read as follows:

To the Senators and Representatives assembled in the Congress of the United States:

GENTLEMEN: We, the undersigned, have been appointed a committee of the National Grange of the Patrons of Husbandry to urge before your honorable body such legislation as is deemed by our order essential to the prosperity of the agricultural interests of our country; and in attempting to discharge this duty we find it necessary to emphatically object to some of the changes proposed by the agricultural schedule of the so-called Wilson tariff bill, and in so doing we have nothing to say for or against protection as a policy of the Government; but as a revenue measure every American citizen is interested.

We deem it the true policy of the National Government to collect its revenues, as much as possible, from duties on imports, as being a system of taxation more equitable and less burdensome when justly distributed than direct taxation upon the industries and property of our people, thus leaving this class of subjects to the States for taxation for the collection of their revenues, as they can not levy an import tax under the Constitution of the General Government. Another reason why foreign trade should pay import duties is that our Government must maintain wharves and warehouses for the accommodation of their trade, and this trade should justly pay for this privilege out of which it is proposed to gain a livelihood.

The members of our order, of course, differ in their views upon the details of equitable tariff legislation. It is not the duty of the order to interfere with the free exercise of the rights of our members as citizens.

When the people at the ballot box decide any issue raised by the political parties on general principles our order cheerfully accepts the situation, and only insists that the policy thus indorsed shall be fairly carried into effect, without any discrimination against the farmer, or any class or interest in our country.

When the people decided for the protective policy at the polls we asked Congress that in the proposed tariff revision agriculture should receive the same consideration as did other interests. Our demands were respectfully and fully considered, and, with one exception, all that we asked was incorporated in the tariff laws of our country, and the farmers were largely incidentally protected in the American markets, and as a result realized better prices for hay, barley, vegetables, potatoes, beans, live stock, poultry, eggs, tobacco, fruits, and many other products, which were not oppressive to those engaged in other vocations.

In the change of the political situation of our country our farmers had reason to believe that in the revision of the tariff, placing it on a new basis, that it would be so adjusted that duties would be imposed largely on luxuries and such products as might be imported that would directly come in competition with American agricultural productions and American manufactures, which were essential to give employment to American labor and capital. In fact this was guaranteed in the Chicago platform of the present party.

The legislative committee of the National Grange, at the special session of Congress, advised the Committee of Ways and Means of the importance of taking care of the agricultural interests in drafting a revised tariff bill.

Had the committee reported a bill in strict conformity with the decision of the people at the polls we should have nothing to say against it, but because the proposed legislation is very unjust, in so far as it pertains to the farmers, and unfairly discriminates against the interests of agriculture by virtually abandoning the New England, New York, and coast trade to Canada and other foreign countries, by reason of proximity and cheap water transportation, which in effect bring the producers in foreign countries closer to these markets than our American farmers in the interior, who must transport by the more costly methods of rail.

The great bulk of agricultural products imported into the United States from Canada and countries beyond the sea are consumed in our seaboard cities and great manufacturing centers of the East, which should be preserved as a market for the products of the farmers of the United States.

Your petitioners respectfully maintain that the difference in the cost of agricultural productions in the United States and in foreign countries should be regarded as a just measure of the duties which may be laid upon the products of foreign agriculture for the protection of American farmers. The cost of agricultural productions, including the transportation in the United States, exceeds the cost of such productions in Canada, including transportation, by 44 per cent, owing to the price of labor. This is at least 10 per cent in excess of the duties now imposed by law upon the products of foreign agriculture, and the cost of agricultural productions in countries beyond the sea is even less than in Canada, owing to the same cause.

The Wilson tariff bill, as it now stands, is unjust as between the manufacturer and the farmer, who is a producer of wool, flax, and other fibrous productions that enter into the manufacture of cloth. If the manufacturer should have free wool—then the farmer should have free cloth.

We ask only for justice—that you treat the farmer as others are treated.

The placing of agricultural implements on the free list in compensation for the reduction of the duty on agricultural products is ridiculed by every intelligent farmer, as no agricultural implements are imported of any consequence, being much inferior to those manufactured in the United States, which are sold to the farmer for a less price and on easier terms than in any country in the world.

In view of the foregoing facts, we earnestly ask all true friends of the farmer to insist upon a fair revision of the tariff, and that in any legislation upon the subject the present agricultural schedule be maintained, or otherwise defeat the proposed legislation.

We also desire to impress upon your minds the fact that we do not consider the present financial system of our country as satisfactory, and believe it is the cause of much of the financial embarrassment. Our members generally favor an increase in the volume of the currency to meet the business requirements and revive the industries of our country and give employment to labor.

The majority of our farmers are bimetallists. They may differ somewhat as to the details, but earnestly desire to maintain both silver and gold as money, with an issue of United States Treasury notes, if necessary, to bring the volume of the currency up to at least $40 per capita. They favor such financial legislation and such an adjustment of the tariff as will secure our American markets for American labor and American capital which will again start our country on a prosperous career.

We therefore respectfully petition your honorable body to favorably consider the great agricultural interests of our country, upon which the prosperity of all other industries depends, and so legislate that the foregoing suggestions, which we have felt it our duty to present, may be enacted into law, believing that it will be the means of bringing contentment and happiness to thousands of rural homes and prosperity to our whole country.

Respectfully submitted,

J. H. BRIGHAM,
LEONARD RHONE.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. This is a nonpartizan appeal from a very old and thoroughly representative organization of practical farmers. Has it been heeded by those in charge of this important measure? Surely it has not.

Mr. President, what will be the consequence of the passage of this bill? If we are to judge by past experience the result is scarcely problematical. The balance of trade must be against us—largely so. Imports of merchandise must increase. Who is there here so sanguine as to look for an increase of exports? The treaties with foreign countries under which we have enlarged our markets are abrogated by this measure, and instead of reciprocity as to dissimilar products we offer them free trade as to like products.

The articles that are foreign to our soil, for which we have been exchanging our wheat, flours, meats, etc., we must hereafter buy for gold, while Canada and the Argentine and the rest of the world may send their grains and flours to us free of duty and lay them alongside of our overstocked warehouses. On top of them the foreign sheep-raiser may stack his raw wool, also free of duty, while the woolen clothing our domestic sheep farmer must buy has a duty of 40 to 50 per cent. Herein lies the inequality if not the infamy of this measure. Exporting European countries will not reward us by purchasing greater quantities of our wheat products unless we undersell Russia, India, and the Argentine Republic, which we can not do and maintain our higher and better standard of living. Mark this prediction: The advantage in the freer trade promised by this measure will be with foreign countries and not with the United States.

Mr. President, I believe that the chief cause of the distress in this country is to be found in the financial system dictated to us by England. The passage of this bill will increase the difficulty. I would not cast my vote for a measure providing for the issuing of bonds and the purchase of gold, nor will I vote for a measure which sends our gold abroad to purchase goods we should make at home. Every vote in behalf of this bill is a vote to increase the indebtedness of our people and to circumscribe them in their opportunities to pay the debts they now owe. Whoever advocates it can not consistently avoid advocating a bond issue. If we must buy we must pay, and the countries from whom we will buy greater quantities of goods, if this measure prevails, are gold-standard countries, so we must pay them in gold or its equivalent.

I am curious to know how my silver friends on the other side of this Chamber will justify their votes in favor of this measure with their past professions on finance. The case was stated in a very forcible way by a Western paper recently. It said:

> Every measure that tends to increase the indebtedness of America to Great Britain is a measure that reenforces the power of European opposition to American silver. Every tariff item that lessens the power of an American mill or factory to make goods that will be sold in America in exchange for American silver, at par with American gold, is an item that compels an American to buy something from Europe, and pay for it in gold.

The junior Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS] says if he had his way he would turn every custom-house into a schoolhouse. By this he means that he would remove every barrier and have absolute free trade. He would have us make a perpetual contract with European countries to take their cheap wares in the hope that they might conclude to take the equivalent in our products. And by his vote in this Chamber last summer the Senator from Texas would enhance the value of that perpetual contract with foreigners by compelling this debtor country to continue payment to those creditor countries in gold. The folly of such a policy is plainly to be seen as a result of the operations of the extravagant free list in the McKinley bill.

For my part, I would be glad of the opportunity of voting for a measure that would put a commercial wall between England and the United States, for that, in my opinion, would be the surest and swiftest way to reach that period of financial independence, the lack of which has brought us to the verge of bankruptcy. I can not understand how it is possible for an American to be at one and the same time an honest free trader and an honest bimetallist.

Mulhall, the great statistician of England, says that the seventy millions of people in the United States consume as much as seven hundred millions of people of other countries. This tells the story of American protection. Think of the enormous trade, free trade, between the States of this Union. There is no record of this trade, or at least we have never heard it quoted by those who stake their political salvation upon acquiring the "markets of the world."

Thus, under a system whose most prominent purpose is the betterment of our own people, we, one-twentieth of the world's inhabitants, are credited with eating and wearing and otherwise consuming as much as one-half the total population of the earth. It is a long way yet to the average level of those with whom free traders wish to place us on an equality, but an enlarged volume of imports, buying abroad more and more of those things we should ourselves produce, and increased exportations of gold to pay for them, will soon bring us to that level.

Mr. President, there are at present some peculiar conditions. There is, for instance, less wheat per capita in the world than at any time during the past ten or fifteen years, and yet the price is lower than it has been at any time in a hundred years. But here is a still greater paradox. Notwithstanding the excessive low price of bread, the mind of man does not run to the period when there were so many empty stomachs as now. This is the situation throughout the world, far less intense here than in foreign countries. Will an enlargement of our importations mitigate this condition of things? I do not believe it.

If, as Mulhall says, we consume as much as half the peoples of the earth, our own trade is more valuable to us than all the trade of old Europe. The future of our own country and our own people is the paramount consideration. One hundred of the yeomanry of our fields and factories are of more consequence to our national prosperity than one thousand monocled Anglomaniacs, with a thousand money-changers as a background. An American community of practical, industrious people is worth a continent of dudes.

The greater ability of the people to buy is the keynote to the situation. Give them work at the American standard of wages. Coin the product of American silver and of gold at the ratio of 16 to 1. Open the American mines now idle and filled with water or inhabited by bats. Enter into trade relations with the silver-using peoples of the world. Encourage the construction of the Nicaragua Canal. Let us do that which experience has shown is best for us to do as Americans. Stop issuing bonds. Cease going into debt, especially to foreign capitalists. Encourage a spirit of retaliation against those countries that oppress us. The equilibrium between our own people will thus soon be established. Their ability to buy amongst themselves will be enlarged. The prices of the things they have to sell to each other will afford them a profit and make life worth living.

Under these new conditions, if the farmer raises more wheat than he can sell—all being fed to the fullness of plenty—there would then be overproduction, and other and more profitable avenues of work would be opened to the wheat-raiser. He would raise sheep, if protected against the cheap-labor wools of foreign competitors. He would make sugar, if properly encouraged to do so. He would produce something that was not being overproduced. Thus would our resources and our ability to consume be given full sway, and there would be fewer hungry ones at the back doors begging for bread and fewer shivering mortals along the roadsides looking for shelter; seeking a place resembling home, that refuge for which every human heart yearns and without which there is emptiness, discontent and desolation.

Can not the free trader see in conditions now existing the utter fallacy of his doctrine? With bread cheapened to the lowest point in our history, as a result of competition in "the world's markets," where the purchasing standard is about $2.50 per capita, there is excessive want in the land. Will the opponents of protection contend that the cause of this unusual situation is that the people have not had the opportunity to buy the necessaries of life from foreigners? With the closing of mills and factories throughout our land, beginning most abruptly after the result of the election of 1892 was known, multitudes of laboring people were forced into idleness. That was not the result of existing laws; it came in consequence of the belief that the triumphant political party would carry out its oft-repeated promise to exchange our home market for the "markets of the world," and it needed no prophet to foretell the consequences if this came to pass.

The fellow over in Europe who expects his brother free trader in this country to make a market for his cheap goods, knows what it means. I find his view of the case in a recent number of the Birmingham (England) Daily Post. I will read it:

The broad principle which will guide the tariff reformers, we are told, is "necessity for revenue to support government furnishes the only justification for taxing the people." The principle is a sound one, and if it could be fully carried out foreign traders would have nothing to complain of at the hands of the United States. A tariff for revenue purposes only would be a free-trade tariff, but in the present temper of the United States people such a sweeping reform is clearly impossible. To attempt such a thing would probably provoke a civil war. We shall be well content if the Democratic party are able, as a first installment, to undo the high-protective mischief of the late Government, and to restore the tariff to something like the moderate level it occupied a decade ago. The mere fact that the attempt is about to be made should do good, by checking the activity of those eager capitalists who are forcing new industries in the United States in the fond hope that the reign of protection will last forever; and it should also facilitate the work of the new Government in its threatened campaign against those tyrannical trusts and combinations for limiting production and determining prices which of late years have attained such enormous development in the United States.

The editor of this British paper would be overjoyed if he knew how the trusts and combinations had been pulverized by this bill. He may see for himself by examining the sugar schedule, the iron ore schedule, the cotton manufacturers' schedule, the woolen manufacturers' schedule, the furnishing goods' schedule, in fact all the schedules covering the necessaries of life. Then let him turn to the schedules pertaining to those articles the farmers produce—wool, grain, flax, cattle, sheep, meats—many of the most important of which are put upon the free list and the others are given insignificant duties.

As I have already indicated, it is no answer for our friends on the other side to say that their object is to gain a wider market for our agricultural products. There are two considerations under which foreign peoples will buy of us: first, if the articles they need can be had here cheaper than elsewhere; and, second, if there is some sort of advantage to them in being able to sell something they have. What are the probabilities as to the first of these? Are we likely ever to reach that condition which will enable us to undersell the cheap-labor products of Russia, India, Australia, and the Argentine? If we do, it will be when our people have arrived at the same level of existence long since reached by those peoples. Free trade will bring us there.

To the second—offering them an inducement to come to us with goods we do not produce in exchange for those things they do not have—what does this bill give? It repeals the reciprocity clauses of the McKinley act, thus destroying a very large trade built up in a wonderfully short space of time, and deprives us of the opportunity of enlarging that trade.

Mr. President, I will insert at this point some statistical matter showing the benefits resulting from our reciprocity treaties. The figures and deductions therefrom are contained in a very interesting communication to the New York Mail and Express, which I will ask the Secretary to read.

The Secretary read as follows:

THE ISAAC HARTER COMPANY, MERCHANT MILLERS,
Fostoria, Ohio, April 28, 1894.

To the Editor of the Mail and Express:

SIR: Permit me to call your attention to the fact that if the Wilson bill in its present form should pass the Senate of the United States it will abrogate the reciprocity treaty now in effect between this country and Spain, which will prove very disastrous to the mercantile interests of this country.

Under the wise provisions of the reciprocity treaty with the island of Cuba our trade has grown phenomenally, increasing on agricultural implements from $74,000 to $130,000, passenger and freight cars from $127,000 to $271,000, India-rubber goods from $27,000 to $42,000, machinery from $965,000 to $2,792,000, cut nails from $48,000 to $107,000, steel bars from $20,000 to $327,000, tools from $115,000 to $243,000, engines from $10,000 to $130,000, wire from $118,000 to $321,000, boots and shoes from $74,000 to $114,000, other articles from $9,472,000 to $18,845,000.

These figures are taken from statistics from Washington and represent the growth of the business from the last year before the McKinley bill was discussed and passed, and 1893, when it was in full operation, so that its possibilities for the future, if maintained, are readily to be seen.

But, under the provisions of the Wilson bill, as now before the Senate, this treaty will be abrogated, and Spain will promptly reimpose its old duties on American goods, which will very largely curtail our business in that very promising market on grain, pork, beef, cheese, butter, flour, iron, cotton and woolen goods, agricultural implements, tools, and a vast number of articles which we export.

It has been suggested that an expedient method by which this may be prevented would be by the adoption of a retaliatory measure, something after the following:

"If any nation shall hereafter increase the duties it charged on March 1, 1894, upon articles produced or manufactured in the United States when the same are imported into it or any of its colonies or possessions, then the tariff duties levied upon articles produced or manufactured in any such nation or any of its possessions or colonies shall be doubled or increased 100 per cent beyond the rate existing at the time of such increase."

It is a matter of vital importance not only to every manufacturer in the country, but also to every agriculturist. The trade in flour alone has grown from insignificant proportions when the duty was $7 a barrel to a total export for the year 1894 of probably 800,000 barrels, and this is very likely to be increased under favorable conditions to a million barrels annually.

This means a market for from four to five million bushels of the American farmers' wheat, which prevents it being thrown on our own or any other markets at depressing prices.

I would be very much pleased to have your valuable journal make editorial comments on this present condition, dwelling particularly on the fact of the great injury it would be to the farmer, and urging this class as well as all others to write to their Senators protesting against the passage of any measure in Congress which will shut us out from so favorable a market.

With the trade in South America rapidly slipping away from us, we can illy afford in the face of these facts to deliberately shut ourselves out of a market so promising in every way as that of Cuba. I would be very much pleased to have you comment editorially on this matter, sending me a marked copy of the paper, as these will be carefully compiled and placed before the Senators, hoping they may see the magnitude of our trade with this island and heed the earnest protest of the American people against the passage of any bill which would destroy this favorable market.

Yours, very truly,

W. C. BROWN, Treasurer.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. The editor of the New York newspaper did comment on these figures as requested. The editorial is brief, and I will ask that it be also read.

The Secretary read as follows:

One of the serious threats of the Wilson bill is brought to light by a special communication to this paper from Fostoria, Ohio. This communication strongly emphasizes the menace of the tariff bill in its present form to our valuable commerce with Cuba by virtue of its abrogation of the reciprocity agreement now in operation between this country and Spain. Our correspondent shows that under this agreement our trade with Cuba has had a phenomenal development. The increase during the period thus represented has been as follows:

	From—	To—
Agricultural implements	$47,000	$130,000
Passenger and freight cars	127,000	271,000
India-rubber goods	27,000	42,000
Machinery	965,000	2,792,000
Cut nails	48,000	107,000
Steel bars	20,000	327,000
Tools	115,000	243,000
Engines	10,000	130,000
Wire	118,000	321,000
Boots and shoes	74,000	114,000
Other articles	9,472,000	18,845,000

This is a remarkable showing, but comes far short of an adequate expression of the beneficial results of the practical operation of reciprocity, even within the circumscribed scope of our Cuban commerce. Under this system our flour exports increased from such an insignificant amount, as to scarcely deserve mention, to about 800,000 barrels for the present year, with the promise of an annual exportation of a million barrels in the near future. This means a market for about 5,000,000 bushels of American wheat under conditions conserving American industries.

If this is true in relation to Cuba, what will be our aggregate loss of trade when we consider the effect of the abrogation by this bill of all our other reciprocity agreements with neighboring sister republics, as well as with more distant foreign countries? We have not at present the figures equal to the demands of such a computation.

It is enough to say that the proposed tariff bill in this, as in almost every other respect, means ruin and destruction to American trade and American industry.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Thus has our reciprocity policy widened the Cuban markets for our products. Let us see what the effect has been upon our trade with Germany. I shall insert the figures without reading them, as I know that every Senator who feels an interest in this matter is familiar with the subject. This table shows the exports to Germany of the articles affected by the reciprocity treaty:

Articles.	1891.	1893.
Agricultural implements	$233,781	$377,735
Corn	2,042,404	2,794,689
Rye	116,664	217,782
Wheat	295,953	2,569,261
Wheat flour	41,039	1,011,385
Casings for sausages	235,575	537,526
Ingots of copper	399,876	580,007
Fertilizers	360,784	1,423,455
Dried apples	100,861	210,140
Oil cake	1,182,041	2,328,169
Cotton-seed oil	168,075	536,587
Beef, canned	593,034	829,652
Bacon and hams	578,408	825,456
Distilled spirits	189,365	1,495,557
Unmanufactured tobacco	3,757,770	4,694,012
Lumber:
Boards, deals, planks, joist	262,088	343,702
Timber	560,422	627,418
All other articles	1,400,459	1,855,740

There was also a very decided increase in our exports to other countries affected by these reciprocity treaties, and it is a very remarkable fact that there has been a decided increase in export trade with all nonreciprocal countries.

Directly in line, Mr. President, with these facts may be taken the effect of this bill upon the flouring interest. The question is very intelligently stated by a North Dakota correspondent, whose letter I ask to have read.

The Secretary read as follows:

GRAND FORKS, N. DAK., January 16, 1894.

DEAR SIR: As you are probably aware, the millers of the United States have at last been aroused to the fact that their product is in many foreign countries actively discriminated against by a higher duty being placed upon flour than what is placed upon wheat, and are now endeavoring individually and by means of closer business association to do all in their power to have this matter remedied. It would seem that the revision of our tariff laws, now engaging the attention of Congress, affords an opportunity that should not be neglected. It is, we understand, proposed that an amendment be offered to the Wilson bill, which would discriminate against importations from all countries which a higher relative rate of tariff on flour than on wheat.

We believe that such action would result in many foreign countries changing their system and in the end that American millers would be enabled to very largely increase their field of foreign trade. We would ask you to carefully think this matter over, and if able to render any assistance in this matter, as you undoubtedly would be, to do all possible. There is no reason that we can see why all, or mostly all, of our wheat should not go abroad in the shape of flour. The millers of the United States are certainly in position to mill their own wheat into flour cheaper than can be done by the European miller, and place them on an even footing. We think that they will do so. This is a matter of grave importance to the millers of the United States and should, we think, deserve the careful attention of all of our Representatives. Trusting you will give this matter your careful attention, we remain,

Yours respectfully,

NORTH DAKOTA MILLING COMPANY,
By E. MAPES, Secretary.

Hon. H. C. HANSBROUGH, Washington, D. C.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. A circular letter issued by the Winter Wheat Millers' League, with headquarters at Indianapolis, Ind., goes further into the details of this question. The letter is short. I ask that it be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

FEBRUARY 6, 1894.

DEAR SIR: There will be submitted an amendment to the pending tariff bill in the interest of the flour manufacturers of the United States, in substance as follows:

"The duties levied and to be paid upon all wines, brandies, beverages, upon all china and glass ware, upon all silks, satins, velvets, upon all cutlery and jewelry, and upon all articles made from cotton, wool, silk, or linen imported from countries charging a larger pro rata or relative duty upon flour made in the United States than upon wheat grown in the United States shall be double the rates named in this bill."

In presenting the claims of the American miller for official recognition, we desire to direct your attention to a few facts regarding this great interest.

The milling industry is second to none in the United States in point of capital and help employed. The mills in the United States have ample capacity to convert into flour every bushel of wheat grown in this country, and like the railroads and farming interests, the milling industry is spread over the entire country, being confined to no particular section.

In 1835 flour represented 97 per cent of the wheat exports from the United States. That per cent has steadily declined until flour represents now about 30 per cent of the wheat exports, a decline of 67 per cent in the face of a constantly increasing capacity to manufacture flour in this country. In 1892 the wheat exports amounted to 225,665,812 bushels, of which 157,280,351 bushels went as raw material and 68,385,461 bushels as the manufactured product. In 1893 exports amounted to 191,912,634 bushels, of which 117,121,103 bushels was in shape of the raw material. Were it possible to export this as flour the saving to our country would be from $8,000,000 to $10,000,000, the cost of manufacture. Of this amount the greater part would be paid out in labor.

The agricultural interest of our country would be equally affected with the millers in the extension of our markets for flour, as a larger local demand for wheat would naturally follow an increased demand for flour, and competition among millers for the grain would enhance its value. Further than this, the farmer would be able to obtain mill offal at a much reduced figure, owing to a larger production, and thus be able to feed more live stock.

A number of foreign countries, large consumers of breadstuffs, chief among which are France and Germany, maintain a tariff duty on American flour double that charged on American wheat. The consumers of bread in those countries prefer American flour on account of its superiority, but the discrimination noted prohibits our flour entering their markets.

France has a millers' organization numbering over 3,500 members, and Germany some 2,800 members. These organizations have influenced their governments to discriminate in favor of our wheat as against our flour, thus enabling them to take the raw material nature has given us. The American miller has never asked any form of protection nor does he now, but he does ask, and justly too, that the Government, while legislating to admit raw material free for other industries, take steps to prevent the drawing from the very mill door his raw material.

Very respectfully,

E. E. PERRY, Secretary.

Hon. HENRY C. HANSBROUGH,
Washington, D. C.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Besides putting wool on the free list and abrogating our reciprocity treaties, this measure invites foreign countries to remove their import duties upon eight principal agricultural products, whereupon we agree to remove our import duties—made extremely low by this measure—upon like products made or manufactured abroad. That is what Lincoln would have called the quintessence of free trade. What does this mean to the wheat-raiser of the Northwest? It is notice to him that when this bill becomes a law and Canada removes her duty of 15 cents per bushel on wheat we will remove ours of 20 per cent advalorem, and thus the Canadian farmer may dump his surplus of wheat upon the top of our surplus, further blocking the avenues of traffic, further engorging the local elevators and grain cars, and depressing local trade and prices. It moreover, without restriction, gives about 5,000,000 Canadians the markets which belong to 70,000,000 of our own people who pay taxes here, subscribe to our form of government, and protect our flag.

In return, our farmers may hunt for a market in Canada for the same products her farmers raise in abundance. If the people of the Northeastern States have been purchasing flour from Minneapolis millers, under this bill they may buy in Toronto or Montreal, which they will doubtless do, as the freight is less from those cities to our Eastern seaboard cities. When the Canadian farmers and millers have thus secured free access to our markets for all they can produce, our own farmers and millers must look for a market for those of their products that have been displaced by Canadian products. Thus we may try to capture the markets of the world if first we let the world into our markets unhindered and free of charge.

Mr. President, the great immediate benefit to the Northwestern farmer of a duty upon wheat is in keeping out the Canadian article, and to be of positive good the duty should be prohibitory. A moderate duty that will let in Canadian wheat—a revenue duty, for instance—furnishes no protection. What our farmers want is to be protected against Canadian wheat itself, more than against the low prices of Canadian wheat. In 1891 the States of Minnesota, North and South Dakota produced 150,000,000 bushels of wheat, the greatest crop on record. The facilities for handling this great quantity of grain were very much overtaxed. I have seen in North Dakota during the marketing season—September, October, and November—thousands of bushels of wheat piled up on the open prairie after every bin and elevator on the farms and at the railway stations and every grain car had been filled; in fact, what may be termed a wheat gorge, with farmers' wagons standing in line waiting for space or elevator room.

Under these conditions the local market price is naturally affected. The temporary oversupply depresses values, and the glutting of the market, the engorgement of the elevators, the wheat blockade, bring stagnation to trade. Everything is stopped. When the farmer can not find a place to put his wheat the market is closed. When the market is closed trade in other lines is suspended. Under these conditions, if this bill becomes a law—when elevators, cars, and vehicles are filled with the wheat produced by our own farmers—the Canadian wheat raiser is given the privilege of bringing his surplus to our local markets and dumping it in on top of ours, thus intensifying local conditions, further depressing local trade and prices, and prolonging the period of depression and anxiety.

If one hundred domestic grain wagons are in line at the station waiting to unload, by this bill you say that any number of foreign grain wagons may come in unhampered, take their places in the line and share in such rights and privileges as our farmers may possibly think are or should be exclusively their own. If one hundred freight trains, the total number available, are engaged in transporting our domestic wheat from local to central markets, by this bill you make it possible for the Canadian shipper of wheat to employ any number of those trains to transport his grain into this country free of duty, while the wheat in the domestic elevator must wait. One of the great drawbacks to the farmer in the Northwest is scarcity of cars to move his crop. Under existing conditions, with a duty upon Canadian wheat so high that it can not be sold here at a profit, the Canadian shipper must find a market elsewhere for his surplus. We do not want it. We can not take care of our own surplus.

If this bill becomes a law the wheat from Manitoba and the great Saskatchewan country, extending a thousand miles north of the Dominion line, will be marketed at Minneapolis, Duluth, and Chicago. Does anyone suppose that a single bushel of wheat raised in Minnesota or the Dakotas will be marketed in Winnipeg? This is the kind of reciprocity proposed by this bill. Again, with free trade in wheat, Russia, India, and the Argentine may possess themselves of a share of our domestic markets for wheat and flour. If it is simply a question of cheap wheat we of the West can not compete with them even for the New York trade.

Mr. President, if we did not have a wheat surplus to send abroad, and with a sufficient duty on foreign imports of wheat, the domestic farmer would get a living price for his grain. The world's price for the little surplus we send abroad fixes the price for our entire product. With just enough for home consumption, the price would be regulated by the domestic demand, and that demand by the amount of money the people are able to earn. Instead of obliging our farmers to become more and more dependent upon foreign countries as respects a market for their wheat and cotton, make it an inducement for them to embark in other branches of agriculture. Give them a bounty upon every pound of sugar they may produce. Make it possible for them to raise beets and have them manufactured into that great necessary of life for which they are now paying $110,000,000 per annum to foreign countries. Give them a duty upon that other great agricultural product, wool, and let them understand that the bounty upon sugar and the duty upon wool shall be sufficiently permanent to justify them in making investments in these enterprises.

This is the true American policy. It is the policy that must prevail, that will prevail. The passage of this malformed measure simply postpones the day when wisdom will supplant theory; when common sense will take the place of blind inexperience; when sectional prejudice will give way to patriotic duty. Missouri, Arkansas, and Texas can not frame a tariff bill that will do justice by all the great industries of this great country. Nor is it within reason to expect that such a bill as might be anticipated from that source can be properly amended by New Jersey, Maryland, and the purblind half of Ohio.

Mr. President, the minority in this Chamber are charged by our opponents with filibustering. If my party leaders will permit me to join them in such an enterprise, I will agree to remain here with them indefinitely, or at least until the expiration of my term as a Senator, and to assist them in the employment of all the tactics known to the filibusterer, if by so doing this outrageous scheme may be defeated.

I would force the majority to adopt a cloture rule before they passed this bill. The business of the country is not now suffering half as much as it will suffer if this measure becomes a law. Every Senator from the West should oppose it. With the raw materials from that section so completely and systematically free-listed as to ruin many of our industries and bankrupt our people; with all protection withdrawn from the articles we have to sell and high rates of duties levied in behalf of the finished articles of the East and the South which we of the West are expected to buy, I should feel that I had misrepresented my constituents if I did not stand here every day during the remainder of my term, if necessary, to help defeat this iniquitous and trust-contaminated measure.

Mr. SHOUP. Mr. President, in answer to those who contend that protection has caused the values of wool to fall in the United States, I submit that the prices of that product have gradually declined for the past twenty years, not in our country alone, but the world over; and that the ruling price during this period for the same grades of wool has been higher in the United States than it was abroad.

Though wool has fallen in fallen in all the markets of the world it has always been worth in the United States the price abroad on many grades, plus the amount of the duty levied at home. The exceptions are where we have produced certain grades in such quantities as to slightly affect the price by competition.

I will undertake to show, later on, that wools in this country were higher up to the time that the Wilson bill was introduced than they were abroad, notwithstanding the fact that wool values were lower than they had ever been before.

If duty levied for protection, and to enhance the value of the product of the United States, resulted in making the prices of that article lower to the consumer, why then do the opponents of protection object? Lower prices for the consumer is their contention, and if protection accomplishes that result whence comes their opposition to it?

They must know that protective duties enhance the value of the article levied upon, until such time as increased home production and competition shall achieve lower values. In order to find therefore, why the prices of wool have fallen they must get away from the free-trade idea that protection has caused it and seek the true cause, which I contend is the shrinkage in the market value of wool the world over.

I submit here a table showing that the decline in price in twenty years, from 1871 to 1891, was as great in foreign wools as it has been in domestics, and consequently that the McKinley act did not cause the decline:

	1871.	1881.	1891.	Per cent of decline.

† Taken from Mauger & Avery's report. Averaged from quarterly prices.

A careful study of the foregoing table, and of certain facts of production which go in conjunction with it, reveals the fact that these declines are the legitimate effect of the fundamental law of supply and demand: "That as the production of any great staple increases, so will the price fall, provided there be not an equal enlargement of the consumption of that product."

The world's production of wool in 1870, as estimated by the London Board of Trade, was 1,295,000,000 pounds. The production for 1890 showed an increase of 900,000,000 pounds over these figures, or about 70 per cent. The world's increase in population during the same period was less than 10 per cent, as shown by the following table:

The population of the world in 1870 was 1,391,000,000.
The population of the world in 1880 was 1,468,000,000.
The population of the world in 1890 was 1,490,000,000.

From the foregoing it will be seen that the percentage of increase in production is largely in excess of the percentage of increase in population, and this overproduction must necessarily have operated heavily against values of wool.

There was another potent factor at work during this period, which has affected not only wool but every other product of human labor and skill. When silver was demonetized, as a natural consequence the values of wool were impaired, and even if the law of production had not operated so heavily against it wool would have fallen; and it will continue to fall, in all countries where the production exceeds home consumption, until silver is restored to the position it held as money before it was demonetized.

It is inconsistent for the free trader to tell us that he wishes to give the American producer of wool the world for a market, claiming that the producer will be benefited thereby.

Mr. President, we will investigate the world's market for that product. We will take the staple grades of wool grown and consumed in the United States, and make a comparison with the competing wools of Australia, South Africa, and South America. These wools are sold on the London market, which is generally recognized as the world's market for wool. The comparisons given are the prices for January 1, 1894, in Boston and London, and are taken from the market reports of the American Wool and Cotton Reporter, whom no one will accuse of being partial to American wools. We must also remember that the prices for wool grown in the United States were from 20 to 40 per cent lower, according to grade, on January 1, 1894, than they were on January 1, 1893, as shown by the following table.

PRICES IN BOSTON AND LONDON.

Comparison of prices January 1, 1894, in Boston and London for competing wools, showing that we were above the free wool basis, and what per cent our domestic wools had to fall to meet that basis:

Ohio delaine, costing 25 cents in grease, shrinking 50 per cent, worth in Boston 50 cents scoured.
Australian, costing 17 to 18 cents in grease, shrinking 50 per cent, worth in London 36 to 38 cents.
Michigan clothing, costing 20 cents in grease, shrinking 56 per cent, worth in Boston 50 cents.
Australian, costing 15 to 17 cents in grease, shrinking 50 per cent, worth in London 32 to 35 cents.
Montana clothing, worth in Boston 38 to 40 cents.
Australian, worth in London 30 to 32 cents.
California and Oregon, worth in Boston 34 to 36 cents.
Australian, worth in London 30 to 32 cents.

Per cent of decline to meet foreign basis, January 1, 1894.

Ohio delaine must fall 11 cents per scoured pound, or 22 per cent.
Michigan clothing must fall 16½ cents per scoured pound, or 33 per cent.
Montana combing must fall 8 cents per scoured pound, or 20½ per cent.
Territory clothing must fall 4 cents per scoured pound, or 11½ per cent.

It will be seen that Ohio delaines, selling at that date for 50 cents per scoured pound in Boston, would only be worth 39 cents per scoured pound in London, and that it was selling in Boston at 11 cents, or 22 per cent above the price in London, where the price of wool outside of the United States is fixed.

It seems to me, Mr. President, that something more alluring should be presented in order to convince our woolgrowers that they will be benefited by having wool placed on the free list. It occurs to me that to ask a people who are already on the verge of bankruptcy by reason of the decline in value of their products to submit to greater sacrifices, is not giving them credit for proper reasoning faculties.

To seek a market already stifled with competition would certainly not indicate sound judgment.

We are told by those who seem determined to place wool on the free list that with the protective duty off in the United States, the price of wool would advance abroad. This is a peculiarly ingenious argument. If the price of wool, with the duty off, is to remain the same to the consumer, why should it be taken off, and thereby throw away the millions of revenue which this duty produces? With the duty off, Ohio delaine, Michigan clothing, and the Territory wool must either decline until they meet the level of London prices, or London prices must advance to meet the Boston quotations. If foreign wools do not advance, we not only lose our revenue but also destroy our grower; if foreign wools do advance we not only lose our revenue, but the cost of wool to the American consumer remains the same. Why not adopt the reasonable, rational course, and preserve both our revenue and our grower?

Mr. President, for some time past I have watched the wool market with some interest; and I notice among other sales one lot of 100,000 pounds of Territory scoured at 30 cents per pound. A few sales of very fine Idaho and Montana wool scoured were reported last week at 32 to 33 cents. Contracts are reported where Territory wool in the grease is to be delivered to mills at 7 cents per pound. Sales of Oregon wool were reported last week at 32 cents scoured, or about the same as Idaho, Montana, and Wyoming. The prices realized for wool sold last week show that the Pacific States and intermountain States and Territories have lost the margin that remained on January 1 of the present year; and the wools grown in this country, if sold now, must be sold on the free-trade basis. In other words the same grades can not be sold to-day above the London market, and the margin left to the American woolgrower on January 1, 1894, has now disappeared.

We are told by Senators on the other side of the Chamber that our woolgrowers will be benefited by having wool placed on the free list; that by so doing the markets of the world will be open to them. Mr. President, I can not understand how they hope to convince any American woolgrower by such an argument. The markets of the world are open to them now, and have been open since this industry assumed prominence in this country. The placing of wool on the free list does not increase their opportunity to ship abroad.

I want to say once more to our friends across the aisle that the owners of flocks in this country are intelligent men, and are not deceived when you employ the argument that their wool has steadily declined on account of the protection given it under the present law.

You do not deceive them. They know and you know that until it became almost a certainty that the present Congress would place wool on the free list, it commanded a better price in this country than in any other market in the world. They also know that if the present duty was not threatened the clip in the grease would be worth from 8 to 11 cents per pound more than it is to-day, and that the great flocks of this country would be worth their former value of $3 to $3.50 per head and would not be selling at the low price of $1 to $1.25 per head, to which they have been reduced by the determination of the party in power to discriminate against this industry.

DUTIES.

There has been much said concerning the amount of duty on a suit of clothes which is actually paid by the consumer. Though this question covers a wide range, because of the great variety of woolen fabrics which are made, yet it is possible by taking any finished, staple, and well-known article of wearing apparel to draw up comparisons which are conclusive, in so far as that article is concerned, and which apply indirectly to all other articles bearing a duty.

A prominent woolgrower in my State has made a practical test as to the amount of duty actually paid by the purchaser of a suit of clothes. I have at hand all the facts covering the cost of a suit of black diagonal, all wool, worsted cloth. The data includes every operation from the raw wool, as it is termed, to the finished suit. The figures given are the result of his personal investigation, conducted upon the ground where the goods are made; and I have at hand the vouchers which test the genuineness of the investigation.

The suit in question is all wool, made from 12-ounce diagonal cloth—a high grade of goods, such as are worn by business and professional men. The amount of wool in the grease, or just as it came from the sheep's back, used in making this suit was 12 pounds, and cost on December 1, 1893, in Philadelphia, 11½ cents per pound. It was fine medium Territory wool, shrinking 70 per cent, and yielding therefore 30 per cent of scoured wool, or 3.6 pounds.

Had Australian wool been used in making this suit it would have taken 5 per cent less scoured wool, or only 3.42 pounds, because Australian wools are not subject to so great a wastage in the process of manufacturing as are our American clothing wools.

Fine medium wool grown in Australia, the same as the clothing wool used in this suit, will only shrink 50 per cent, and has therefore an advantage of 20 per cent in shrinkage over our American clothing wool. Taking 3.42 pounds of scoured wool, made from wools that shrink 50 per cent (which is the shrinkage of Australian wool of this class), and reducing it to Australian grease wool, we have 6.84 pounds, the equivalent of our 12 pounds of Territory wool. The duty on this grade of wool, under the McKinley law, is 11 cents per pound; 6.84 pounds of wool at 11 cents per pound, is 75 cents, which is the amount saved to the buyer by removing the tariff on raw wool entering into the suit in question.

Mr. President, does it seem wise or just to destroy a great industry, ranking seventh among the American industries, and which employs over 5,000,000 persons, and turns off products worth over $200,000,000 annually, in order to save 75 cents on each suit of clothes of this high grade?

The suit which was taken as a basis for this investigation contains more pure wool than does the average suit; which, on account of the cotton and other textiles woven into the cloth, pays but a small duty ranging from 20 to 50 cents on each suit.

FOREIGN COMPETITION.

The facts and conditions incident to woolgrowing in the United States and abroad have been discussed so thoroughly, both in Congress and in the country at large, that the utter inability of our American growers to meet the cost price of the foreign production of wool is recognized by every one who has listened to the argument, or who has investigated the subject; hence I shall but briefly review that phase of the question, as a business proposition, by calling attention to a statement made by a woolgrower from New Zealand, which is properly vouched for; and also statements made by woolgrowers having flocks or bands of sheep on our own ranges.

The New Zealander's statement is as follows:

D. E. Meikle, a prominent woolgrower from Chatham Islands, New Zealand, stated in November last to a representative of the Wool and Mutton Journal, Minneapolis, published December 1, 1893, that he had resided in New Zealand for thirty years; that he is a sheep-grower; that ocean freights are three-eighths of 1 cent per pound to London; that it costs him 4 cents per head to shear his sheep, and that it costs him 7 cents per pound to produce his wool and sell it on the London market.

In contrast to this I have a statement made by an Idaho woolgrower, as follows:

"A member of the firm of, and business manager for, J. D. Wood & Co., of Challis, Idaho, affirms "that Mr. Wood has resided in Idaho twenty-seven years; that he is a sheep-grower, and ranged about 30,000 head of sheep in Idaho last year; that railroad freights are 2½ cents per pound from his shipping station in Idaho to Boston; that it costs him 10 cents per head to shear his sheep, and that it costs him over 20 cents per pound to produce his wool and sell it on the Boston market."

In the above testimony there is such a great difference in the cost per pound of producing wool in Idaho and New Zealand as might cause some doubt as to the entire accuracy of the statements. I will therefore relate some of the conditions existing, which I think will clear away the seeming discrepancy.

DIFFERENCE IN FREIGHTS.

Freight rates per 100 pounds, from Melbourne to London	$0.37½
Freight rates per 100 pounds, from Rocky Mountains to New York	2.33

DIFFERENCE IN LABOR IN THE UNITED STATES AND AUSTRALIA.

In the Rocky Mountain region it requires one man to herd 1,000 to 1,500 sheep.

In Australia one man can take care of 4,000 sheep.

Wages and board for herder in the Rocky Mountain region per annum, $540 to $600.

Wages and board for herder in Australia, $240 to $300.

Shearing sheep in the Rocky Mountains, 8 to 10 cents per head.

Shearing sheep in Australia, 4 cents per head.

Commission for selling wool in London, 2 to 3 per cent.

Commission for selling wool in Boston, 6 to 10 per cent.

COST OF PRODUCTION OF WOOL PER POUND IN THE UNITED STATES.

Woolgrowers in the far Western States and Territories assert that at the present price of wool and mutton, caused by the threat to place wool on the free list, they are doing business at a heavy loss. In support of this assertion I submit a statement made by Mr. Frank J. Hegart, of Idaho. I also have similar statements from other prominent woolgrowers in my State:

COST OF PRODUCTION IN IDAHO.

Herder, twelve months, at $35 per month	$420
Camp tender, or foreman, at $25 per month	300
Keep for herder and foreman	180
Three extra men during lambing season for one month, at $50 each	150
Feeding hay in winter, six weeks, 2 pounds per head per day, or 2 tons per day for band, at $5 per ton	420
Dipping annually for disease, at 2½ cents per head	50
Salt, 150 pounds per week, ¼ cent per pound, fifty-two weeks	58
Shearing 2,000 sheep, at 10 cents each	200
Taxes, 1893, 2,000 head	100
Expense of keeping horses for use of herders	46
Incidentals, tents, utensils, burlaps to cover wool, etc	200
Annual loss of sheep from wild animals, natural causes, etc., 5 per cent, or 100 head, less value of pelts	200
Total yearly expense on 2,000 sheep, not including interest	2,324

The average band of 1,900 sheep will shear something less than 14,000 pounds, which will make the wool cost to the grower 16½ cents per pound at the shearing corral; to which must be added 2½ cents per pound for freight to Boston and 2 cents per pound for commission, interest, etc., making the total cost of wool to the Idaho grower laid down in the Boston market, 21 cents per pound.

I have statements made by other prominent and thoroughly reliable woolgrowers in my State confirming the statement made by Mr. Hegart.

COST OF PRODUCTION IN UTAH.

I submit a statement of the Utah Woolgrowers' Association, made on December 26, 1893, at Manti, Utah, based on a band of 2,500 sheep.

To two herders at $35 per month each, total per annum	$840
To board for same	180
To shearing expenses	175
To sacks and twine, sacking wool	32
To dipping twice a year, 5 cents per head	125
To five horses	125
To taxes, $2 per head, assessed value	50
To camp equipments	150
To 2 tons of oats, winter feed and freight	60
To loss by wild animals and poverty, 10 per cent, 250 head at $2	500
Total, not counting owner's time or interest on capital invested	2,237

The average band of 2,250 Utah sheep will shear 13,500 pounds of wool, which makes it cost the grower 16½ cents per pound at the shearing corral, and after adding railroad freights, commission, etc., over 20 cents per pound on the Boston market.

The above association has made the following balance for the past year's business on a band of 2,500 sheep:

By wool from 2,250 sheep, 13,500 pounds, at 8 cents per pound	$1,080
By 787 lambs, at $1 per head	787
Total income in 1893	1,867

Which, deducted from the expense as noted above, leaves a net loss to the owner of $370.

It will be seen from the foregoing tables that the cost of wool production is greater than the selling price in the market, and the question arises, how can the grower continue in the business?

MUTTON.

This brings us to the consideration of the mutton question. Heretofore the margin realized from the sale of mutton represented the grower's profit. The profit heretofore realized from the sale of mutton has disappeared. Sales of several consignments of Western sheep were reported last year at Chicago where the amount realized did not pay the freight and commission, bringing the shipper out in debt.

I shall here introduce a table covering the number of sheep which entered the Chicago market in 1893, together with their price, compiled by the Drovers' Journal, which is recognized as standard authority. An examination of these tables reveals the fact that in July, when the price of wool took its great fall, mutton also went down, and as the price of mutton went lower and lower the number of sheep put on the market became greater until in October, when sheep grown in the Middle and Western States sold down as low as 75 cents per 100 pounds:

Receipts of sheep at Chicago, and price, during 1893.

Month.	Number.	Price.
		Grass fed.	Grass Westerns.	Lambs.	Natives.
January	200,873	$1.50	.....	$4.25	$3.00
February	221,945	3.20	.....	4.25	3.25
March	225,169	3.10	.....	4.75	2.60
April	240,783	3.75	.....	5.00	2.50

November	258,966	1.50	1.50	2.25	1.00
December	236,000	1.25	1.25	2.50	1.20

For the six months ending with December 31, 1892, the number of sheep shipped to the Chicago market was 1,070,582 head. For the same period in 1893, ending with the 31st of December, there were shipped to the same market 1,597,961 head, an increase of 50 per cent, or 527,379 head, for the six months ending December 31, 1893, over the same six months in 1892.

Receipts of sheep at Chicago from July 1 to December 1, 1892 and 1893.

Months.	1892.	1893.
	Head.	Head.
July	158,942	230,138
August	183,599	278,555
September	190,938	268,266
October	200,198	326,036
November	178,968	258,966
December	157,937	235,000
Total	1,070,582	1,597,961

Western grass-fed sheep, which comprised the heaviest shipments to this market during the same six months, were quoted by the same journal over 50 per cent lower in 1893 than in 1892.

While Chicago is the greatest stock market in the great West, yet there are many other prominent places, notably St. Louis, Kansas City, Omaha, Sioux City, and I might name many more, at each of which the number of sheep marketed was greater in 1893 than in any preceding year. The threatened legislation will, if enacted as proposed in the pending bill, bankrupt the sheep growers of this country. This is well known to the owners of flocks, who have been seeking every avenue to dispose of their sheep; hence the great increase in the number forced on the markets. So great has been the anxiety of many sheep growers in my State to dispose of their flocks that sheep which found a ready market eighteen months ago at $3 per head are now being offered at $1.25. Our local papers report a sale of 3,000 sheep two weeks ago at $1 per head. With free wool, our Western sheep growers will be compelled to dispose of their flocks at any price they can obtain.

I can not believe that Senators on the other side of the Chamber will strike down so many of their fellow citizens and such a great national industry at the same time—an industry which keeps millions of money at home that would otherwise enrich foreign countries. By retaining the present duty on wool we not only foster one of our great industries but at the same time provide revenue for defraying the expenses of the Government.

Mr. President, Idaho is only an infant in the sheep industry, though her percentage of increase in 1893 was the greatest of any State in the Union.

In 1892 there were in the State 527,077 sheep, and in 1893 an increase of 45 per cent, making 764,262, that produced last year 5,349,834 pounds of wool, 74,426 head of mutton, and 254,754 lambs.

The number of sheep in the State at this time is, in round numbers, about 1,000,000 head. With the prices prevailing two years ago the sheep owned in the State to-day would be worth $3,000,000, but on account of the decline in their value, caused by the threatened repeal of the present law, they could not be marketed to-day for more than $1,000,000, a net loss to the owners of $2,000,000. The clip of these sheep is estimated at 7,000,000 pounds. The decline in the price of wool since 1892 represents a loss to our woolgrowers amounting to about $500,000, or a total loss of $2,500,000.

Mr. President, in behalf of those who have sustained this great loss, I, as one of the representatives of Idaho, appeal to the dominant party in this Chamber not to discriminate against them and the woolgrowers in other States and Territories, who will be ruined if wool is placed on the free list. If you will not consent to the present duty, you can at least give it the same consideration that has been given to other products and to manufactured goods.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEFFER]. Is the Senate ready for the question?

Mr. QUAY. Mr. President, I had not expected to resume my remarks this afternoon.

Mr. PLATT. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Allison,	Gallinger,	McLaurin,	Pugh,
Berry,	George,	McMillan,	Quay,
Brice,	Gordon,	Martin,	Ransom,
Caffery,	Gray,	Mills,	Roach,
Carey,	Hansbrough,	Mitchell, Oregon	Shoup,
Chandler,	Harris,	Morrill,	Teller,
Cockrell,	Hawley,	Murphy,	Turpie,
Cullom,	Hoar,	Pasco,	Vest,
Daniel,	Hunton,	Patton,	Voorhees,
Dixon,	Jones, Ark.	Peffer,	Walsh,
Dolph,	Jones, Nev.	Perkins,	White.
Faulkner,	Lindsay,	Platt,
Frye,	Lodge,	Power,

Mr. RANSOM. I wish to state that my colleague [Mr. JARVIS] is detained from the Senate by sickness in his family.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Mr. President, we are now on the wool schedule. It is one of vast importance to many people. I have heretofore discussed it at some length since this debate began. Having been repulsed at every point and on every occasion during the discussion of the pending bill, it seems scarcely worth while that the Republicans of this Chamber should make another stand and seek once more to dislodge, even partially, the enemies of American industries and American labor from a position made apparently impregnable by the invincible power of the combined trusts of the country.

The present legislative situation in this Chamber is an unique one. After a month of continued debate on the pending measure—able, instructive, intelligent, exhaustive debate—after many scores of amendments have been presented from the Republican side, ably advocated and voted on, not a single change, except perhaps a few mere formal ones, has been made in the pending bill at the suggestion of any Republican. Nor is this all. Outside of the Democratic members of the Finance Committee, not a solitary amendment has been proposed to the bill by any Democratic Senator. The situation, therefore, is most unusual, not to say abnormal. It is simply this: The fiat has evidently gone forth that not one single amendment to this measure, however meritorious, however well supported by incontrovertible argument, however strongly sustained by reason, however much demanded by the best interests of the country, shall have any consideration whatever in the way of voting or other support from the Democratic side, unless indeed such amendment is proposed by one or the other of the five Democratic members of the Finance Committee.

The legislative journals of Congress, from the beginning of the Government to the present time, present no parallel in the consideration of any tariff measure of such aggressive partisan audacity and unyielding and unreasonable obduracy as that exhibited by the leaders of the majority and supported by the majority in this debate. Can it be possible that all economic and legislative wisdom bearing on the question of tariff legislation is centered in the five Democratic members of the Finance Committee? Are they the embodiment of all learning, all knowledge, all patriotism necessarily involved in the discussion of this great subject? Are the great experience and wisdom of the venerable and distinguished Senators from Vermont and Ohio [Senators MORRILL and SHERMAN], the universally acknowledged ability and learning of the able Senator from Nevada [Senator JONES], the rare practical business sense, long experience, and thorough information of our distinguished friend from Iowa [Senator ALLISON], and last but by no means least, as he is the peer of any, the remarkable scientific knowledge, clear economic wisdom, unbounded information, and legislative ability and prescience of the able champion and leader of the Republican side of the opposition to the pending bill, the distinguished Senator from Rhode Island [Senator ALDRICH]—are these, all these, to go for naught in this great contest? Are all these to weigh as nothing in the balance, to say nothing of the ability, experience, and learning of other distinguished Senators on this side of the Chamber, as against the legislative wisdom, experience, and ability of the five Democratic members of the Finance Committee? To say that this should not be so is no reflection either on the ability, the learning, or even the patriotism of any one of the distinguished Senators who compose the majority of that committee. On the contrary, it must be conceded they are each and all able, patriotic, and learned men, Senators of long legislative experience; but that in them alone, however able, learned, and experienced, are centered all legislative wisdom or all patriotism I most emphatically deny.

The Senate, it is said, is a deliberative body. Historians in the past, at least, have regarded this as a fact. Senators of the olden time have said that it was so, and remarked the fact with a degree of pardonable pride. Unfortunately, these latter years, this alleged historical fact has been questioned by some of our modern historians, and even some of our journalistic friends have, not wholly without reason, intimated at times more recently, that the Senate was no longer a deliberative body, reaching and recording conclusions after and in the light of intelligent and able discussion, but on the contrary is, as it is alleged, a mere instrument, an automatic machine, registering from day to day the will of some unseen, occult, but strangely invincible power.

However, this may be, of one thing we may be assured and that is when in the consideration of great economic questions, such as those now under consideration and which vitally affect the best interests of both capital and labor, it is decreed by the majority in advance of all discussion, that every amendment proposed by the minority shall be voted down, as seems unquestionably to have been the case in this instance, irrespective of their merits, then it can not with any truth be longer said that the Senate of the United States is a deliberative body in any proper sense of that term. In such event the Senate loses much of its rightful dignity and prestige and its hold on the respect and confidence of the American people becomes at once necessarily weakened and lessened.

No one can deny to the majority the ultimate right to control legislation within the lines by which the policy of their party is bounded, but does this conceded right disfranchise the minority? Does it disbar the minority absolutely from making suggestions and offering amendments, not in themselves inconsistent with that policy and not inconsistent, moreover, with various other provisions of the bill, which should on their merits command careful consideration and respect of the majority? And must all such suggestions and amendments be frowned and voted down, not for the reason they are not meritorious, not for the reason they are shown by argument to be inconsistent with other features of the bill, not because they are in antagonism to principles already clearly recognized by the bill, but solely for the reason they have been offered by a Republican, a member of the minority?

Is it not quite possible, Mr. President—yes, is it not more than probable—that the Republican members of the Finance Committee, from their long experience in public life, their conceded ability, their knowledge of the subject, their patriotism, are able to offer suggestions and amendments not out of the line of the general policy as set out by the bill, and which has received and is receiving the sanction of the majority which would, without destroying the policy—if, indeed, policy it can be called—be of invaluable service, not to any political party, but to the country? Will any member of this Senate on the other side deny this proposition? You and each Democratic Senator will doubtless answer no; and yet, by the course pursued in voting down every suggestion offered by this side, you do most emphatically deny it.

You say virtually by your recorded votes from time to time, not only to your Republican associates on the committee, but to each and every Republican on this floor, we not only do not want your votes, your suggestions, or your help in any way, but we are tired of your interference, of your arguments, and of your suggestions, and wish none of them. Is this the high ground a great party in power in the Senate of the United States ought to take? Is this statesmanship? Is this even common courtesy to an intelligent and, in the main, able and patriotic minority? Do you regard us, and would you have the country regard us, as so many useless Stoughten bottles?

Are you speaking and legislating only for your party, and not for your country? If for the former only, then go on. We do not desire to help you any more than our help is desired by you. But if your purpose is a higher and a grander one; if you are aiming to legislate for your country's good, for the welfare of the present generation and that of the untold generations yet to come; if you are striving to promote the general welfare and advance the cause of civilization, progress, and happiness in America, then we implore you, publicans, Republicans, and sinners, as we are, to permit us to join you in that laudable purpose. Your peers, your colleagues, constituent parts of this, the grandest of all legislative bodies in the world, we beg of you to hear us for our cause, your cause, our country's cause—the cause of forty-four States and sixty-five millions of people whose interests we, equally with you, have near at heart, and which we, with you, have sworn to protect; and if in hearing us you are able to see we are not striving for mere party advantage; that we are not laboring to pluck a single laurel of the Democratic party or throw one single impediment in the pathway of the Administration in power, nor yet to place another gem in the crown of Republicanism, already resplendent with the glory of illustrious deeds, but only striving in our humble and modest way, recognizing all the while the fact that we are a minority, to aid you if possible in doing something for our common country in these perilous hours, when our industries are rocking to and fro, and the nation and her people are blindly staggering amid the darkness of financial and industrial convulsions, then we implore of you, the majority, as Senators, statesmen, and patriots, that you rise equal to the occasion and not condemn our suggestions in advance, but give them your cordial and hearty support.

Do this and the pen of the historian will speak of you as statesmen and patriots; fail to do it, and your record will be, as in such case it deserves to be, that of unreasoning partisans, willing to place party above country.

With these prefatory remarks permit me to say you have in this woolen schedule mercilessly assailed a great industry by placing wool on the free list. The magnitude of this interest, its importance, the capital invested in it, the labor employed, the industries depending on it, is a story that has been oft repeated and variously stated and illustrated during this debate, and is not unfamiliar to any. With it every Senator is thoroughly conversant. It is an industry in which are, according to the National Woolgrowers' Association, "deeply interested and engaged" about one-sixteenth of the total population of this country, or 4,000,000 people, with a "directly invested capital of over $2,000,000,000," and an "indirect investment of over $300,000,000 more," making a total of over $500,000,000.

The woolgrowers alone number more than 1,000,000 persons. They own more than 45,000,000 sheep, of the value, "under normal conditions," of more than $150,000,000. The industry gives to labor, including the services of flockmasters, more than $85,000,000 annually. Its annual product of wool, mutton, and pelts, under normal conditions and at reasonable prices, amounts in value to more than $110,000,000. Such, in a word, is a bird's-eye view of the importance and magnitude of the interests assailed by this schedule of the bill. And it is a notable fact, and one that must not be forgotten, that 45 per cent, or over four-ninths, of this vast industry and of the persons interested in it lie and reside west of the Rocky Mountains. In this I include the States of Colorado and Wyoming and the Territories of Arizona and New Mexico. In this distant region of our common country are located over 20,000,000 of the 45,000,0000 sheep now in the United States, while 60 per cent of the wool clip of the United States comes from west of the Mississippi River.

For seventy-eight years (since the year 1816) wool has been accorded protection under all administrations. Never during all that time, except certain kinds of wool under the act of 1857, modifying the Walker tariff of 1846, has wool been on the free list. From that date until 1884, under a continuous policy, and especially under the highly protective tariffs of 1861 and 1867, our herds of sheep have increased from 10,000,000 in 1816 to 50,626,626 in 1884, and our product of wool from 13,000,000 pounds in 1816 to 300,000,000 pounds in 1884; and while by reason of the reduction of tariff rates on wool by the act of 1883 our flocks fell off in 1889 to 43,599,000 head, they, under the stimulus of the increased rates of the McKinley act of 1890, had increased in 1893 to 47,273,533 head, and so greatly had the character of the stock and its capacity for producing wool been increased that our 47,600,000 sheep in 1893 produced over 64,000,000 pounds of wool more and of an infinitely superior quality, than did our 50,626,626 head of sheep in 1884. During the latter year the wool product of this country was but 300,000,000 pounds, while in 1893 it was 364,156,666 pounds.

While the proposition to place wool on the free list will bear ruinously heavy on the great States of Ohio, Michigan, and other of the Central and Mississippi Valley woolgrowing States, it means absolute annihilation to the wool industry west of the Rocky Mountains. Boston, Philadelphia, and New York are our common market depots; hence the question of transportation becomes to the woolgrowers of Oregon, Washington, California, Montana, and other States and Territories of the far West a most important factor. How can the woolgrowers of this vast region hope to compete with the woolgrowers of foreign countries? Wool can be shipped from any and all of the great wool-producing countries to Boston, Philadelphia, and New York infinitely cheaper than it can be from the Pacific coast States, or, in fact, from any State or Territory west of the Mississippi River.

The cost of transporting wool form these Western sheep ranges to Boston and Philadelphia is from 800 to 1,200 per cent higher, and doubtless will continue to be so for many years to come, than is the freight from London to Boston, Philadelphia, and New York. The rate from London to Boston or Philadelphia is for wool in grease but one-fourth of a cent per pound, while from the Pacific coast States it is from 3 to 5 cents per pound, while on scoured wool, on which values are based, the freight from London is a fraction less than one-half a cent per pound, or 48 cents per 100 pounds, while on the like article from Oregon, Washington, Idaho, California, and Montana, the rate is from 7 to 8 cents per pound. The average cost to the Oregon woolgrower in getting his wool from his ranch to the point of shipment is for freight by wagon about 1 cent per pound, railroad freight 2 cents, which, with storage, insurance, expenses of sale, makes the total cost to the producer from the ranch to the Philadelphia or Boston mill, 5 cents per pound.

On a free-wool basis the Oregon wools will not be worth on the ranch more than from one-fourth of a cent per pound to 3 cents per pound. Recent dispatches, we are told, are to the effect that within the last week or ten days 30,000,000 pounds of wool have been withdrawn in London from public sale in order to prevent a break in the market, which since the last sales had already declined 5 per cent. In view of these facts it is quite apparent that with the free-trade basis Oregon wools in Philadelphia and Boston may rate as low as from 4 to 7 cents per pound.

"But," say our Democratic friends, "Protection does not increase the price of wool," and we are constantly taunted with the fact that the McKinley act has been in force since 1890—is still in force—and wool is infinitely lower to-day than when that act was passed. Hence it is exclaimed in great glee, "Protection does not protect." Surely our Democratic friends will not credit the Republicans or any considerable portion of the American people of any party with being so obtuse as to be deceived by any such statement. Wool is lower, it is true, than in 1890; all concede this. But why is it lower? Everyone with the intelligence of an oyster can not help knowing that so far from the McKinley act being the cause of the decline in the United States, but for the good effects of that act it would have been infinitely greater than it has been.

It is not difficult to divine the causes of the decline. They are two and only two. First, overproduction in foreign cheap wool-raising countries, causing a world-wide decline in the price of wool; and, second, the declarations and acts of the Democratic party—first, in declaring constantly in their national platforms for free wool; second, by passing an act through the national House of Representatives in the last Congress placing wool on the free list; and, third, the action and contemplated action in the present Congress on the part of the Democratic party in power looking to the placing of wool on the free list.

The increase in the product of wool in the Argentine Republic has been enormous in the last three decades, increasing from 55,885,760 pounds in 1860 to 295,425,200 pounds in 1890. In Australia the annual increase has been infinitely greater, increasing in the two decades—1870-1890—from 179,459,780 pounds in the former to 400,879,240 pounds in the latter. In Asia in these two decades the annual increase was 130,352,880 pounds, it being 134,507,120 pounds in 1870 and 264,860,000 pounds in 1890. The annual increase of the wool production of France was in four years—1887-1891—44,665,000 pounds—the product in 1887 being but 80,138,000 pounds while in 1891 it was 124,803,000 pounds. Russia increased her annual product in the four years ending 1891, 28,534,000 pounds—her product in 1887 being but 262,966,000 pounds, and in 1891 291,500,000 pounds. In Africa also there has been an increase in the last four years in the annual product of over 10,000,000 pounds.

These facts then, taken into consideration with the further fact that since 1860 the annual increase in production in the United States has been greater than in any other country in the world, the annual increase in these thirty-four years being nearly three hundred million pounds—the product in 1860, as shown by the census reports, having been but 60,264,913 pounds, against about 365,000,000 pounds last year—ought to convince the most incredulous as to the one great cause of the depression in the price of wool in the United States. The increase in production has been infinitely greater than the world's demand; but while there has been a great decrease in the price of wool throughout the world by reason of this vastly increased production, this decrease by reason of the operation of the McKinley act has been infinitely less, more than 50 per cent less, in the United States than elsewhere.

In May, 1891, the very best scoured and purified Ohio merino wool was worth here 91⅝ cents per pound; ten months later, in March, 1892, it was worth 63⅜ cents per pound less, or but 85 cents per pound. In May, 1891, what is commonly known as "top," being the highly purified Australian merino wool, was worth in London 50 cents per pound, while ten months later, in March, 1892, the same article was worth there 13 cents less per pound, or but 37 cents per pound, showing a decline of 26 per cent in ten months, as against a decline here during the same time of but 7 per cent. The former was the decline of the world, which, but for the effect of the McKinley act would have operated here, and in such event, that is, had there been no protection in the United States in virtue of the McKinley act, the fall in the price of the Ohio merino wool would in the ten months have been 23.6 cents per pound, or 65⅛ cents, or a decline of 26 per cent.

I would remind those who insist that the McKinley act has not been beneficial to the woolgrowers of this country that an act giving protection to American wool by levying a customs duty on foreign wool may in either one of two ways operate to aid the American producer. First, by leading the price of American wool far in advance in the world's rising market of the price of wool in other countries; or secondly, by retarding a decline in this country and holding the price far above that of other countries when there has been, as there has been the last two or three years, a world-wide decline in price. The McKinley act has unquestionably had this latter effect. The evidence of this is incontestible and overwhelming. Any man, whether Senator or private citizen, Democrat, Populist, or Republican, who will gravely deny this must be possessed of a superabundance of audacity.

The basis all over the world for fixing the value of merino fleece wool in the condition which the farmer sends it to market is what is known as "Botany top," which is clean, scoured, carded, and combed merino wool. The great difference in the condition of fleece wool of the same breed and diameter of fabric, renders the grease prices of but little value in comparing prices of one year with another, or in comparing wools of one country with another. And hence it is an uniform standard is only reached when the various wools of the world, differing widely as they do in the first or grease condition, are scoured, carded, and combed.

This latter condition, therefore, or Botany top, being the world's meridian, so to speak, or the common basis from which prices are ascertained, and this by the way is made of the average American wools of merino blood, which comprise over 75 per cent of the whole American product, it is worth while to inquire how the prices of this character and condition of wools have ranged the past year or two in this country and in Europe. The statistics on this subject show conclusively that the average value of this article—Botany top in London for the entire year prior to March, 1893, was 37 cents per pound, while the average value of the same article in the United States under the McKinley act was for this same period 85 cents per pound, or 5½ cents more than double the European price of the same article. Does any sane man doubt that this increase of the price in the United States over that in Europe was occasioned by the McKinley act? Can any other rational reason for the difference in price be vouchsafed by anyone? I apprehend not.

The present price in London of this finely prepared wool is 35 cents per pound, having dropped 5½ per cent since March, 1893, or from 37 cents then to 35 cents per pound now. That is the world's free-trade price to-day for this quality of wool, which, as we have seen, is the basis for prices of the world's supply of fleece wool in the grease. Now, suppose the McKinley act is repealed outright and wool placed on the free list. What will be the inevitable result? The United States will at once be admitted into the family of free-trade wool countries, and as a matter of course the price of our wool will at once, or as soon as there is sufficient time for the full effect of the changed condition to operate, fall to the level of the European free-trade prices; and what does this mean? It means that our wool—I am speaking now of this quality "top," which is the basis of all prices and represents 75 per cent of our whole product, and which rated in this country in March, 1892, at 85 cents per pound—will go down 59 per cent from that figure, or from 85 cents, the American price in March, 1892, to 35 cents, the London price at the present time, June, 1894. And as a matter of course the price of all fleece wool must go down in like proportion. This simply means death and destruction without hope of resurrection to the wool industry of this country, especially to that industry between the Rocky Mountains and the Pacific Ocean.

The statistics further show (see Miscellaneous Document No. 35, second session Fifty-third Congress, page 56) that the average percentage of cost of free wool in London below that of protected American wool in the United States between 1878 and 1891 on a gold basis was 51.32 per cent, while the average percentage of cost of free wool in London below protected wool in the United Stated between 1868 and 1877 on currency basis was 50.95 per cent. It will not do, therefore, for the advocates of free wool to argue, or assert rather, because it is mainly assertion, that adequate protection does not sustain the price of American wool largely in advance of the price of wool in free-trade countries.

Furthermore, the records show that the increase in the production of sheep and wool in this country under the protective policy has been greater than that of any other country on earth, notwithstanding the great advantages of South America, Australia, Asia, Africa, and other countries in the matter of cheap lands, cheap labor, climatic conditions, etc. Moreover, it is an undeniable fact that the sheep in this country have prospered in proportion to the amount of protection accorded. The wool clip of this country increased during the last three years of the operation of the tariff of 1867, which gave an average duty of 12½ cents per pound on clothing, and combing wool 10½ per cent, while during the seven years of inadequate protection between the repeal of the act of 1867 by the less protective act of 1883 and the passage of the McKinley act in 1890 there was a decrease in the production of 6 per cent. The duty during this period was less by 2½ cents per pound than under the act of 1867, and was inadequate to balance the advantages of the woolgrowers of other countries, the average duty under the act of 1883 being but about 10 cents per pound.

The wool clip of the United States actually doubled during the last twelve years of the operation of the act of 1867. The total crop of 1873 was but 170,000,000 pounds, while in 1884, the act of 1867 still affecting that year, the clip was 340,000,000 pounds; this was an increase of 100 per cent, or 46 per cent greater than the increase during the same period in any other country in the world. The increase in Australia during this period, and this country had the greatest increase of any country in the world, except the United States, was but 64 per cent. In the Argentine Republic the increase was 35 per cent, and at Cape of Good Hope 60 per cent, while in free-trade Great Britain, a country possessing climatic and other conditions similar to our own, except a tariff, there was a decrease in the wool clip of 19 per cent.

This bill professes to be one for revenue only. During the four years' operation of the McKinley act, notwithstanding the duty imposed by that act, there have been imported into this country more than 400,000,000 pounds of foreign wool, upon which a duty of more than $24,800,000 has been collected. This $24,800,000 in duty this bill discards, throws away as revenue. But not only so. During these same four years the value of the woolen cloth imports amounted to $137,000,000, on which a duty of over $127,000,000 was collected. These imported cloths were in the main luxurious, high-priced cloths, worn only by the wealthy, and if it be true, as claimed by our Democratic brethren, that the consumer pays the tax, this $127,000,000 was in the main paid by the rich people of this country, by those able to wear fine clothes.

This duty the present bill cuts down from one-half to two-thirds, thus diverting from the Treasury of the United States to the pockets of the wealthy of this country every four years from sixty-four to eighty millions of dollars, and on the whole transaction of placing wool on the free list, reducing the duty on woolen goods from one-half to two-thirds, annual customs duties of from $37,750,000 to $50,000,000 are relinquished, and what is the result? A great industry is destroyed, the wealthy who wear foreign-made fine clothes are benefited, and the poor man's clothes, cheaper now in this country than ever before, are not cheapened to the extent of a farthing.

But this is not all nor even the one-half of the diabolism involved in this proposition to place wool on the free list, and in reducing the duty on high-priced woolen goods. This loss of revenue to the Treasury must in some way be made up, and hence our Democratic friends turn to sugar, a prime necessary of life, used by the poor as well as the rich, and this common necessity of life, used by every man, woman, and child throughout the country, rich and poor, must be and is by the pending bill loaded down with a tax which will inevitably increase the price of every pound of sugar used in this country at least 1¼ cents and put into the pockets of the sugar trust, one of the most formidable monopolies of America, or indeed of the world, more than $50,000,000 the coming year, and many millions annually hereafter.

But while 60 per cent of the wool clip of the United States is west of the Mississippi River and 45 per cent west of the Rocky Mountains, we are so unfortunate as not to have a solitary Democratic member of the Finance Committee of the Senate who resides within a thousand miles of the eastern boundary of the latter region. And in this connection it might be worth while to inquire what States these distinguished Democratic financiers represent, and how much the people of these States and to what extent they are interested in the wool industry. I refer to this, not that it would have any influence on the judgment or disposition or patriotism or entire fairness of any one of these genial and able Senators composing the majority of the committee, even though the States they represent never in the aggregate produced a solitary sheep, but I think it may be pertinent, and therefore admissible as testimony, as bearing upon the accuracy of the information and knowledge of those gentlemen on this subject.

The distinguished chairman of the committee, our genial and eloquent friend from Indiana, represents a State whose people in 1893 owned only 972,345 head of sheep out of the 45,000,000 head in the United States. Next comes our sedate and venerable Senator from New Jersey [Senator MCPHERSON], representing a State whose people in 1893 owned but 57,571 head of the 45,000,000. Then, next in order is our venerable and able parliamentarian, our distinguished President pro tempore, Senator HARRIS, representing the great State of Tennessee, in whose borders are 519,777 head of sheep only of the 45,000,000 head in the United States, or but little more than one-hundredth part of the whole number.

Then comes our incisive, at times sarcastic, but always delightful friend from the great State of Missouri, Senator VEST, whose people, according to the last census, have 1,000,953 head of sheep, and lastly we find our able and accomplished Senator from Arkansas, Senator JONES, whose tact in avoiding discussion on his part, and that of his friends in his management of this bill has been a source of great satisfaction to his many admiring friends, representing a State whose people own but 228,310 head of sheep. And so it happens that the five States represented by the five distinguished Senators who compose the majority of the Committee on Finance and who tender us this bill and who insist that we must swallow it without the crossing of a "t" or the dotting of an "i" have within their borders in the aggregate but 2,778,949 head of sheep, or but a small fraction more than there are in the State of Oregon alone, and 1,445,009 head less than one-half of the number there are in the two States of California and Oregon.

CONCLUSION

Now, in conclusion, I appeal to the majority of the Committee on Finance, I appeal to the majority of this Senate, not to permit the McKinley act to stand—to do this would be asking you to abandon your pledge to modify the tariff—but I do appeal to you to not wholly abandon to destruction this great industry. Treat the farmer, the woolgrower, at least with the same consideration you treat the woolen manufacturer. Give, moreover, to the people of the West the same consideration you are giving to the people of the East and South. You have cut down the duties on woolen cloths from one-half to two-thirds. Do with the woolgrower no worse than this.

You have not wholly abandoned the manufacturer, and yet you turn your back on the Western farmer, the woolgrower, and stand mute. No member of the majority of the committee, no member of the majority of the Senate, so far as I am advised, up to the present time, has risen in his place to defend before this Senate and the American people the proposition to place wool on the free list. Shall we appeal to you in vain? If you will not listen to your colleagues on this floor, the accredited representatives of the State of Oregon and of other States in the West, then I beg you to hearken to the voice of an indignant and outraged people, who on the 4th of the present month in that far-off State, which I have the honor to represent in part on this floor, uttered a voice which had no uncertain sound, a voice clothed in no ambiguous meaning.

The people of that State, engaged as they are in the great industries of wool, wheat, barley, hops, prunes, coal, lumber, horses, cattle, hay, flax, each and every one of which you mercilessly assail with your outrageously sectional and death-dealing bill, have arisen in their majesty and in rightful defense of their interests, their firesides, their families, their homes, have at the ballot box, by a plurality of more than 16,000 votes, and by a majority of all, in the election of two Republican members of the National House of Representatives, and by the election of a Legislature to which but a single member of your party was elected, set the seal of their unqualified condemnation on your miserable, un-American policy.

Mr. GEORGE. I was somewhat impressed with the Senator's argument in favor of taxed wool, and I desire to ask him a question. If a reasonable tax was placed upon the importation of foreign wool, would the Senator consent to that, without asking what is called a compensatory additional tax on woolen manufactures?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. The present bill already takes care of the woolen manufacturer, and all we ask is that the same kind of care, and to the same extent, be accorded to the farmer and the woolgrower.

Mr. GEORGE. If a tax is laid upon wool, I inquire of the Senator whether he would regard it as right and proper that what is called a compensatory duty, to neutralize that tax, should be laid, in addition to the present duty, on manufactures of wool?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I think, inasmuch as the present bill proposes to reduce the existing rates of duty on woolen cloth from one-half to two-thirds, it would be but right, proper, fair, and just that a similar reduction, carrying out the views of the party on the other side of the Chamber, should be made in the existing duties on wool. Whether the rates on woolen clothes prescribed in the pending bill, would in the event of a reasonable duty on wool be sufficient, is a question more properly to be propounded to an expert.

Mr. GEORGE. That is not exactly an answer to my question. What I desire to know is this: The bill before the Senate gives us what is called free wool, and, at the same time, it gives a very considerable tax for the benefit, as I suppose, of the manufacturer of woolen goods, upon woolen goods. I wish to know from the Senator if the bill should be amended so as to allow the woolgrowers a fair and reasonable revenue duty upon wool, whether he would be content, when that is passed, not to increase the present rate allowed in this bill upon woolen manufactures?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I should want the manufacturers of woolen goods to have just such protection as would enable them to go on with their business without breaking down, and which, at the same time, would enable them to purchase the farmer's wool.

Mr. GEORGE. I will ask the Senator another question, for it seems to take two questions to get an answer. He wants the woolen manufacturers to go on and wants them to have reasonable protection. Does the Senator regard the present duty, if a tax should be placed on wool, as furnishing that reasonable protection; or, if we change the schedule so as to allow a tax upon raw wool introduced into this country, would the Senator not insist that, on account of that tax, the duty on woolen manufactures should be increased?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. My individual opinion is that if we placed a tariff on wool of five or six cents a pound, reducing the present duty in the same proportion that the duty on woolen cloths has been reduced, no harm could come to the woolen manufacturer.

Mr. ALLISON. May I answer the Senator's question?

Mr. GEORGE. I should be very glad to have a general answer.

Mr. ALLISON. I see the Senator's point.

Mr. HOAR. I wish the Senator from Mississippi would answer it himself.

Mr. GEORGE. I will answer when I am on the stand, but now I am interrogating.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has recognized the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON].

Mr. ALLISON. As I understand the Senator from Mississippi, he desires to put a duty upon wool.

Mr. GEORGE. I did not state that. That may be my opinion, but I have not asserted it yet.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well. The Senator's inquiry inferentially implies that his mind is turning somewhat in that direction.

Mr. GEORGE. I admit that.

Mr. ALLISON. If a duty is to be put upon wool it is for the purpose of protecting and caring for the wool-producer of this country. Hence we must have a manufacturing industry in the country to consume that wool, otherwise woolen goods will come in from the countries so well described by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] and thus destroy the wool production of our own country, notwithstanding the duty. Therefore, I take it, the Senator from Mississippi, if he shall finally make up his mind—and I hope he will—to support a duty on wool, will admit that a corresponding schedule must be made up which will enable our manufacturers to continue. I do not say that this schedule as it now stands will or will not do so. I understand that it is claimed that the schedule as it now stands is not satisfactory to those who manufacture woolen goods, they believing that woolen goods will be imported very largely under the existing schedule.

It seems to me the Senator must take into account the fact that with a duty on wool we must make a scale which will enable our manufacturers to compete with the manufacturers abroad, whatever that scale may be. So it might be necessary in some portions of this schedule to increase the duties. It might be that in some portions no increase would be required. I am not sufficiently an expert myself to answer that question, but I want the Senator to bear in mind that when we put a duty upon wool we must so adjust the schedule as that the wool will be consumed in our own country, for it can not be sold elsewhere.

Mr. FRYE. But the Senator from Iowa may say this: If the committee has reported a reasonable duty in this bill, and then a duty shall be put on wool, this would not be a reasonable duty.

Mr. ALLISON. I think that is manifest.

Mr. GEORGE. That is a very good statement.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa if he can tell by reason of these many amendments what is the average reduction in woolen cloths by the present bill?

Mr. ALLISON. On woolen cloths what the Senator from Mississippi very properly called the compensatory duty is entirely taken off, and then there is a considerable reduction of what is called the ad valorem duty, which in the present law ranges from 10 to 15 per cent.

Mr. HOAR. Now, I hope we shall have an answer from the Senator from Mississippi as to what he is in favor of.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I have not had an opportunity for three or four weeks of saying what I am in favor of. I have been voting for some things, but I have not said anything. I now want to get through with this subject.

Mr. HOAR. Has the Senator voted for anything he was not in favor of?

Mr. GEORGE. It is not a question of what I should like to have; but, as the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] very justly stated, my mind seems to have been turned of late in the direction of what might be done in favor of those who raise wool, and having been turned in that direction, it occurred to me to inquire of those who have advocated on this floor a tax on wool, whether if that tax should be enacted, it would not lead to another tax, that is, the schedule on woolen goods having been framed, as was suggested by the Senator, upon the idea that the manufacturers were to have free wool, if we concluded to give them taxed wool——

Mr. CULLOM. A duty on wool.

Mr. GEORGE. A duty on wool—would it not then, in the estimation of those Senators, be necessary and proper to increase the duty upon the manufactured article? I understand the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] and the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] to state that that is so.

So, Mr. President, the farmer, who seems to be the object of the solicitude and care of my friends upon the other side, stands in this relation, that he ought to have tax on wool, but he can not have it unless the manufacturers of this country are to be compensated for that duty on wool by an additional duty upon the manufactured article.

Mr. ALLISON. Let me ask the Senator from Mississippi a question?

Mr. GEORGE. Let me get through with this argument.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well, though it was on that point I wished to make my inquiry.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator will discover that I am not very familiar with tariff matters. I have surrendered my judgment during this entire discussion to what are called the managers on the Democratic side.

Mr. HOAR. Who are they?

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator sees them here every day.

Mr. HOAR. Every one of them says he does not approve of this bill; that he has surrendered his judgment to somebody else.

Mr. GEORGE. Never mind about that.

Mr. President, I am a farmer myself, and follow no other business. The people of Mississippi are farmers. Taking them altogether they do very little of any other business but farming. They have considerable wool interest there; they have a large lumber interest there. The Senator from Maine will remember that I have uniformly up to this time voted for a tax on lumber.

Mr. FRYE. And the Senator ought to do it now.

Mr. GEORGE. I know that is the Senator's opinion. I also voted for a tax on wool, I believe, in company with Governor Brown of Georgia. We were the only Democrats, so far as I remember, who did so vote. I voted for it mainly upon the ground that at that time we were forming a protective tariff—confessedly so—and I thought when we were sitting down framing a protective tariff that the protection ought to go all around. I thought that but fair. In addition to that I was in the minority. The majority had already imposed a compensatory extra duty upon woolen goods to equalize the tax on raw wool, and I did not think it was exactly fair after that compensatory duty had been laid in the bill to take away what benefit there might be to the farmer by making wool free. I did not think that was logical or fair.

Mr. MORRILL rose.

Mr. GEORGE. Now, let me go a little further. I will yield to the Senator directly.

Mr. MORRILL. I merely wanted to get in a word. The Senator says he considered that it was not exactly fair not to put a duty on wool after putting a compensatory duty on woolens. I should like to know if he thinks it would be exactly fair after having taken off all of the compensatory duty upon woolens that we should make wool free and then put the rate on woolens so low that absolutely all the wool would be imported in the shape of woolens?

Mr. GEORGE. That is exactly what I was trying to get at. I am not an expert in tariff matters, like my venerable and respected friend from Vermont and my friend from Iowa, equally respected but not quite so venerable, and so I have to feel along in this discussion with a little care and see where I put my foot, whether I put it upon safe ground or not.

The remark made by the Senator from Vermont brings to my mind another thing to which I wish to call the attention of Senators on the other side. I have heard it over and over asserted in this Chamber—it seems to be a kind of maxim accepted as the truth on the part of our Republican friends—that the way to get a thing cheap is to tax to protect it. The Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] the other day, when we came to cotton bagging, pulled out a price list of bagging running back, I believe, as far as 1866, showing that it was very high in 1866, and that it kept falling gradually until a year, which he mentioned but I have forgotten, when a tax or a duty was placed on bagging, and after that tax was placed on bagging, then, if I understood the Senator's figures correctly, the fall became constant and rapid until we have got it down now to a very cheap thing. I understand it to be a sort of maxim on the part of the Republicans, the Republicans of the Senate especially, that the way in the end to have a cheap article is to protect it. Have I misstated it?

Mr. FRYE. No, sir; that is correct.

Mr. GEORGE. Very well.

Mr. FRYE. But let me say to the Senator——

Mr. GEORGE. That is enough. I do not want to get into an argument until I get through. You will throw me off.

Mr. FRYE. All right.

Mr. GEORGE. I am not familiar with tariff matters like these experts from New England.

Now, it is acknowledged that the way to have cheap goods is to tax them to protect them, that protection encourages production in our own country. If that be so, why is it not the very best thing in the world that we can do for the woolen manufacturers to tax wool in order to get cheap wool for their consumption? If that be so, and according to the Republican argument that is so, where comes in the rightfulness of your compensatory duty?

Mr. President, I have been a little bewildered at the various arguments which have been made during this very lengthy discussion. That has been beaten into my mind, as everything is beaten into my mind which the Senator from Maine gets hold of; he generally makes it plain and forcible. But I notice (and that is the point of bewilderment with me) that whilst that is the argument which is always used when some Democratic Senator commonly called a free trader gets up and opposes high duties on imported goods, and my friends on the other side of the Chamber stand by it when it is proposed to tax a manufactured product that will come in competition with the manufactures of this country. Yet, whenever it is proposed to tax a raw material in this country used by those manufacturers, then it will not do.

We all noticed the other day that when the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] proposed to put a tax on hides, which is the raw material out of which boots and shoes are made, then the learned and distinguished Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] suggested, if he did not make the motion, that if you tax hides you must tax boots and shoes to compensate the manufacturer for the tax on hides. Now, I should like to have the Senator from Massachusetts explain why it is that when you tax by a duty a manufactured product——

Mr. HOAR rose.

Mr. GEORGE. Wait until I get through.

Mr. HOAR. I thought the Senator said he would like to have it explained. I can explain it right here.

Mr. GEORGE. Why is it when you tax by a duty goods to be introduced into this country that you are providing the most certain and sure means by which the people of the country are to get cheap goods of the kind taxed?

Mr. HOAR. Now, will the Senator let me explain it right there? I will see that he gets the information.

Mr. GEORGE. Wait until I get through, and then you can explain. Now, you all agree to that. The Senator from Maine says very frankly that I am right on that point. I am glad I am right once in his estimation. But when you come to apply that same principle to the product of the farm, and when that manufacturer is to be the purchaser of the taxed article instead of the ordinary consumer of this country, in every instance when you put the tax upon the article which the manufacturer has to use, then all this maxim accepted, as the Senator from Maine stated very frankly, to be a fundamental and indisputable principle of the protectionists, no longer applies.

I want the country to understand that in the estimation of our friends on the other side of the Chamber if you tax a manufactured product you do not raise the price of it, you get it cheaper than you ever did before; in other words, that is the only way to get it cheap, I understand; but if you lay a tax upon a thing which the manufacturer has to buy, then it raises the price of it, and he must have a compensatory duty in order to equalize it.

Mr. FRYE. Can not the Senator see why?

Mr. GEORGE. No, I can not, and no mortal man can see why.

Mr. FRYE. I can, without the slightest difficulty.

Mr. GEORGE. Very well, you can explain it. In reference to sugar, when it was urged that sugar ought to be reduced in price in the same way by the tax that other products were reduced, it was said that the area suitable for the production of sugar is limited and there is no prospect for the amount of sugar to be produced in this country that would be consumed. They said that. I thought that was a very proper answer. I accepted that. But now we have got out of that limited area. A Senator on the other side of the Chamber, I think the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW], said the other day that one single valley in his State would raise sugar beets enough to make sugar—I do not know, but enough for all the world, at least all we would want in this country. We have also down in Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia, Arkansas, and Texas an unlimited amount of land to produce beet sugar.

Mr. FRYE. The climate is too warm there to make it a success. Beets must be raised in a colder climate.

Mr. GEORGE. At all events, we have reached the position on the sugar question that we have an unlimited area in which we can produce the sugar beet. We have got out of the old Louisiana circumscribed territory for raising cane. Now, when the Democrats wickedly, in the estimation of some of our friends on the other side, propose to tax sugar we hear lamentations and complaints from all quarters that we are increasing the price of sugar; that we are taxing a necessity of life. You never hear a word suggested that the way in fact to get cheap sugar is just exactly the way in which to get cheap woolen cloth or any other sort of cloth, to tax it. You do not hear that.

So, Mr. President, I confess I have been a little bewildered about this matter. I could not exactly see through it; and I have about come to the conclusion that the maxim of the protectionists, to tax an article to get it cheap, only applies when the tax is laid in favor of a manufacturer, but it has nothing in the world to do with a tax levied upon an agricultural product. And so we are running along in that way. Our friends on the other side are assuring the consumers of the country that by taxing their hardware, boots and shoes, cloth, and all sorts of goods 50, 60, or 100 per cent upon the imported articles is just the way to get the cheapest cloth or cheapest manufactured products in all the world; and when we come to apply that in favor of a tax which the manufacturer has to pay, then it does not operate; the tax raises the price. Now, our friends on the other side of the Chamber can explain that at their leisure.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I should not have supposed but for my great and undoubting confidence in the veracity of my friend from Mississippi that he was so guileless and innocent a person as he says he is. But of course he is; and being therefore a guileless and innocent person—a person whose guilelessness and innocence only finds a fitting illustration in the lamb whose wool is the subject of discussion at this moment—having the Senator's own assertion, I think I am justified in the further inference that somebody has been imposing upon him and practicing upon that guilelessness and innocence in putting into his head the argument which he has just made. It is not the Senator's own. If he had set his astute intellect to work he would have seen the answer to his proposition; but it is only his lamb-like nature which has accepted (without any explanation of his own profound reasoning power) this suggestion of some crafty personage which he asks to have explained.

The Senator wants to know how it is that the doctrine of the protectionist (being, as it undoubtedly is, that the encouraging by protection in this country of native domestic manufacture and agriculture by giving it the great American market to the exclusion of products of other countries who pay little or nothing for labor) reduces in the end the price. First, by bringing American competition into the field. Next, by bringing American intelligence and inventive power into the field. Third, by keeping up a rate of wages which gives an instructed brain and intellect, a hand skilled and muscle trained for the process so that class of mechanics and manufacturers and workingmen are all the time introducing and inventing and promoting processes which cheapen production, while the poor, cheap, and unreasoning laborer of China and India would remain for a thousand centuries doing the same thing without any substantial improvement.

That being the doctrine of protection, the Senator wants to know why it is that when hides are to have a protective duty upon them the manufacturer of hides into boots and shoes does not say, "Why that, of course, is going to cheapen my material, and therefore I do not need any additional duty for my protection," or when wool is to have a duty put upon it the manufacturer of wool into cloth at once says, "Why, you are going to increase the cost of what I am to buy and not diminish it, and, therefore, you must increase the rate on my product." The Senator says he wants to know how that comes about.

Does not the Senator see that when a product is not used except to be made into something else, as is the case with wool and leather, it is just as much making wool or leather free to import woolen cloths or boots and shoes free as if you admitted the leather or the wool free? The only market the American producer of hides has is to sell to the manufacturer of leather in the United States, substantially the only market the American raiser of wool has (unless the Democratic orator wants a little to pull over somebody's eyes) is to sell it to the American manufacturer of woolen goods. Therefore, if with one breath you say there shall be a duty on wool, whether it is protective merely or whether it is prohibitory, and at the same time there shall not be any woolen manufactures in this country, you have said you can raise wool, but there shall not be anybody to whom you can sell it.

If you say there shall be a prohibitory duty on hides and at the same time say that all our boots and shoes shall be made abroad and imported free, of course it is simply saying that there shall not be any use of the hides when they are produced. In other words, you have not a protective duty on wool if you let it come in free or without sufficient protection in the form of woolen cloth or woolen garments. You have not a protective duty on hides if you say in the same breath hides may come in free in the form of boots and shoes. It is only a pretense of a duty.

Therefore, the American manufacturer of wool and woolens very much prefers the duty on wool to free wool, because he knows not only that it is just to another industry, but he knows also that with a duty on American wool, wool is to be cheapened in the end to him by American competition. So if you say to the woolen manufacturer of the East, you may have an adequate duty, as this bill professes to say—I do not think it does, but admitting it for the moment—and you may have your material free, the substantially unanimous answer of the woolen manufacturers of the East is and always has been, with a very few inconsiderable exceptions, "We do not want that arrangement."

In the first place, it would be a policy utterly base and infamous for us to advocate, speaking of the matter of justice to other people. Next, it is against our highest self-interest, because we claim that the protective duty on the American wool will in the end, while it secures a sufficient profit to the wool-raiser, bring down the price of American wool and the price of the American manufactured article made of wool.

So in regard to hides. That is not so strong a case, because we are exporting considerably. In our manufactures of boots and shoes we have an enormous advantage. We have patented and other machinery, and organized labor in the manufacture of boots and shoes, and it occurs to some extent in the same way.

But in regard to wool, which is the thing the Senator deals with, if you put wool on the protected list and have an insufficient duty or no duty on the woolen manufacture, there will not be a pound of wool raised in the United States, because we are not going to raise it and send it abroad and let it be manufactured and brought back again.

Mr. KYLE. I should like right there——

Mr. HOAR. Let me finish this statement. I am a good deal more simple-minded than the Senator——

Mr. KYLE. If the Senator will allow me——

Mr. HOAR. I said no. If the Senator will pardon me, not at present. Indeed, I have lost what I was saying by the Senator repeating his interruption. If, therefore, you put wool upon the protected list, as you should, by whatever name you call it, revenue or protection, matters nothing if you give a reasonable and adequate protection which enables this industry to go on in the new mountainous States of the Northwest, or in Ohio, or in Southwestern Virginia, or wherever else wool may be raised; you must, in order to do that, as a matter of logic, as a matter of necessity, have some fiscal arrangement under which there will also be a woolen manufacture hereafter in this country. Otherwise nobody would raise any wool. Now I will answer my honorable friend from South Dakota.

Mr. KYLE. I should like to ask just at that point what the Senator would regard as a compensatory duty upon wool?

Mr. HOAR. I should have to leave that to the experts, but I suppose——

Mr. KYLE. I notice that under the McKinley act the average tariff duty on the woolen list is 98.62 per cent, and the bill before the Senate proposes 41.13, it being cut down about 58 per cent.

Mr. HOAR. Those averages, which Senators on both sides of the Chamber are fond of citing and quoting, and they have been quoted on the stump, to my mind convey no idea whatever. They do not help me the least. A campaign speaker takes up the McKinley act, or the previous law in force, or the Mills bill, and he lumps together the rates of duty on articles of which there is not an importation of $100,000 worth in a twelvemonth, and on articles of which there is an importation of $10,000,000 worth in the same period, and then says we have an average reduction or increase of duties in this bill; as if putting on an article like sugar, of which there are fifty or sixty million dollars' worth imported, a quarter of a cent or a quarter of 1 per cent did not drown and sink out of existence an increase of 50 per cent ad valorem or a hundred per cent ad valorem on some little article of luxury, for instance, like stained glass or something of that kind.

Now, take this matter of wool and cotton as well. Take all textile manufactures. Take silk. Of course they vary very much in value and they vary very much in demand. Therefore, it seems to me, with all respect, you have said nothing when you talk about an average on one bill and a comparative average on another measure.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, the speech of the Senator from Massachusetts is a very remarkable one. I do not think when we come to consider it that it was ever suggested to the Senator as he supposes mine was to me. I think that no sane human being will ever produce the exact argument with which the Senator has delighted the Senate to-day, unless, as I suspect, the learned Senator from Massachusetts has indulged in a little jest and joke at the expense of the Senate.

Now, what is his first proposition? It is a very remarkable one when we come to the point in dispute; and I do not intend to allow the Senator, in order to cover up and disguise the point in dispute between us, to go into a general discussion of the benefits of protection.

That question is not in dispute. The question between the Senator and myself, or between Senators on the other side and myself is, How is it that when you put a duty upon manufactured articles and the people complain that they are taxed in their clothing, taxed in their necessaries of life, the answer of the protectionist is "We do not tax you; we are actually giving you things cheaper than you would otherwise get them"? Yet when the manufacturers or their friends come to be heard upon a proposition to tax what they buy and not what they sell, then the tax always enhances the price.

Will the Senator or any Senator answer that question? If the encouragement or the protection of a domestic production cheapens the article why, then, is it that the manufacturers, when an article which they buy is taxed, claim that it does not cheapen it, that it increases the price, and they must therefore have an increased duty in the way of a compensatory tax? I suppose that to carry out the argument of the Senators upon the other side legitimately means this and nothing else, that in order to cheapen the price we must tax manufactured goods which come in competition with manufactures which are sold to the consumers. But if that be so, then I suppose when we tax the manufacturers' raw material and add an additional tax to the manufactured article, that it is done for the purpose of still further decreasing the cost of the manufactured product.

Mr. President, this thing lies in a nutshell. There is no use to attempt to disguise it or to cover it up in any way. If protection decreases the cost of the protected article, then the compensatory duty to the manufacturer for the tax upon the raw material ought not to be levied, because the best way to get for him the cheap raw material is to tax it and encourage it. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] was ingenious enough to confess that fact before he got through, and I come to that now. He admitted that if we tax wool we make it cheaper, as in other cases. Now, I desire to have a question answered. How are the raisers of wool to be benefited by a tax levied on wool if, as the Senator from Massachusetts says, the inevitable, natural, necessary result of the tax is to make wool cheaper?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Will the Senator from Mississippi allow me?

Mr. GEORGE. I should like to hear it explained.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. It will make it cheaper whenever the industry in this country is stimulated to such an extent that the production in the country is equal or more than equal to the demand. Then wool will become cheaper. That will be the result of protection eventually. It increases the price of wool for the time being, when the production of the country is not equal to the demand.

Mr. GEORGE. I am very much obliged to the Senator from Oregon for that explanation.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Is not that a fact?

Mr. GEORGE. I am very much obliged to the Senator for the explanation. When you deal with the farmer you say that the decrease will come only at the end of a long period.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Will the Senator from Mississippi allow me? Is he familiar——

Mr. GEORGE. No; let me get through with my argument on this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi declines to yield.

Mr. GEORGE. When you deal with the manufacturer the cheapening of the product is instantaneous.

Mr. FRYE. Nobody ever said that.

Mr. GEORGE. Very nearly so.

Mr. FRYE. Not at all.

Mr. GEORGE. How long?

Mr. FRYE. I should like——

Mr. GEORGE. Please tell me how long?

Mr. STEWART. Will the Senator from Mississippi allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. GEORGE. Let me get through with this point. I can not answer everybody at once. I am not an expert on tariff matters. I am not a member of the Finance Committee, and I have not given much attention to the question of taxes, or tariff, or finance, except that I have a sort of old-fashioned notion in my head that if anything I wish to buy is brought into this country and is taxed at the seaport 15 or 20 or 30 per cent, in the end I have to pay it. I have that sort of an old-fashioned notion.

But right here I ought to explain in connection with that point another of the remarkable beauties of protection. I have heard it said over and over again that the American consumer does not pay the tax; that it is taxing the foreigner. Yet while that is the argument always made when those on the other side are advocating a tax in favor of the manufacturer, it does not apply when they advocate a tax in favor of the farmer. Now, if that be true, if the foreign producer of wool pays the tax instead of the American manufacturer, I should like to know in God's name what is the use of giving the American manufacturer a compensatory duty to equalize the duty on the raw material. Will the Senator explain that?

Mr. STEWART. I will give the Senator an explanation, if he will allow me.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator from Nevada can explain it when I get through.

Mr. STEWART. I will explain it now, if the Senator from Mississippi will allow me.

Mr. GEORGE. No.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi declines to yield.

Mr. GEORGE. Let us see about these things. They are the most wonderful things in the world. The beauties of protection as explained by those on the other side are the most beautiful things that have happened since the dawn of creation. First, the more you tax an article which the manufacturer sells the cheaper it makes it. Therefore the manufacturer is running down to Congress or sending his committees day after day and month after month beseeching us all to levy a tax in order to make him sell his goods cheaper. That is the first thing.

There is another. Apply it to wool. All our friends on the other side admit that the manufacturer has to have a compensatory duty if we tax wool. If the foreign producer of wool (and all on the other side declare that that is a fundamental principle in protection politics and protection political economy) has to pay the tax instead of the American manufacturer, then I should like to know—will the Senator from Nevada explain——

Mr. STEWART. I am ready to explain it.

Mr. GEORGE. Why, you give the American manufacturer a compensatory duty when we ought to give it to the foreigner, if we give it to anybody? That is the way they reckon. It is a most wonderful species of logic.

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] suggested that I favored a duty on wool. I suppose he got that suggestion from some little intimation I made to him one day that my mind was running somewhat in the channel in which it ran when I voted for a tax on wool several years ago. My mind was running a little that way, and I wanted a little light on the subject; I wanted to have it explained. When I asked the Senators on the other side whether, if I yielded and voted for a duty on wool, they would accept that with a duty on woolen goods just the same as if there was no tax on wool, they all said they would not. I wish to have that explained.

Mr. President, I will tell you what I think about it. If their logic is correct, if the tax on wool cheapens wool, if the tax on foreign goods cheapens foreign goods, then I think instead of asking for a compensatory duty for the little tax which we may put on wool the Senators on the other side, if they believe in what they profess, ought to move to reduce the tax to that extent.

I believe I have said about all I desire to say, and I shall be glad to have my venerable silver friend from Nevada explain the point I have suggested.

Mr. STEWART. I will explain the matter to the Senator from Mississippi. I will explain it to my satisfaction, and I hope to the Senator's satisfaction.

Mr. GEORGE. I am very easily satisfied. Let me start out with this proposition——

Mr. STEWART. No; I will go right on.

Mr. GEORGE. Before you start so that we can go along together, let us agree first that all the distress in the country now comes from the demonetization of silver.

Mr. STEWART. Yes; all the distress comes from that cause; but this is a question by itself. Other things being equal, the price of everything depends upon the demand. The supply remaining the same, the price will depend upon the demand. If there is no demand for foreign wool by the United States, foreign wool would be cheaper than if the United States were in the market. The Senator admits that.

Mr. GEORGE. We agree on that.

Mr. STEWART. We have got so far along together. In the case of the United States we have probably a greater country for producing wool than any other. Two-fifths of our country is not fit for ordinary agriculture without irrigation, but it is peculiarly adapted to the production of wool. Wool can not be produced here as cheaply as it can be produced in the same kind of country in South America, Mexico, and Australia, on account of the difference in wages and on account of the difference in the currency they use, which also enables them to produce where we can not.

Mr. GEORGE. They are silver men down there.

Mr. STEWART. They are silver men.

Mr. GEORGE. All right. We agree about that.

Mr. STEWART. But if they were not silver men the wages of their labor do not exceed a third of our wages. Then, if we should attempt to produce wool in competition with them, in starting they would drive us out of the market absolutely; but if we put enough protection on our products, so that we could partially equalize the difference in the price of labor, and produce in this country and have our vast demand supplied by our own country, both countries would produce wool, and foreign wool would be much cheaper. But if we could not produce wool in this country at all, then the foreigners would charge for the foreign wool according to the demand, and we would make up the great demand.

Foreign wool in the aggregate will certainly be cheaper if we produce our own wool. There is no doubt about that. The foreigners will put the price at a point where they can compete with us and pay the duty, if it is a reasonable duty. Then all wool will be cheapened. It flows over. Protection does not stop the production, but it prevents the enormous rise in the price of foreign wool which there otherwise would be. I believe that taking off the tariff on wool in this country is going to raise the price of foreign wool, because in the first instance they will undersell us. They will break up the industry in this country, and it will take some years to start it again. They will command the market where the labor is cheap, and it will be a warning to us not to commence again.

Mr. GEORGE. Now, will the Senator from Nevada stop right there and allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. STEWART. Certainly.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator knows that the manufacturers are the smartest people in the world.

Mr. STEWART. Yes; I admit that.

Mr. GEORGE. They understand it all.

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir.

Mr. GEORGE. I ask the Senator if taking off the tax on wool is going to increase the price of the foreign wool introduced here?

Mr. STEWART. It will necessarily, because it will increase the demand.

Mr. GEORGE. Why is it, if we put a tax on wool, that the manufacturers want a compensatory duty?

Mr. STEWART. Because they always want all they can get, and that is a good excuse.

Mr. GEORGE. That is a good answer.

Mr. STEWART. They want all they can get, and that is a good excuse. As a matter of fact, as the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] stated, if you put such a tax on wool that we can produce wool in this country to supply our home market, all wool will be cheaper. The foreign wool will be much cheaper, because you take away one of its markets. I do not believe the manufacturers need any compensatory duty.

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator from Nevada allow me to interrupt him right there?

Mr. STEWART. Certainly.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator and I agree perfectly as to silver. That is one bond of eternal friendship between us. Now, we agree on another subject, and that is that no compensatory duty is needed by the manufacturer. That is another bond.

Mr. STEWART. I am perfectly certain that the manufacturers would be benefited by allowing this industry to exist, independent of any compensatory duty, and independent of anything else. I was struck with the remarks of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR]. I have been over the country. I know perfectly well that we can not produce wool as cheaply in the same kind of country as our competitors. I know perfectly well that if we can supply our own market the foreigners will have to sell their wool cheaper than they would otherwise do. We now buy some foreign wool. We have not produced all our own wool. I am certain it will be a great calamity to our manufacturers if this industry is destroyed.

It will make wool higher, it will make clothing higher, to destroy in its infancy this industry, which has been started in a region of the country where they can supply the entire demand of the United States and have wool for export. You see we will have some wool. The industry will not be destroyed all at once; it will be gradually destroyed. If you put the American producer in competition with the foreign producer, the foreign woolgrower can produce wool cheaper and bring down the price all the time until the area where wool is produced is going to be circumscribed.

Wool will be dearer when it is circumscribed. It will take a long time to rehabilitate the industry. You say when the price of wool goes up, the Americans will go into the business again; but it will take a long time. It will be a sad experience. Our people have their flocks and herds. If you destroy them now, by putting our producers in this competition which they can not endure and gradually kill off the industry, it will take a long time for the industry to revive.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator and I are not going to quarrel, even about this.

Mr. STEWART. No.

Mr. GEORGE. We agree. I wish the Senator would turn around and convince his old Republican fellow-Senators that we do not want a compensatory duty. That is what I am trying to accomplish.

Mr. STEWART. But here in this very bill we have a tariff on woolens and no duty on wool. We have a tariff on woolens. I have not discussed it and I do not propose to discuss it at all. There is no duty proposed on wool, and if you now destroy the flocks and herds which are struggling to come into existence in a country where the main industry of the people is already destroyed, and break up the industry, it will not start again for many years, and the area of production of wool will be vastly limited. That being true and the demand remaining the same, the price must rise. I believe that for cheap clothing and for the benefit of everybody, the wool industry ought to be fostered and continued in this country. If it is not continued the eventual result of the competition of foreign wools will put up the price, wool will be higher, and nobody will be benefited except, perhaps, the foreigners who raise the wool.

I do not object to benefiting the foreigners, but I am a little selfish as to my own country. I believe wool is one of the particular articles where a reasonable protective duty is absolutely necessary, because the difference in cost depends solely upon the price of labor. The country is entirely similar; the conditions of freight are similar; everything is similar but labor. We have an abundant region. We can not compete with the foreigners as to labor, and without protection our wool industry will be abandoned. Then the foreign producers will have a monopoly of the market, and as the demand determines the price, it must go up if you take off the duty.

Mr. GEORGE. Let me interrupt the Senator from Nevada right there for a moment. He thinks while a duty ought to be put on wool there should not be any compensatory duty.

Mr. STEWART. If a duty is retained on wool, I think wool will be cheaper, because we shall have a greater area of production.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I also wish to agree as nearly as I can with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE]. I should be glad to know of him whether he believes it is worth while to save the industry of growing wool in this country.

Mr. GEORGE. I think so. I do not want to see any of the industries of my fellow-citizens destroyed.

Mr. ALLISON. Neither do I. I take it, also, that the Senator thinks it is desirable that we should have woolen manufactures in this country.

Mr. GEORGE. Certainly.

Mr. ALLISON. That being true, the question is what we shall do, first with wool, and secondly with woolen manufactures in order to preserve both?

Mr. PALMER. Will the Senator from Iowa allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. PALMER. Is it the opinion of the Senator from Iowa that neither the woolgrowing industry nor wool manufactures can be sustained in this country without something like a bounty?

Mr. ALLISON. I know of no proposition in the pending bill to give a bounty. The other day we had a very close contest here about a bounty, and on the other side of the Chamber there was a great disinclination to give a bounty on constitutional grounds. We, on this side of the Chamber, were willing to give a bounty on sugar and in that way give it protection and admit it free.

But I will answer the Senator more directly. I do believe that without a duty on wool the woolgrowing industry will be gradually and I think swiftly destroyed. I also believe that if we have no duty on woolen goods, it will be only a question of a brief space of time when our woolen manufacturers will be driven to the wall because of the conditions in this country as compared with the conditions in other countries.

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator allow me to say that that is purely an abstract question?

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly it is, and I am answering an abstract question.

Mr. POWER. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir.

Mr. POWER. Is the Senator in favor of giving all the protection to the manufacturer and none to the woolgrower?

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I do not see why my friend should ask me such a question as that. I am certainly not in favor of it.

Mr. PALMER. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir.

Mr. PALMER. I understand the Senator's position to be that neither the woolgrowing industry nor the manufacture of wool can be maintained in this country without the imposition of a protective duty.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator misunderstands me. I state that I do not believe the woolgrowing industry can be maintained in this country in competition with Argentina and Australia and the Australian regions. I do not believe we can grow wool in this country in competition with them, although we have very excellent natural conditions. As the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] very justly said, we have a scale of living, a scale of wages, and a scale of cost of production here which is unknown in the countries which come in competition with us.

Mr. HOAR. I should like the opinion of the Senator from Iowa, who has probably studied this question as much as any living man, as to whether he would not except from that general statement the raising of cheap wools where there are very large pastures and where the sheep can be taken care of at a very slight cost?

Mr. ALLISON. There are portions of our country where the climate is similar to the climate of Australia, where that can be done, or it may be done even in Nevada. I do not know how that is, but I should think it could be done.

Mr. STEWART. It can be.

Mr. ALLISON. I should think it could be; but what I want to get at with reference to my friend from Mississippi is to ascertain just what we ought to do. He and I agree, I think—I shall not commit him, but shall commit myself to the idea—that we should put a duty upon wool. The Senator now says that if we put a duty upon wool we must give a compensatory duty upon woolen goods. That was not my proposition. My proposition was that we should put such a duty on wool as would preserve that industry, and that being done, we should then ascertain what is a proper duty to levy upon woolen goods in order to preserve that industry as well.

I understand the Senator from Mississippi now to be in accord with me——

Mr. GEORGE. Not entirely.

Mr. ALLISON. Because he does not wish to destroy either the industry of growing wool or the industry of manufacturing wool. Therefore we are in accord on that point.

Mr. GEORGE. If the Senator will allow me, I should prefer to state my own position; which is to adjust the taxes on woolen manufactures without reference to any taxes or want of taxes on wool. That being done, we come to consider whether we shall tax wool or not. That would be an independent proposition; but I understand all the Senators on that side to say, if taxes on woolen goods are made on the idea that we are to have no taxes on wool, and you put a tax on wool, then the tax on the manufactured articles would not be sufficient.

Mr. ALLISON. I shall reach that point in a minute.

Mr. HOAR. Nobody said that on this side of the Chamber.

Mr. ALLISON. I heard nobody say it. I certainly did not say it, because I said distinctly to the Senator that I did not know but that the rate of duty now in this bill would be sufficient with a duty on wool.

Mr. GEORGE. What about the compensatory duty?

Mr. ALLISON. I am speaking now of every kind of duty. I stated, in answer to the Senator, that there might be duties which were sufficient and there might be others which were insufficient. Under this new condition it may be, although I do not think so, that some duties might even be lowered under this bill, but I think some of them ought to be advanced.

Mr. SHERMAN. Will the Senator allow me a moment?

Mr. ALLISON. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to state a mathematical proposition, and if I had a blackboard I should prefer to demonstrate it in that way. I think I can make it so plain that anyone can comprehend it.

In the first instance, suppose a controversy should arise between the duty on wool and the duty on woolens. You can assume as an absolute proposition that the labor expended on the production of wool is equal to the cost of the manufacture of wool into cloth. That I believe is admitted on all hands as a general rule, though it varies somewhat. Now, the Senator will see that if one-half of the cost of a hundred yards of cloth was the cost of the wool, say $100, and the other half was the cost of manufacturing that wool into cloth, say $100, if the wool was imported at the rate of duty of 50 per cent, as a matter of course the duty on the wool would be $50.

If, on the contrary, the cloth is imported, then the duty is $100. So the farmer gets the benefit of the duty and the manufacturer gets the benefit of the percentage of 50 per cent, without any compensating duty between the two; because the difference in value between the wool imported and the cloth imported would make the difference precisely $50. It seems to me, therefore, that if an ad valorem duty was put upon wool and woolens, the duty on wool ought to be less than the duty on woolens.

I should be very well contented with a duty of 40 per cent upon wool, and I think our people generally would be. There is no necessity, in my judgment, to compensate the manufacturer who gets the full compensation of 50 per cent upon the full value of both.

Mr. ALLISON. I am very much obliged to the Senator from Ohio for explaining this matter to the Senator from Mississippi. I was not undertaking myself to deal with the proper rate of duty. I was only undertaking to bring myself in accord with the Senator from Mississippi. In the view that, in the readjustments here, we ought to protect both the producer of wool and the woolen manufacturer alike.

The Senator from Mississippi, however, has another difficulty which does not disturb me in the least, and that is, that where we levy a duty upon the raw material which enters into the manufactured product, we ought to levy a less duty on the manufactured product by reason of the fact that the levying of a duty upon the raw material diminishes the price——

Mr. GEORGE. No, I said if your argument was correct that would be the logical result of it.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well. That is the statement of the Senator as respects an assumed condition. He says that we always claim that the levying of a duty upon an article diminishes the price. I did not know that that was the claim. It certainly does diminish the price in very many instances, and the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] awhile ago gave an instance where the introduction of the manufacture of gunny cloth and the manufacture of cotton bagging into the United States diminished the price. Why? Before this industry was established in the United States Dundee and India had practically a monopoly of the production of those articles.

We levied a duty upon gunny cloth and upon cotton bagging—it was not a heavy duty—and we put jute butts, from which this cotton bagging was made, on the free list. The result of that was that numerous factories started all over the country for the manufacture of cotton bagging and gunny cloth. What was the result? The result was that within five years there was established in the United States manufactories for this material which were sufficient to supply the entire consumption of the United States.

What was the effect of that? The effect of it was to create sharp competition between the producers here and the producers in Dundee and in India. Was not that a competition which had a tendency to reduce the price? Certainly it was, and it had that effect.

In 1888—because I wish to give this full illustration—in the Mills bill this protective duty, as we call it, was taken off cotton bagging and gunny cloth.

Mr. GEORGE. That bill did not pass and become a law.

Mr. ALLISON. I was going to give the history of it. The bill passed the House of Representatives on the 21st day of July, 1888. That was at a period when it was absolutely essential that the cotton producers should have gunny bags, and it was too late for anybody to import them from Dundee or from Calcutta. Those people put a squeeze upon the cotton producers and raised the price, I agree; they raised it abnormally for that single crop, knowing perfectly well that it could not be continued; and yet, notwithstanding that illustration given the other day, it is true, as stated by the Senator from Maine, that the placing of a duty upon that article had a tendency by means of competition to reduce the price very materially. We might put a duty of 10 cents a pound upon cotton and it would not advance the price of raw cotton in the United States.

Mr. HOAR. May I call the attention of the Senator to a fact which is in line with his argument? What he says is undoubtedly true; but in the early years of this Government, before the cotton industry had been established here, there was a protective duty put on cotton in order to stimulate the American product. The result was that at first we got cotton enough for our own use; then we got cotton enough to export; and we at last commanded the markets of the world with our natural advantages.

If the Senator will pardon me one moment—which seems a complete answer to the Senator from Mississippi—suppose we had continued that duty on cotton with a provision either of free trade or an amendment that there should not be any cotton manufactured in this country, although there had been a protective duty on cotton, there never would have been a shirt or a sheet or any other article of human use manufactured of cotton in this country. The result, then, would have been that cotton would have disappeared and the cotton manufacture would not have grown up in the United States.

There can not be a more absolute illustration on both sides of this question than the history of cotton in this country.

Mr. ALLISON. I am obliged to the Senator. There was a duty on cotton, but we have a country which is especially adapted to the production of cotton, and therefore we do produce it and shall continue to do so as long as we can produce it at a profit. It is the competition of production which fixes the price of the article of cotton.

The theory, as I understand, of those who believe that we should take care of our industries as against the industries of other countries is that, having a great country of 70,000,000 people, we should keep them all actively employed at fair, remunerative wages, some raising cotton, some raising wheat, some producing other articles of common consumption, and others manufacturing the articles which we must have here, rather than importing them from abroad. That is all I understand there is in the principle.

I want to say to the Senator from Mississippi—and I am rather in accord with the view taken by the Senator on this point—that he has been so occupied during the seven weeks of debate on this tariff question that he has not given it that assiduous care which he usually gives to public questions. If he had, he would find that it is not claimed on this side of the Chamber that on every article upon which a duty is levied the price is thereby reduced to the extent of the reduction of the duty.

Mr. GEORGE. I never asserted that. I asserted this—and I want the Senator to understand it distinctly—that the position on the other side was that the tax when levied on anything which came in competition with our manufactures always reduced the price, and when it was levied on anything else they bought that it did not. That was my statement.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not understand that to be our claim at all; but I think it must be manifest to the Senator that if iron ore and coal are essential elements to the production of pig iron, and we levy a high duty upon iron ore and a heavy duty upon coal, neither iron ore nor coal will be imported, but pig iron will be imported instead, if it be made free. In that sense there must run through these tariff bills what is called a compensatory duty.

I have seen the Senator from Mississippi voting over and over again in this very bill for such compensator duties. Why is it that he voted an eighth of a cent a pound duty upon sugar? It was because it was claimed, at least, that if an eighth of a cent a pound was not put upon sugar, instead of bringing raw sugar into the United States, importers would bring refined sugar into the United States, and thus destroy the American refiner. Why was it that the Senator voted for a tenth of a cent additional duty on sugars which come from Germany, where a bounty is paid by the German Government for the exportation of sugar? It was to equalize the situation for the benefit of our refiners in order that they might compete successfully with those German refiners of sugar. That was the theory upon which that was done. I had supposed the Senator had looked into this question before.

If we put a duty on iron ore or on coal, we should put a duty of some kind upon pig iron to equalize conditions; and if we put a duty on pig iron, we must put a duty on the finer forms of iron. I pointed out, some time ago, when the iron and steel schedule was under consideration, and you put a duty of 1.22 cents upon black sheets, and a duty of only 1.2 cents upon tin plates; that by that discrimination you had made it impossible to import black plates and make tin plates here, but that you encouraged thereby the production of tin plate abroad and its importation here by the reduction of duty.

All I propose to say is, that I am for giving a proper duty to the producers of wool and then I am for giving a proper duty, whatever it may be, to the manufacturers of woolen goods, just as I should have voted to give a duty upon prunes and plums the other day had the provision not been coupled with a proposition to place a duty of 125 per cent upon Zante currants.

If Senators want to be fair-minded and divest themselves for the moment of the shackles and ties, whatever they may be, which compel them to stand here as one man and vote, they ought to be willing to do justice here to the woolen producers upon the plains and in the mountains of the West, and also to give a fair duty upon woolen goods.

I want to ask why it is that we have a duty upon cotton goods? Cotton is free, a raw material.

Mr. BUTLER. To raise revenue.

Mr. ALLISON. Undoubtedly, as the Senator from South Carolina says, to raise revenue; but there is not a man in this Chamber so innocent as not to know that those duties are so levied and so finely adjusted as to effectuate the purpose of continuing the production of cotton goods in the United States. That is a commendable thing to do, is it not? That is all we have done. That is all anybody proposes to do, as I understand, respecting the woolen schedule, and we make that proposition because we find this bill coming here without a duty upon wool, which has prevailed practically from the foundation of the Government. I congratulate my friend from Mississippi that his mind is working up to a point where he will be willing to do justice to the farmers of the Northwest, who are the producers of wool, and the people who live upon the plains in the farther West who produce wool in greater quantities, and I hope that then——

Mr. GEORGE. I want to say to the Senator that I had not to do any working-up of my mind to that.

Mr. ALLISON. I am very glad of it, and I hope what the Senator has said this afternoon will have some influence on his associates on that side of the Chamber, so that, of all the things in this bill, wool and the wool-producer will not be singled out and decorated for the slaughter which is proposed by the bill in many of its parts, and in no part so generally and so universally as in this schedule.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President——

Mr. POWER. With the Senator's permission, I should like to say a word.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. FRYE. With pleasure; but I do not want the Senator from Mississippi to leave just yet. I want to explain something to him.

Mr. GEORGE. No, I shall not leave; but I am getting very tired.

Mr. POWER. I am very thankful to the Senator from Mississippi for what he has said. He has stated that he is a friend of the farmer, and he has also stated that he is not quite satisfied with his party's action in regard to free wool.

Mr. GEORGE. I said that much of it.

Mr. POWER. Then I will qualify what I said. The Senator is not altogether satisfied. He voted the other day with a few of my friends on this side of the Chamber to make hides free. This gives the manufacturers of the East the advantage of getting cheaper hides. The farmers of the West and of the country generally are willing to have hides come in free, because beef is bringing a fair price. They are fair-minded and liberal. The Senators of the dominant party are framing a bill, and in that bill wool is made free of duty, while the manufacturer of wool is protected. This is an injustice to the farmer.

For this reason I want to thank the Senator from Mississippi for what he has said, that he wanted to arrange the matter in some way so as to do justice to the farmer and the manufacturer. I am ready to join him at any time, or any other friends of farmers on the other side of the Senate—and I am glad to say that we have some on this side—and vote for a bill that will protect not only those who are engaged in the manufacture of wool, but also those who are engaged in the growing of sheep and the production of wool.

I am very glad to have heard what the Senator said to-day on this subject.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, I should like to explain one thing to the innocent farmer from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE]; and that is why a duty on manufactured goods in the long run decreases the cost of the goods to the people; and, as he is so innocent, I will do it in the old-fashioned way of an illustration, about the facts of which there can possibly be no dispute.

Up to 1883 we manufactured in this country no mohair plushes at all. We used immense quantities for car seats, for furniture, covers, and all that sort of thing. The Senator has seen it a great many times. We bought it all of Germany and of France. They made it all, using handlooms. Having control of our market, they had the control of the prices which we were compelled to pay.

In 1883 the Goodalls, manufacturers in the State of Maine, and as skillful, as sagacious, as determined as any who can be found in any country, thought that, under the duty which had been placed upon mohair plushes at that time, they could transfer that industry from Germany and France to the United States. They built a mill. Before the mill was completed and the machinery was in, Germany and France made a cut on those plushes of 10 per cent for the purpose of breaking down this industry which was just coming into existence in the United States. They did not succeed.

After the machinery was in the mill they made another cut of 15 per cent, making 25 per cent; and within a year thereafter they made another of 15 per cent, 40 per cent in all. They came very near destroying this industry, struggling into life; and if these men had been ordinary men, with mere ordinary determination and pluck, they would have succeeded. But they were not. They proceeded at once to see whether or not they could discover or invent some new dyes which would be better than those used in foreign countries; those fading rapidly. They succeeded in that. Then they started on the question of making these plushes by power-machinery instead of by handlooms, and in two years they had invented and perfected, at a cost of $30,000, a powerloom for their manufacture.

From that time up to one year ago they ran their mill on full time, and made a fair profit. Six other mills came into existence in the United States, and they had not only the competition abroad to contend with, but the competition at home. The result has been that to-day we are buying our mohair plushes 45 per cent less than we were when we had no mills in this country. Besides, we are making better plushes with faster colors, and have compelled these foreigners to take our power looms to run their mills with. Thus there has been a reduction in price to the world as well as to the United States, and to-day we are supplying nine-tenths of all the plushes used in this country, at 45 per cent less than they formerly cost. Is not that an object-lesson perfectly plain to anybody? Surely my farmer friend, the Senator from Mississippi, can see in this case how a duty, or as he calls it a tax, resulted in a lower priced product to the consumer.

I assert boldly, without any fear of contradiction, that no Senator can name a single industry which has been started into life and successfully established in the United States by the policy of protection where the prices of the product of the industry have not gone down from 30 to 50 per cent, while the wages of the workmen have increased.

Let me illustrate the same thing by another industry; also the danger of reducing a duty below the protective point. We did not make any worsted goods in the United States until after 1864, and everybody wore them. We bought them from England largely, and from Germany. We placed what the Senator from Mississippi would call a heavy duty on worsted goods, and in a few years made nearly all we used. In 1881 the entire importation of worsted goods into the United States was just $242,000 worth, and before we started that industry we imported them by the millions of dollars' worth.

What was the effect upon prices? Worsted mills started all over the United States; they became competitors with each other. That required them to study every possible economy in manufacture, to close up every loophole for loss, to reorganize their mills in the best possible manner, so as to produce the largest product from a given amount of power; that compelled them to call on the inventive genius of the United States for new machinery, and the Senator knows that that genius responds here as it does not in all the world outside. It did not fail this industry. We were making, as I say, all the worsted goods we required, and they were 46 per cent less in cost to the people of the United States than when they were being manufactured abroad.

Now, see what is the effect of too great a reduction of duty upon an industry. In 1883 we revised the tariff, and made use of such words in placing the duty on worsteds that the Treasury Department made a ruling—and I think it was sustained afterwards by the court—by which these goods did not bear the duty of other woolen goods, though they were made of the finest wool, but were dutiable at a much lower rate. What was the result? In 1884 one-half of the worsted mills in the United States were shut down, and one-half of the other half were running on half time. Those that shut down went into the general woolen industry of the country, which overcrowded that. The entire woolen industry of the United States was so crippled that there was hardly a manufacturer, except of special goods, who was making a dollar. What was the result? The very next year we imported $600,000 worth of worsted goods, and it ran on from that up to over $6,000,000 worth in 1890.

The Democratic Secretary of the Treasury twice called attention in his annual reports to the Democratic House to that mistake in the tariff act, and asked of them that they would rectify it. That Democratic House refused, and it was not rectified until the Republicans came into power four years ago in the House of Representatives, when the first bill passed was a bill restoring the duties intended to be levied in 1883. What was the result? Two years after the importation of worsted goods ran from $6,000,000 down to $2,500,000, and has been decreasing ever since.

That is the effect of just a little reduction of duty on woolens in the United States, and I say to Senators they must not make mistakes in these things. They are dealing with serious affairs.

Mr. TELLER and Mr. PEFFER. How as to the prices?

Mr. FRYE. We are buying them at 50 per cent less to-day than we paid before they were manufactured in the United States, and the people of the whole world are reaping like benefit. The foreign manufacturers were compelled in order to try to kill us to put down their prices, and they never have been able to restore them.

You may consider the duty on cotton goods. It is said the cotton schedule is a good one. I do not know whether it is or not; I am inclined to think it may be, but I believe it places too low a duty on fine cotton goods. We imported, I think, in the neighborhood of $30,000,000 worth in 1890. The intention of the McKinley bill was to put the duty high enough on fine cotton goods, where so much more labor enters into their manufacture, to transfer that industry to the United States. They held it was utterly absurd for us to raise cotton here, send it over to Liverpool and have it manufactured into laces, muslins, and curtains, and all that sort of thing, and then they send their muslins, their laces, and their curtains over here, and we send our gold over there to pay the men and the women who made them.

The McKinley act increased the duty on fine cottons, not on any other. Encouraged by this we started in very shortly to manufacture them. There were one or two big mills in Philadelphia. But we were stopped. Why? Because the next House elected was Democratic. The McKinley act never had any chance to do its perfect work. It never had any fair trial. It was handicapped from the very beginning. It took effect in October, an election followed in November, and the interests of the Democratic party required that it should be blackened. It was handicapped too by the merchants of the United States, they seeming almost in a conspiracy to do it, though of course they were not. Why? Because their goods, as everybody knows, were too low in the market.

The profits of the manufacturer were almost nominal, and those of the retailer were equally so. They thought it afforded a chance to mark up their goods and they marked them up, utterly regardless of the fact whether the McKinley act raised a duty or decreased it. Consequently every merchant in the United States became an advocate, unintentionally I admit, for the defeat of the McKinley act in that he marked up his goods; and when inquired of why the price had been raised always replied, "the McKinley act." Every commercial traveler was doing the same thing. The result was an immense Democratic victory. Our tariff law received a savage blow in the eye at the very outset, and from that time down to this has not performed its efficient duty.

Yet, Mr. President, in spite of that it did transfer an immense amount of industry to the country. With the worsted schedule corrected and the higher rates of duties imposed on the finest woolen goods we transferred in two years over $20,000,000 worth of manufactures of woolen goods to the United States from abroad. If that act had been allowed to stand undisturbed, if the Republican party had won in the next contest in this country, instead of $20,000,000 worth it would have been twice that.

Mr. President, who can give any reason why we should import $300,000,000 worth of woolens, of cottons, of silks, of linens, of the manufactures of iron and steel into the United States? We have the wool here; we have the cotton here; we have the iron here; we have the coal here; we have the men and women here to do the work. Why should we not do it here instead of sending our money abroad and hiring people there to do it? Why should not men and women do it here who will buy our products, who will clothe themselves in our woolen cloths, who will eat the food which our farmers raise, instead of having England and Germany and France furnish the cloths and the food to the people who make the goods?

The purpose of the McKinley act was to transfer those industries. It transferred in the little time it was in operation, handicapped as it was, over $60,000,000 worth of those industries to the United States, and employed thousands and hundreds of thousands of men here in this country. No Senator can name a single article of goods increased in price by reason of it. We undertook to transfer the remarkable industry of making tin plate in the McKinley act, and it would have been a profound success if the Republicans had been elected to power the very next year. The Government agent in his second report said that in less than four years the entire industry would be transferred from Wales to the United States of America, and hundreds of thousands of men would have been employed, and we would have used our iron and our coal and our tin, instead of using iron abroad and coal abroad.

But the Democratic party went into that campaign declaring that every tin pail that any workingman carried to his shop or to his work house would cost him 10, 15, or 20 cents more under the McKinley act. They made him believe it and vote the Democratic ticket. Yet, after six months' time there was not a single utensil of tin in the United States that cost the man who bought it one single cent more. The great canners of the country were frightened by that cry. They found out in less than a year that they could make their contracts for cans as cheaply as they ever made them in the history of the country.

The Democratic party came into power in the House, and the first bill they reported from the Ways and Means Committee was one placing tin plate on the free list. Why should not that stop the industry in its success? And it did to a very large extent, I have no doubt.

I was speaking about the cotton schedule. A cotton mill in the United States in the last fifteen years could not run with any profit unless it had changed two-thirds of all its machinery. Why was that? The competition was so close that whether there was a profit or not depended upon the amount of product for a given amount of power. That factory which reduced its product 10 per cent below what it ought to produce for the amount of power used failed.

The factory which did not adopt every invention that the genius of this country offered it, to decrease cost, failed. We invented a spinning machine which reduced the cost of spinning cotton goods just exactly one-half. The factory that did not take that spinning machine could not run successfully with the one that did; it was an utter impossibility.

Are cotton goods cheaper anywhere than here? I do not believe it. I went into the city of Manchester, where they make cotton goods entirely, and where the women work for 35 cents a day, ours working for $1 and $1.25 a day. As a mere matter of curiosity I went to six or eight different retail stores to buy nightshirts, and the best offer I could get was $1.25 each. I can go into any store in Washington—I could then; I can to-day—and buy the same shirt for 75 cents.

Now, it may be that no high duty is required on the coarsest kind of cotton goods. Such a duty may not be needed as protective, but may be as a preventive. You let England overmanufacture—have a large product upon her hands. If there is no duty she dumps it upon our wharves and breaks down our mills. If there is a duty which she is obliged to pay, she will not do it. So, whether a duty is required or not for protection, for prevention it may be very valuable indeed.

Now, let me briefly consider wool. There is not a woolen manufacturer in Maine (and we have a great many of them) who is not in favor of a duty on wool. There is not a Republican member of the House from New England who did not vote for such a duty. There is not a New England Senator here who will not do the same, and we represent the woolen industries of the country. There was one man who owned a mill in Maine, but lived in Boston, who wrote articles in favor of free wool. He got his free wool and saw the woolen schedule reported by this committee. That cured him forever. He will write no more articles of that kind. That is the end of his literary life in that direction.

We are in favor of a duty on wool because we do not believe it is a raw material, We do not believe that anything is a raw material which has been touched by the hand of man and increased in value by that touch. We also believe that the farmer is just as much entitled to protection as the mechanic or the manufacturer. We are confident that you can not raise a pound of wool in the United States if you have no duty. We are satisfied that it is in the interest of our people to raise all of our own wool instead of half of it. We are in favor of encouraging by a duty our farmers to raise flocks of sheep. They are useful in many ways besides raising wool.

Before the committee investigating this subject in 1890 there was a very valuable witness, a man who could not be impeached in any way, and I wish to read a part of his testimony. It was Mr. E. N. Bissell, of Shoreham, Vt. He is a farmer. He went on to inform the committee that he had visited New South Wales, Australia, had spent a good deal of time there, and he says:

> I take this colony, as I am more conversant with this by personal observation and interviews with prominent woolgrowers that reside there. My personal observations were made in 1883; my last interview was with Mr. Samuel McCaughey, of Coonong, Urana, New South Wales, who visited Vermont in 1887 and 1888, and who made his headquarters at my home when purchasing Merino sheep to ship to Australia. His home farm is located 400 miles from Sydney. He owns 1,200,000 sheep, which graze on 3,500,000 acres of land; 2,000,000 acres he owns and 1,500,000 he rents of the government at 2 cents per acre, the lease running in some instances thirty-five years, and all permanent improvements made by him on this rented land is paid for by the government. He estimates that on an average it takes 3 acres of land to keep a sheep one year; and as they have no frost or snow during the year they require no hay or grain, and his farm being inclosed in paddocks or fields containing 1,000 to 2,000 acres, he requires no shepherd to herd his flocks.
> Mr. McCaughey has at different times in the years past hired others to keep sheep for him, and paying 9 cents per head for one year's keeping; and at this price he claims that the person keeping the sheep clears 3 cents a head, as he rents the land of the Government at 2 cents per acre, and it takes only three acres to keep a sheep a year. Mr. McCaughey's sheep shear on an average 5 pounds per head, and it costs a trifle less than 2 cents per pound to grow wool in New South Wales when you hire them kept, or a trifle over 1 cent when kept on rented land.
> The cost of transporting wool from Coonong to Sydney by rail is one-half cent per pound. From Sydney to New York or Boston by sailing vessels the freight is 1 cent per pound, and by steamer from Sydney to San Francisco, and thence by rail to our Atlantic seaports, costs 3 cents per pound, making the total cost of growing and transporting wool a trifle less than 5 cents per pound.

Australia is producing an enormous quantity of wool and constantly increasing her flocks. She can supply us. She can land it at a cost of a little less than 5 cents a pound in New York.

Mr. President, is there a farmer in the United States, whether in the cold North, where you must feed your sheep six months in the year, or even in Texas, where you need not feed them at all, but may keep them out during the year in the open country—is there a farmer there, even, who can compete with Australia in raising wool if she can land that wool in New York for 5 cents a pound?

Mr. POWER. And make a living.

Mr. FRYE. Well, and make a living; that is better. And yet the deliberate proposition, deliberately considered, deliberately proposed by the committee, with all of the other side of the Chamber pledged as deliberately to support anything which comes from that committee, whether right or wrong, is that there shall be no duty on wool, and that our farmers shall be exposed to that competition.

The Senator from Mississippi thinks it is very strange that I take the attitude that the duty on sugar is a tax paid by the consumer, while the duty on manufactured goods is not a tax paid by the consumer; and yet the difference is as broad as the earth itself.

Mr. GEORGE. I explained that.

Mr. FRYE. Then the Senator in his own mind is not disturbed about it.

Mr. GEORGE. I explained the difference between sugar and other things. I agreed to your theory. I acknowledged your explanation to be correct that the area for the production of sugar is limited.

Mr. HARRIS. I should like the Senator from Mississippi to speak loud enough to be heard.

Mr. FRYE. I hope the Senator from Tennessee does not complain that I do not speak loud enough?

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator from Maine was speaking loud enough, but I did not hear a word the Senator from Mississippi said; and if not strictly confidential I think the Senate ought to hear what passes here.

Mr. GEORGE. I said to the Senator from Maine that I had explained the difference between sugar and other things. I said there was a reason, and I gave the reason, I even agreed to his own theory (and he answered it himself and acknowledged the the explanation to be correct) that the area for the production of sugar is so limited it could not be extended to the extent of producing all the sugar consumed in the United States.

Mr. FRYE. That was true up to 1890. There never had been up to that time any particular encouragement that we ever could make a success of sugar-raising in this country. We undertook to try a new plan, a bounty plan, and that, while it lasted, worked admirably. It gave the friends of the beet-sugar industry encouragement to believe that by giving them the time allowed in the act they would supply all the sugar we needed in this country. If under that bounty, or under protection either, sugar became a successful industry in the United States, then the policy of protection would apply to it, and the price of sugar would go down under the force of competition here at home.

Now, as to wool. Why will not the duty on wool operate precisely the same as the duty on manufactured goods? The Senator loses sight of one thing, and that is that his side is claiming that wool is a raw material. In any raw material or in any product nearly so there is the least possible amount of labor, is there not? Then there is the least possible chance to save by machinery or by invention or by organization the cost of production. That is absolutely true of wool. If we in this country could get up a competition in the raising of wool by the inspiration of which we would introduce new methods of raising sheep, of producing lambs, of shearing, of feeding sheep, and all that sort of thing, then the same result would follow from a duty on wool as from one on manufactured goods; but not until then.

It is only by competition, inspired by a protective tariff, in a successful industry, with an opportunity for the use of economy, skill in management, in organization, the invention of new machinery, that we are able to pay higher and constantly increasing wages, and still keep down the price of the product. That does not apply to the production of hides or to the raising of sheep, and in neither case would a duty reduce the cost to any great extent. I have no doubt about this. The production of wool has been enormous in the Argentine Republic; they have increased their flocks to about 100,000,000 sheep, producing nearly 500,000,000 pounds of wool a year.

In 1860 they did not have a quarter of that. In Australia they have been increasing in the same ratio; and so too here. The Senator must remember that at the same time we have been improving breeds of sheep so that woolgrowing has gone up in the Argentine Republic from 2 pounds in a sheep to 5½ pounds, in Australia from 2 pounds to 5 pounds, in the United States from 2½ pounds to nearly 7 pounds to a sheep.

Mr. POWER. Fully seven.

Mr. FRYE. Fully seven. So the result is that there has been an enormous increase in the production of wool the wide world over. That, of course, has reduced the price. The moment the supply is beyond the demand, down the price goes. There is no doubt about that. But the Senator must remember that up to one year ago the price of wool in the United States as compared with the price in Liverpool showed that our farmers got the full benefit of the duty on wool, the price being that amount higher right along, quotation after quotation, in the United States. So the farmers received the benefit.

Mr. President, I beg the Senate's pardon for indulging in a speech; I only intended when I took the floor to say a few words.

Mr. QUAY resumed the speech begun by him yesterday. After having spoken fifteen minutes—

Mr. HARRIS said: I desire to ask the Senator from Pennsylvania if he has reached a point in his remarks where it will be convenient for him to yield to me?

Mr. QUAY. It will always be convenient for me to yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator is kind.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania yields to the Senator from Tennessee.

[Mr. QUAY'S speech will be published entire after it shall have been concluded. See Appendix.]

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I perhaps need not refer to the fact that we have been debating the general principles of tariff taxation since the 2d of April. We have been two days on the woolen schedule in general debate, debating everything else quite as much as wool. I should be exceedingly glad if we could get a unanimous consent agreement to apply the five-minutes rule to this schedule. The senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH], who has been ill for a couple of days, desires to submit some remarks upon the woolen schedule to-morrow morning, and I think he ought to have the opportunity to do so, but I will ask unanimous consent that after he shall have submitted his remarks to-morrow morning, the debate upon the various paragraphs and amendments to the schedule shall be limited to five minutes to each Senator.

Mr. QUAY. Do I understand the Senator from Tennessee as asking at present for a unanimous consent agreement or merely as giving notice that he will ask for such an agreement to-morrow?

Mr. HARRIS. I am asking it now.

Mr. QUAY. I shall feel it my duty to object at the present time, but I suggest——

Mr. HARRIS. I was going to remark, if the Senator from Pennsylvania will allow me, that if Senators desire to make set speeches on the woolen schedule, I for one will stay with them to-night as late as they may desire. I desire to deprive no Senator of his opportunity, but I do feel that there is an imperative duty resting upon me and those who are associated with me to try to make progress with the bill.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. QUAY. Before yielding I wish merely to suggest to the Senator from Tennessee that if he will withdraw his request for the present and renew it to-morrow afternoon the conditions in the Senate may be somewhat changed. To-night, as I said, I can not consent to such an agreement.

Mr. HARRIS. I hope the Senator from Pennsylvania will not say to-morrow afternoon.

Mr. QUAY. That is my suggestion.

Mr. LODGE. I will state to the Senator from Tennessee that I do not desire to make a very long speech on the wool question, but I do wish to speak more than five minutes; and I should like to have time to speak to-morrow as I have been pretty closely confined in a committee room all day. Therefore, I hope the Senator will not press his request for the application of the five-minute rule quite so soon.

Mr. HARRIS. I am satisfied as to the duties of the Senator from Massachusetts. I know he has been engaged on other duties which are confining. I think there is absolute merit in his suggestion, and if I could get the unanimous consent agreement after the Senator from Rhode Island and the Senator from Massachusetts shall have been heard, I should be glad to do it.

Mr. CHANDLER. I say ditto to the Senator from Massachusetts. I wish to make some remarks which will not occupy a long time, but which will occupy more than five minutes. I suggest to the Senator from Tennessee that we go on to-morrow under the five-minute rule, but with permission to any Senator who desires to speak longer to speak longer. [Laughter.] I think that would be the most amicable and the most satisfactory arrangement which could possibly be made.

Mr. HARRIS. That is an India-rubber expansive idea which I can not quite take in.

Mr. PLATT. I hope the Senator from Tennessee will not this evening press any request for a unanimous consent agreement. I feel that it is my duty, representing a State which has woolen manufactories, to say something as to how our people feel about the removal of the duty on wool. The Senator from Tennessee knows that I have not made any set speeches on the tariff, and I do not propose to do so, but I can not say what I desire to say in five minutes or ten minutes. I do not make any long speeches on this subject. I think we had better run on to-morrow as we have gone on to-day. We should have proceeded a good deal faster if the entire debate to-day had, as usual, been confined to this side of the Chamber.

Mr. ALLISON. I know there are quite a number of Senators who desire to speak to-morrow. There are certainly two others besides those who have mentioned the fact that they desire to speak. I do not think there is the slightest disposition to delay the woolen schedule in any way. Certainly by Friday morning we can go on under the five-minute rule, and I hope we can do so to-morrow.

Mr. PLATT. Will the Senator from Iowa allow me? I have been advised of some amendments which are likely to be proposed when we proceed with the consideration of the woolen schedule in detail, which will be pretty important and can scarcely be disposed of under the five-minute rule.

Mr. ALLISON. Of course, such an agreement requires unanimous consent. I was not aware that important amendments were to be offered, but I suppose there will be important amendments presented, as this is a very important schedule. Indeed, I supposed that this schedule would take a full week. I believe we have occupied now only two days upon it.

Mr. HARRIS. Especially on the woolen schedule, two days. The Senator from Iowa is right.

Mr. ALLISON. I suggest to the Senator from Tennessee that he at least postpone the consideration of his request until to-morrow. The Senator from Rhode Island will be here and will make such observations as he may desire. Other Senators will do likewise, and perhaps by Friday we can make some arrangement, and possibly we may do so to-morrow.

Mr. DUBOIS. I hope the Senator from Tennessee will not press his request now. As has been shown to-day, the Northwestern Senators especially take a great interest in this question. Sixty per cent of all the sheep in the country are in the Rocky Mountain region. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] told me just before he left the Chamber that he desires to submit some remarks in regard to free wool. It occurs to me that this is a very legitimate subject of debate. Therefore I hope that the Senator from Tennessee will not insist on his request to limit debate.

Mr. HARRIS. In answer to the Senator from Iowa I will state that I am raising no question about intentional delay. What I complain of is the delay itself. That is the misfortune of the Senate and the country. But in view of the various suggestions which I am compelled to respect (and whether compelled or not a single objection checkmates me) I will adopt the suggestion of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY] and postpone my request until to-morrow. I will repeat it to-morrow, however, and I hope with much better success than this evening.

Now, Mr. President, I am inclined to move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. CAREY. Will the Senator from Tennessee withdraw his motion and yield to me for one minute, that I may call up a private pension bill?

Mr. HARRIS. Certainly; I yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

JOSEPH W. FISHER.

Mr. CAREY. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1957) to increase the pension of Joseph W. Fisher.

By unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment: In line 7, before the word "dollars," to strike out "one hundred" and insert "seventy-two," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of Joseph W. Fisher, late colonel of the One hundred and ninet-yfifth Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers, at the rate of $72 per month, in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After twelve minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 6 o'clock and 7 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, June 14, 1894, at 10 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, June 13, 1894.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. B. BAGBY.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

REPORT OF THE DIRECTOR OF THE MINT.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting the report of the Director of the Mint for the calendar year 1893; which was ordered to be printed.

WETMORE & BRO., ST. LOUIS, MO.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a bill (H. R. 210) for the relief of Wetmore & Bro., of St. Louis, Mo.

Mr. COBB of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, the objection to this bill having been withdrawn, I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The SPEAKER. The bill was laid before the House on yesterday, but was withheld until to-day by consent. The Clerk will again report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to pay to Wetmore & Bro., of St. Louis, Mo., the sum of $220, being the amount in part of fees due to them as attorneys in colored bounty cases, retained and covered into the Treasury.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. COBB of Missouri, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

The SPEAKER laid before the House Senate bills of the following titles; which were severally referred as below:

A bill (S. 1483) to correct the military record of Elisha B. Bassett—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 205) for the relief of John F. W. Dette—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 685) to amend an act entitled "An act to divide the judicial district of North Dakota," etc.—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

A bill (S. 1319) for the relief of E. Douglass, late Indian agent at White Earth Agency—to the Committee on Claims.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. PEARSON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 1127) for the relief of Francis M. Tomlin; and

A bill (H. R. 5778) to supply a deficiency in the grant of public lands to the State of Mississippi for the use of the State University.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 1390) providing an additional circuit judge in the eighth judicial circuit;

A bill (S. 1478) providing for an additional circuit judge in the seventh judicial circuit, and for other purposes; and

A bill (S. 1813) providing an additional circuit judge in the ninth judicial circuit.

BARRY HOSPITAL, HOT SPRINGS, ARK.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 513) granting the use of certain lands in the Hot Springs Reservation, in the State of Arkansas, to the Barry Hospital.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby granted to the Barry Hospital of the city of Hot Springs, in the State of Arkansas, a charity hospital duly organized and chartered under the laws of the State of Arkansas, the right to occupy, improve, and control, for the purpose of erecting thereon a hospital for the use and benefit of the poor, and for no other purpose whatever, any of the lots, pieces, or parcels of land, situate in the county of Garland and State of Arkansas, now owned by the Government of the United States, to be selected by the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, Said hospital shall not be located on the reservation which embraces the hot springs: Provided, That the United States reserves to itself the fee and the right forever to resume possession and occupy any portion of said lands whenever in the judgment of the President the exigency arises that should require the use and appropriation of the same, or for such other disposition as Congress may determine.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the gentleman from Arkansas whether there is any limit to the amount of land that may be used for this purpose?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Arkansas. It is limited by the discretion of the Secretary. The bill calls for a suitable lot, and the selection of it is left to the discretion of the Secretary. I will say to the gentleman that great numbers of indigent sick from all over the Union go to Hot Springs, and this is the only hospital provided for them, and it is supported entirely by the municipality.

It is simply desired that the hospital may be allowed to occupy this land, with the right on the part of the Government to resume possession at any time, although, in point of fact, under existing law, the proceeds of all that land is devoted to Government purposes there.

Mr. PAYNE. I know it is theoretically, but not by law, I believe.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Arkansas. Yes; that is the existing law. The proceeds of that land are to go to care for the water and carry out the Government's policy at Hot Springs.

Mr. PAYNE. I think that if the Government could get rid of all that land there, it would be a benefit to the Treasury.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Arkansas. Well, that is another question.

Mr. BURROWS. Has this bill been acted upon by any House committee?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Arkansas. Oh, yes; the bill has passed the Senate and has been reported favorably by the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I understand that this is a bill to authorize the occupation of some public land at Hot Springs, in the State of Arkansas, for hospital purposes?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Arkansas. Yes, sir; to grant that privilege to an existing hospital which needs better accommodations than it has now. The bill provides that the hospital shall be permitted to occupy some suitable lot, upon which a larger building than the existing one can be erected.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. The only reason why I occupy any of the time of the gentleman from Arkansas in connection with this measure is this. I am usually favorable to all bills of this character, but I had a bill passed through the House some days ago which is of the greatest importance to the people of my State, and that bill is held up at the other end of the Capitol.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Arkansas. Well, if the gentleman has as good a bill as mine I would like to help him reform the Senate in that particular. [Laughter.]

Mr. WILSON of Washington. I want it understood now, so that there will be no uncertainty about it, that if the Representatives of the State of Arkansas can hold up matters that are purely local to the State of Washington, I will see whether I can not hold up matters here that are purely local to the State of Arkansas.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Arkansas. I will say to the gentleman that this bill is not local in its bearing. Of the indigent patients in this hospital only five are from the State of Arkansas; all the others are from other States, and the hospital is maintained entirely by the charity of the people of the locality.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. As I have frequently said, I never interpose in any matter that is local to my neighbors, but the bill to which I refer is of very great importance to my people and to a large section of the country. It would not only give employment to people who are now out of employment, but it would make land that is not worth a cent an acre in its natural condition worth $50 an acre. As that land now is, you could not raise a spear of grass upon it, but with proper irrigation it can be made very fertile, and there is any quantity of water going to waste in that valley, but the gentleman from Arkansas stands in the way of the passage of that bill.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Arkansas. The gentleman does not mean, of course, that I have in any way obstructed the passage of his bill?

Mr. WILSON of Washington. No; not this gentleman; but there was objection on the other side. I want to say here and now, that upon general legislation I never object. But upon local legislation, if I am to be held up by the Representative from Arkansas, I will see if I can not also object.

Mr. COGSWELL. I hope the gentleman from Washington will not object.

Mr. BURROWS. He does not object.

Mr. COGSWELL. We have all got to follow the golden rule, and do unto others as we would have them do unto us. We will take care of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. WILSON] by and by.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Arkansas, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ELIZA K. STARR.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 3487, granting a pension to Eliza K. Starr.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Eliza K. Starr, widow of Samuel H. Starr, late colonel Fifth New Jersey Volunteers and major and brevet colonel Sixth United States Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 a month.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to consider this bill, which, as the Chair understands, has been reported from the Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Committee of the Whole on March 18 agreed to an amendment to this bill, which amendment the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the word "fifty," in line 9, and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-five," and after the word "month," in the same line, add the words, "in lieu of her present pension."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment reported from the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. LACEY. I ask that the report be read.

The report (by Mr. LOUDENSLAGER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3487) granting a pension to Eliza K. Starr, have considered the same and submit the following report:

The claimant is the widow of Col. Samuel H. Starr, United States Army, whose military record, as reported by the War Department, shows he enlisted as a private October 27, 1832, and was assigned to Battery C, Fourth United States Artillery, and discharged as a sergeant October 27, 1837.

He reënlisted as a private June 23, 1846, and was assigned to Company A, United States Engineers. Appointed brevet second lieutenant Second Dragoons, to rank June 28, 1848, and accepted appointment July 14, 1848.

Promoted to be second lieutenant, same regiment, July 15, 1848.

Promoted to be first lieutenant, same regiment, November 10, 1851.

Promoted to be captain, same regiment, June 14, 1858.

On August 29, 1861, he was granted leave until further orders to accept the colonelcy of the Fifth New Jersey Volunteers, and discharged from the volunteer service October 20, 1862, and rejoined the regular service in his old regiment. He was brevetted major, United States Army, May 4, 1862, "for gallant and meritorious services in the battle of Williamsburg, Va.," and promoted to major of Sixth Cavalry April 25, 1863. He was brevetted lieutenant-colonel June 21, 1863, "for gallant and meritorious services in action at Upperville, Va.," and to colonel July 2, 1863, "for gallant and meritorious services in the Gettysburg campaign."

He was retired from active service on December 15, 1870, with the full rank of the command he held when he received his disabling wound—that of colonel.

The retiring board reported that he was—

"Incapacitated for active service in consequence of the loss of his right arm 6 inches below the shoulder, said loss resulting from a gunshot wound received in the line of duty in action at Fairfield, Pa., July 3, 1863, while holding the rank of major, Sixth United States Cavalry, and in actual command of said regiment."

The medical records also show he was wounded in the face at the battle of Williamsburg, Va., May 5, 1862, and that he died in Philadelphia November 25, 1891.

It is shown by the testimony on file in the Pension Department that the claimant was married to the soldier in 1841, and by other testimony on file in said office and affidavits filed with the committee, that the widow is without means of support and is dependent for her maintenance upon her two daughters, one a widow with two children, the other unmarried, and who are compelled to earn their own living.

Your committee, after a full and careful consideration of all the facts, believe this bill to be meritorious and its passage is recommended with the following amendments:

Strike out the word "fifty," in line 9, and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-five;" and after the word "month," in the same line, add the words "in lieu of her present pension."

The amendment adopted by the Committee of the Whole was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

The title of the bill was amended so as to read:

A bill granting an increase of pension to Eliza K. Starr.

On motion of Mr. LOUDENSLAGER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill passed was laid on the table.

SOUTHERN UTE INDIANS.

Mr. HUNTER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 6792) to disapprove the treaty heretofore made with the Southern Ute Indians to be removed to the Territory of Utah, and providing for settling them down in severalty where they may so elect and are qualified, and to settle all those not electing to take lands in severalty on the west forty miles of present reservation and in portions of New Mexico, and for other purposes.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the agreement made by J. Montgomery Smith, Thomas S. Childs, and R. B. Weaver, commissioners on the part of the United States, with the Southern Ute Indians of Colorado, bearing date November 13, 1888, be, and the same is hereby, disapproved and annulled.

SEC. 2. That within ninety days after the passage of this act the Secretary of the Interior shall cause allotment of land, in severalty, to be made to such of the Southern Ute Indians in Colorado as may elect and be considered by him qualified to take the same out of the agricultural lands embraced in their present reservation in Colorado, such allotments to be made in accordance with the provisions of the act of Congress approved February 8, 1887, entitled "An act to provide for the allotment of lands in severalty to Indians on the various reservations and to extend the protection of the laws of the United States and the Territories over the Indians, and for other purposes," and the treaties heretofore made with said Indians.

SEC. 3. That for the sole and exclusive use and occupancy of such of said Indians as may not elect or be deemed qualified to take allotments of land in severalty, as provided in the preceding section, there shall be, and is hereby, set apart and reserved all that portion of their present reservation lying west of the range lying between ranges 13 and 14, west of the New Mexico principal meridian, and also all of townships 31 and 32 of ranges 14, 15, and 16 west of the New Mexico principal meridian, and lying in the Territory of New Mexico, subject, however, to the right of the Government to erect and maintain agency buildings thereon and to grant rights of way through the same for railroads, irrigation ditches, highways, and other necessary purposes; and the Government shall maintain an agency at some suitable place on said lands so reserved.

SEC. 4. That at the expiration of ninety days from the passage of this act the President of the United States shall issue his proclamation declaring the lands embraced within the present reservation of said Indians except such portions as may have been alloted or reserved under the provisions of the preceding sections of this act, open to occupancy and settlement, and thereupon said lands shall be and become a part of the public domain of the United States, and shall be subject to entry under the desert, homestead, and town-site laws and the laws governing the disposal of coal, mineral, stone, and timber lands; but no settler shall receive a title to any portion of such lands at less than $1.25 per acre: Provided, That before said lands shall be opened to public settlement the Secretary of the Interior shall cause the improvements belonging to the Indians on the lands now occupied by them to be appraised and sold at public sale to the highest bidder, except improvements on lands allotted to the Indians in accordance with the provisions of this act. No sale of such improvements shall be made for less than the appraised value, and the several purchasers of said improvements shall, for thirty days after the issuance of the President's proclamation, have the preference right of entry of the lands upon which the improvements purchased by him are situated: Provided further, That the said purchase shall not exceed 160 acres; And provided further, That the proceeds of the sale of such improvements shall be paid to the Indians owning the same.

SEC. 5. That out of the moneys first realized from the sale of said lands so opened up to public settlement there shall be paid to said Indians the sum of $50,000, as follows: $10,000 annually for five years, and, when paid, the money to be equally divided among all of said Indians per capita, irrespective of age or sex; also the sum of $20,000 of said proceeds shall be paid to the Secretary of the Interior, who shall invest the same in sheep and divide the said sheep among the said Indians per capita equally, irrespective of age or sex: also to Ignacio, head chief; to Buckskin Charlie, as chief of the Moaches, and Mariano, as chief of the Weeminuches, the sum of $500 each; also to Tapucke and Tabewatch, as chiefs of the Capotes, the sum of $250 each; that the balance of the money realized from the sale of lands, after deducting expenses of sale and survey, shall be held in the Treasury of the United States in trust for the sole use and benefit of said Southern Ute Indians. The Secretary of the Interior may in his discretion cause to be paid any or all of the above sums of money out of the trust fund now held for said Indians by the Government, and shall cause the same to be replaced from the proceeds of the sale of said lands to be opened for settlement.

The Committee on Indian Affairs recommended the following amendments:

That the words "and to carry out the provisions of the treaty made with said Indians June 15, 1880," be added to the title.

That the words "and the treaty made with said Indians June 15, 1880, be carried out as herein provided and as further provided by general law for settling Indians in severalty," be added to and made a part of section 1.

That after the word "approved," in line 8 of section 2, the words "June 15, 1880," be inserted; and in line 13 of the same section, after the word "purposes," "and the amendments thereto as far as applicable hereto," be inserted.

That after the word "acre," in line 13 of section 4, the words "and shall be required to make a cash payment of 50 cents per acre at the time filing is made upon any of said lands" be inserted.

That in line 4 of section 5 the word "five" be substituted for the word "ten," and the word "ten" for the word "five."

That all of section 5 after the words "Ute Indians" in line 19 be stricken out.

That there shall be added to and become a part of section 5 the words: "That nothing herein provided shall in any manner be construed to change or interfere with the right of said Indians under any other existing treaty regarding any annuities or trust funds or the interest thereon."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman for unanimous consent to consider this bill?

There was no objection.

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

The title of the bill was amended by adding the following words:

And to carry out the provisions of the treaty with said Indians June 15, 1880.

On motion of Mr. HUNTER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill passed was laid on the table.

THOMAS RHYS SMITH.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 499) to provide for the adjustment and payment of the claim of Thomas Rhys Smith for work done and materials furnished for the breakwater at Bar Harbor, Me.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to examine and adjust the claim of Thomas Rhys Smith against the Government of the United States for work done and materials furnished for the breakwater at Bar Harbor, Me., under a contract between said Thomas Rhys Smith and the United States, and determine what amount of work was done and materials furnished thereunder, the amount paid on account thereof, and the balance remaining unpaid, which balance he shall certify to the proper accounting officers for payment in the manner prescribed by law; and for the payment of said claim the sum of $6,391.12, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated: Provided, That before making any payment the Secretary of War shall exact from said Thomas Rhys Smith a bond in the penal sum of $10,000, with sufficient sureties, to be approved by him, conditioned to indemnify the United States against any lawful claim of any other party or parties.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request for the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. BYNUM. I should like to hear the report.

The SPEAKER. Without objection the report can be read.

The report (by Mr. LOUD) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 499) to provide for the adjustment and payment of the claim of Thomas Rhys Smith for work done and materials furnished, having had the same under consideration, hereby adopt the Senate report, and make the same, together with papers marked Exhibits A and B, a part of this report.

The committee recommend that the House concur with the Senate in the passage of the bill, and that House bill 1102, covering same subject, lie upon the table.

[Senate Report No. 191, Fifty-third Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3221) entitled "A bill to provide for the adjustment and payment of the claim of Thomas Rhys Smith for work done and materials furnished for the breakwater at Bar Harbor, Me.," having had the same under consideration, beg to submit the following report:

Under contract with the War Department, entered into October 18, 1890, the claimant, Thomas Rhys Smith, of New York City, agreed to place stone in the breakwater at Bar Harbor, Me., at the price of $1.23½ per ton, and so much as would amount to about $32,500. The work was to have been completed on or before the 31st day of December, 1891. Before all the stone required by the contract was placed the work on the part of the contractor stopped about the middle of November, 1891. According to the contract, payments were to be made monthly for the stone delivered and accepted, reserving 10 per cent from each payment until the whole contract was completed and accepted.

When the contractors stopped work the reserved 10 percentages on payments made amounted to $1,908.07, and stone had been delivered at contract price, according to the report of the Chief of Engineers, amounting to $4,483.05, upon which no payment had been made. The work seems to have come to a standstill because of disagreements between the contractor, Mr. Smith, and parties who were furnishing the stone and placing it. Each of the parties made request to the chief officer in charge not to make payment to the other, and in the course of the correspondence it came to the knowledge of the office of the Chief of Engineers, War Department, that a paper, of which the following is a copy, had been given by Mr. T. Rhys Smith to Neelon & Shields, the parties actually furnishing the stone and placing it:

GREEN'S LANDING, ME., May 25, 1891.

To whom it may concern:

This memorandum is to certify that the contract for the curbing with the city of Washington and the contract for depositing the stone on the breakwater at Bar Harbor, Mount Desert, Me., which were taken by me, were taken for the sole benefit of the firm of Neelon & Shields, their heirs or assigns, subject to my agreement with them for expenses and commission. These contracts were taken in the latter part of the summer of 1890.

In witness whereof I have this day and date above mentioned set my hand and seal.

T. RHYS SMITH.

[SEAL.]

Witnessed:

E. E. SPOFFORD.

E. E. SPOFFORD,
Justice of the Peace.

PORTLAND, ME., June 2, 1891.

Upon the disclosure of the above, it was decided by the Secretary of War that this paper evidenced such a transfer of the contract as to cause an annulment of the same under section 3737 of the Revised Statutes. Thereupon, the contract being annulled, the work remaining was again advertised, and the lowest bid for the part of the work which Mr. T. Rhys Smith would have performed, had he completed his contract, was $1.23 per ton, that is one-half a cent less per ton than the contract price under the contract with Mr. Smith.

The bill having been referred to the Secretary of War for report, was returned, transmitting the above facts, with the following statement from the Chief of Engineers:

"No objection is therefore seen to the passage of the bill.

"THOS. LINCOLN CASEY,
"Brigadier-General, Chief of Engineers."

The report of the Chief Engineers was transmitted to your committee with the following indorsement:

"WAR DEPARTMENT, June 16, 1892.

"Respectfully returned to the chairman of the Committee on Claims, United States Senate, inviting attention to the preceding report of the Chief of Engineers on the bill, from which it appears that no objection is known to its passage.

"L. A. GRANT,
"Assistant Secretary of War."

In view of the foregoing, your committee report back the bill (S. 3221) with the following amendment, and recommend its passage:

Add to the bill the following:

"Provided, That before making any payment the Secretary of War shall exact from said Thomas Rhys Smith a bond to the United States in the penal sum of $10,000, with sufficient sureties, to be approved by him, conditioned to indemnify the United States against any lawful claim of any other party or parties."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. MILLIKEN] for unanimous consent for the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MILLIKEN, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS.

Mr. TURNER of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I again ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 7278) to amend the seventh section of the act entitled "An act to establish circuit courts of appeals, and to define and regulate in certain cases the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1891.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the seventh section of the act entitled "An act to establish circuit courts of appeals, and to define and regulate in certain cases the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1891, be amended so as to read as follows:

SEC. 7. That where, upon a hearing in equity in a district court or in an existing circuit court, an injunction shall be granted or continued or a receiver appointed, by an interlocutory order or decree, in a cause in which an appeal from a final decree may be taken under the provisions of this act to the circuit court of appeals, an appeal may be taken from such interlocutory order or decree granting or continuing such injunction or appointing such receiver to the circuit court of appeals: Provided, That the appeal must be taken within thirty days from the entry of such order or decree, and it shall take precedence in the appellate court; and the proceedings in other respects in the court below shall not be stayed, unless otherwise ordered by that court, during the pendency of such appeal.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of this bill. Is there objection?

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Speaker, I should like to have the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TURNER] explain the effect of this modification of the statute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the gentleman can make an explanation.

Mr. TURNER of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, this is a renewal of the request made by me last week for the immediate consideration of this bill, and some explanation was made on that occasion as to its effect. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] preferred to take time to consider it. He has since examined the bill, and he has informed me that he has no objection to it.

Mr. BURROWS. It is the same matter that was up last week?

Mr. TURNER of Georgia. The same matter.

Mr. BURROWS. Then I have no objection to it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and being engrossed, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. TURNER of Georgia, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

LEAVE TO SIT DURING THE SESSION.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. SHELL] desires to obtain consent that the Committee on Ventilation and Acoustics may sit during the sessions of the House. If there be no objection that leave will be granted.

There was no objection.

REPRINT OF A BILL.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. HAUGEN] asks to have a reprint of a bill, the title of which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 5746) to limit the effect of the regulation of commerce between the several States and with foreign countries in certain cases.

The SPEAKER. The print of this bill has been exhausted, and, without objection, a reprint will be ordered.

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. BOATNER, for ten days, on account of important business.

COMMITTEE REPORTS.

Mr. HOLMAN. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of committees for reports.

The committees were called for reports.

UNITED STATES COMMISSIONERS.

Mr. WOLVERTON, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported a bill (H. R. 7384) to provide for the appointment of United States commissioners and to define their jurisdiction, powers, and duties; which was read a first and second time, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed and referred to the House Calendar.

ARKANSAS, TEXAS AND MEXICAN CENTRAL RAILWAY.

Mr. PENDLETON of Texas, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported a bill (H. R. 7335) to grant the Arkansas, Texas and Mexican Central Railway Company a right of way through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

NAVY-YARD, SABINE PASS, TEXAS.

Mr. MEYER, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported a bill (H. R. 5777) to provide for the selection of a site for the establishment of a navy-yard and dry dock on or near Sabine Pass, in the State of Texas; which was read a first and second time, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The call of committees for reports was completed.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, for the consideration of general appropriation bills.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union (Mr. O'NEIL of Massachusetts in the chair) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6913) making appropriation for current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. On yesterday the committee passed over, on page 33, the paragraph between lines 6 and 13, with the understanding that it was to be called up to-day. This action was taken at the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, if I understood the inquiry of the gentleman from Illinois, it was as to why there was an appropriation of only $80,000 this year, while there was an appropriation of $100,000 last year. I will state that the reason for this is that a part of the old appropriation remains unexpended, and the Indian Bureau say this amount will be sufficient for the purposes named. Furthermore the Sioux have a fund of $3,000,000, and half of the interest on that fund can be used for subsistence.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Is this all that is asked by the Indian Bureau?

Mr. PICKLER. Yes; the Bureau thinks this will be sufficient.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the Clerk will resume the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

WINNEBAGOES.

For interest on $804,909.17, at 5 per cent per annum, per fourth article of treaty of November 1, 1837, and joint resolution of July 17, 1862, and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to expend said interest for the support, education, and civilization of said Indians, $40,245.45;

For interest on $78,340.41, at 5 per cent per annum, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior for the erection of houses, improvement of their allotments of land, purchase of stock, agricultural implements, seeds, and other beneficial objects, $3,917.02; in all, $44,162.47.

Mr. LYNCH. Mr. Chairman, the committee offers the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of page 36 insert the following:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to negotiate and effect, if practicable, an agreement with the Ogden Land Company, its successors or assigns, for the surrender and relinquishment to the United States of all such right, title, and interest as it may be found to have in and to any or all of the lands occupied by the Seneca Nation of Indians in the State of New York, if any right is found to exist. Any agreement made hereunder to be subject to ratification by Congress."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that this is a committee amendment.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the gentleman who offered the amendment if it provides for a commission?

Mr. LYNCH. It does not specify how the Secretary is to do it.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. I understand the proposition perfectly. I understand that it emanates primarily from the gentleman from New York [Mr. HOOKER]. I understand all that; and I understand that it has been considered by the committee; but what I wish to get before the House and before the country is, that we are continually, from year to year, treating with these Indians for their lands, not in New York State, as that is probably all passed away, but throughout the West; we are on every appropriation bill providing for commissions to treat with the Indians for a cession of a portion of their land.

These treaties come before the Committee on Indian Affairs, and before Congress, and we very seldom have ratified any of them. Now, we have quite a number of such treaties—sixteen or eighteen—before the Committee on Indian Affairs, and we are not ratifying them. Congress has taken no action, and they are awaiting year after year for the ratification of these treaties. Something ought to be done by Congress one way or the other.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FLYNN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer a substitute for the amendment I offered yesterday, with the consent of the chairman of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the agreement was that the matter should be passed over until the conclusion of the reading of the bill, and then the committee would return to the paragraph suggested.

Mr. FLYNN. My understanding is, that we could call it up at any time after giving the gentleman an opportunity to make an examination of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair now recollects that to be the case, and the Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have no objection to that being done if the committee is willing.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 25, insert after the word "ninety-one," in line 17, the following:

"Provided, That the restrictions in patents issued to the Citizen Band of Pottawatomies and absentee Shawnee Indians over 21 years of age, are hereby waived, subject to such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior with the approval of the President of the United States as to lands owned in severalty by them in Oklahoma, it being understood that they shall only dispose of lands which they hold in excess of 80 acres each; except, where said Indians are nonresidents of Oklahoma, they shall have the power to sell all of said lands."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PICKLER. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PICKLER. I believe that this clears up all the bill that has been passed over, and we have gone back to all that we have agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair so understands.

The Clerk read as follows:

MISCELLANEOUS SUPPORTS.

For support and civilization of the Apaches, Kiowas, Comanches, Wichitas, and affiliated bands who have been collected upon the reservations set apart for their use and occupation, $90,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, the committee have directed me to report the following amendment to that provision.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 37, line 5, after the word "occupation," strike out "ninety" and insert "one hundred;" so as to read "one hundred thousand dollars."

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, if I can get the attention of the committee I would like to ask where those Apaches referred to in that section are located?

Mr. HOLMAN. The Apaches are in Oklahoma.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. These are Indians in the Indian Territory.

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. They are not the Apaches further west?

Mr. HOLMAN. No, sir; these are the Apaches, Kiowas, Commanches, Wichitas, and affiliated bands, and are located in the southwestern portion of Oklahoma.

Mr. MADDOX. In and around Fort Sill, in the Indian Territory.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I offer an amendment to the amendment, making it $125,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. We have increased the appropriation to the estimate already.

The amendment offered by Mr. CANNON of Illinois was read, as follows:

Strike out "ninety" and insert "one hundred and twenty-five;" so as to read $125,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, well, now the gentleman must remember that these Indians receive $92,000 a year from the rent of their land in addition to the other provisions; and we have increased the appropriation from $90,000 to $100,000, which I think is very liberal, as I assure the gentleman.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I would still be glad to have some specific information touching this appropriation. For the current year the amount appropriated for this same service is $125,000. The amount estimated for the coming year is $125,000. The amount recommended by the bill——

Mr. HOLMAN. Is $90,000.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Is $90,000. Now, the gentleman comes in and moves to increase the amount from $90,000 to $100,000. Thus his amendment gives $25,000 less than the same service had for the current year, and $25,000 less than the Interior Department estimates in the estimates transmitted to Congress. Now, I am not prepared to say that the gentleman's amendment is wrong; but I may just as well be prepared to say that it ought to be $80,000, decreasing it $10,000, as I am that it ought to be increased to $100,000.

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say to my colleague from Illinois that this particular item was discussed very fully before the Committee on Indian Affairs, and we had the officers of the Indian Department before us. They hesitated somewhat as to whether $90,000 was sufficient, but they were satisfied with $100,000 at the time, and so expressed themselves. It is understood this is all they desired to make that particular Department efficient.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman should be aware that these particular Indians receive a very large amount from their lands, and they also receive something like $40,000 in the way of annuities.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. All I wanted was to ascertain the facts.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. That is all they wanted.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. If this service is damaged on account of insufficient appropriation for the coming fiscal year, then I want to know wherein it is to be injured, and let the results of injury rest where it ought to. If the Department which sends this estimate, the official estimate, of $125,000 has any additional information that $100,000 is sufficient, then it ought to be somewhere in black and white. But I have accomplished my object in part when my colleague from Illinois states, as he did, that after investigation $100,000 is all that the administration desires for this service. I understand that to be the fact.

Mr. LYNCH. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Certainly.

Mr. LYNCH. That is not quite the fact. They were not satisfied with $100,000. The amount appropriated for these three tribes in the past has been: In 1885 they had $390,000; in 1886, $375,000; in 1887, $325,000, and 1888, $300,000; in 1889, $275,000; in 1890, $250,000; in 1891, $240,000; in 1892, $240,000; in 1893, $190,000; in 1894, $200,000.

The Commissioner says in his letter here:

> That the reduction proposed by the bill will necessitate the reduction in next year of 1,000,000 pounds of beef and 30,000 pounds of flour.

And, in his judgment, it is likely to provoke trouble. So that he takes into consideration, I take it, in the gradual reduction year by year the amount of money received from leases——

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. The gentleman is giving information, if he will go ahead.

Mr. LYNCH. He says that at the end of the letter—

> The appropriation for the Apaches, Kiowas, and Comanches should be increased at least $25,000. Even that appropriation would be $10,000 less than for the present year.

Hence, I take it, that $115,000 this year would be satisfactory to the Department.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I will modify my amendment and make it $115,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I hope this will not be done.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I want to complete what I have to say. The Interior Department gives a note of warning that this description of appropriation from year to year for the support and civilization of the Apaches, Kiowas and Comanches, Wichita and affiliated bands, contained in this proposition, will beget trouble. Now, whether this is right or wrong, for years and years we have entered upon and followed the policy of feeding these people; and if we do not feed them, as there are no more buffalo, they go on the warpath. The gentleman recollects the outbreak in the Indian Territory, when "Dull Knife" went on the warpath and marched up to the Sioux through Kansas, leaving a track of fire and blood behind him, and that outbreak was put down at great expense. Now, so long as we pursue that policy, it seems we had better appropriate something near or substantially what the Department believes to be necessary, which is $125,000 now.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Just a word more. And I therefore propose to amend the amendment so that the amount of money be made $115,000, which is an increase of $15,000 over what the committee recommend. Therefore I shall stand by the amendment, and if trouble comes it rests upon the House rather than upon the Department. That is all I want to say.

Mr. HUNTER. I want to say to my colleague that there is one item that he has not taken into account, and that is the fact that the lands of these Indians are constantly accruing in value, and the rents are constantly augmenting, which makes up the deficit which is supposed to exist in this bill, and that is the basis on which the committee acted in a large measure.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. Is it not a fact that representatives of the Indian Bureau appeared before the committee and asked us to increase the appropriation to $110,000?

Mr. HUNTER. Yes, sir; that is true.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I hope this amendment of the gentleman from Illinois may be adopted. In the consideration of this item it was reduced to $90,000, and the Indian Office, as the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LYNCH] has well shown, have stated that this will cause a reduction of a million pounds of beef and 30,000 pounds of flour, and they go on to make the significant remark that this will likely lead to trouble.

Then they suggest how much should be appropriated, and I think that if they can get along with $115,000, which would be $10,000 less than was carried in the appropriation bill of last year, we ought to make the appropriation. This is a very important item, and I think we had better avoid trouble if possible, by making the appropriation $115,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. When the amount was fixed at $90,000 the Committee on Indian Affairs supposed that the rents received by the Indians for their lands amounted to about $82,000, and I presume that was the information of the Indian Office also at that time. Later we learned that those rents amounted to $92,000 and were steadily increasing.

That is one of the most fertile portions of Oklahoma, a region where advancement and progress are naturally to be expected, and the committee thought that in increasing the amount from ninety thousand to a hundred thousand dollars, which would give those Indians $192,000, they were acting with great liberality. I notice that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] passes by all the items where there is an increase. Where we made an increased appropriation for school buildings further back in the bill not a word was said, and when we come to the Arapahoes and Cheyennes further on, where there is an increase, nothing will be said, I presume, unless I call the gentleman's attention to the fact. But wherever there is a modest reduction made the gentleman from Illinois is always on hand. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. If the gentleman will allow me, I will say, in his time, that when an increase is recommended by a committee of which my friend from Indiana is chairman, that is so out of the usual course of proceeding that it seems to me it does not have to be challenged. [Laughter.]

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, it strikes me that this increase ought not to be made, for the simple reason that these Indians occupy a very fertile portion of the country, and have occupied it for many years, and the policy of the Government should be directed toward forcing, as fast as it can humanely, the Indian to care for himself. For this reason I think we ought to be very cautious in increasing appropriations for the support of the Indians. A white man will not work if you give him all he wants, and the Indian certainly will not work unless you get him very hungry.

I believe it is best for the Indians that these decreases should be made every year. I believe that that is an educating policy for the Indian, and it certainly will not be productive of more suffering to him than every people in the world who have worked up through to a higher civilization.

Mr. BLAIR. In view of the gentleman's great knowledge of this whole subject, I would like to ask his opinion as to the propriety of legislation looking to the early extinguishment of the Indian Bureau, and whether he has in mind any method which would tend gradually, yet promptly, to that end.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I would like very much, Mr. Chairman, to answer the gentleman's question, but it opens up so wide a field that it would not be possible to deal with it under the five-minute rule. Briefly, however, I will say that my idea is to make the Indian a citizen of the United States and a proper citizen, as early as possible. The more you keep doing for the Indian under the mistaken idea that you are going to Christianize him in fifteen or twenty minutes the less will be his progress.

He must be taught to labor, as we all have to do, or have had to do at some portion of our lives, and until you get out of the Indian the idea that he is better than anybody else on earth, and that work is made for women and white men to do, and not for an Indian chief, you can do nothing with him. When you get that idea out of his head then you will get him started on the right road, but not before.

Mr. BLAIR. Does the gentleman think there is any real difficulty in closing out this whole business within the next five years?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I do not think you could possibly do that with some of the tribes. You could do it easily, though, with many of the tribes.

Mr. BLAIR. With tribes in Arizona?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. There are a few Indians there that the Indian Office pays little attention to now, those that we call the Pueblo Indians, who have been following some kind of farming for the last three hundred years.

Mr. BLAIR. I will ask the gentleman whether, in his opinion, the interest of the white race in the Indian Bureau is not greater than that of the Indian—whether it is not of greater pecuniary benefit to the white man than it is to the Indian?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Oh, I think not. I do not think the white man gets any particular good out of it. I have never seen it do him any good, except, perhaps, where contracts are made to bring all the provender for the Indians from the East. That may help the constituents of some Eastern gentleman here, but it does not help the Western people at all.

Mr. BLAIR. Well, if it does not do the Western people any good would it not be well to look to its early abolishment and let the Indians take care of themselves?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Yes, as soon as that can be done; but we can not do it right now.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. I will ask the gentleman whether he does not think a start should be made by diminishing the reservations. There are now about 120,000 reservation Indians, and they occupy about 5,000,000 acres of land.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Yes, they hold five times as much land as they ought to occupy. They are roaming over great areas of land now, and that tends to keep them in a wild state, because it keeps them removed from all sorts of civilizing and educating influences. As long as the Indian is allowed to occupy reservations, some of which are as large as an Eastern State, he will remain a wild Indian.

Mr. FLYNN. Mr. Chairman, this appropriation refers to Indians who occupy lands in the Territory of Oklahoma. Bills have been pending for two or three years past providing for the ceding of the surplus lands of those Indians to the Government. If the statements made by the gentlemen who appeared before the Indian Committee protesting against the ratification of those treaties are true, that the treaties were negotiated by commissioners on the part of the United States by force, and almost at the point of the bayonet, through the aid of the military, then I think those Indians should be given all the relief that it is possible for the Government to give them. Residing among them as we do, I say that they are not peaceful Indians unless they are sufficiently fed.

Give them enough to eat on their reservations and they are disposed to stay there, but cut down the appropriations for their food and you will find Mr. Indian beginning to roam, and the moment he does that you will begin to hear complaints from the white settlers. I believe this bill should be so amended as to give the Indian every dollar that is necessary to furnish him ample rations. If the philanthropists in the East desire to aid the Indians, here is an opportunity for them to do so. You will do the Indian more good by feeding him than by appointing commissions to look after him. Feed him well and he will remain quiet and cause no trouble to anybody.

Mr. BLAIR. What sort of an idea would it be to cut up the reservations, leaving the Indian to occupy his section of land and the white man his section adjoining, so that the reservation would be occupied by both whites and Indians, and the Indian would be taught civilization by example?

Mr. FLYNN. The question of allotment of land to these blanket Indians is a problem that I do not see the solution of. For my own part, I believe the idea of allotting blanket Indians on quarter sections or a section of prairie land is wrong. Even though the Indian is supplied with farming implements he can not obtain a living in that way, for the simple reason that the white man who takes up the same land is often unable to get a living off it.

I really do not know what is the proper solution of this problem. I realize the fact that we are constantly crowding the Indian more and more off his reservations because we want more land for white settlement. But you can never crowd the Indian onto 160 acres, or even 1,000 acres, of prairie land in a country where it does not rain, and expect him to make a living off it, for the white man can not do that in many cases.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph be closed in ten minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. HARTMAN. Mr. Chairman, I had not intended to ask the attention of the committee upon this question until later on in the consideration of this bill, but a question has been raised by the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR] which I desire to say a few words upon to this House—that is, a question as to what is an advisable Indian policy for this Government. It seems to me, sir, that the Indian policy of this Government is radically wrong in this regard. We have proceeded here for years appropriating moneys for the purpose of supporting great big buck Indians, any one of whom could take four average members of this House and throw them over his shoulder. [Laughter.]

We have given these men blankets, we have given them guns, we have given them ammunition, we have given them flour, bacon, tobacco, sugar, coffee, and at the same time we have been saying to the poor widows of our own country, American women: "You must take in washing to support your families, or else go to the poorhouse." Gentlemen, I say it is an infamous policy, a shame and a disgrace to the American Government. Why, sir, as I have said, we have given these big buck Indians, many of them physically equal to four white men, this subsistence year after year, and what has been the result? The result has been that fully 90 per cent of them are loafers to-day. Not a single one of them desires to do any manual labor. They do not want to work, and as long as the Government of the United States is foolish enough to appropriate for those big bullies, so long will they remain wards, sponges, and leeches upon the United States Government.

Now, what is the solution? Mr. Chairman, let us proceed by treaty to extinguish every right, if they have any, in the lands of the Indian reservations; let us purchase the lands and allot to them 160 acres each, and give them from five to ten years—not more than ten years—in which to improve those lands, and in which to give the Indians final title, and then say to those fellows, "You rustle and earn your own living or starve."

I do not believe, Mr. Chairman, that it is the duty of the American Government, which is the voluntary guardian of these Indians, to say to them, "We think more of you than we do of the citizens of our own Government."

But that is what we are doing to-day. You turn out some widow in this country, with five or six children to support, and compel her to do it by taking in washing. You say to these great, strong, buck Indians, physically superior to almost any white man, "We will feed and clothe you from now till the end of time."

Now, Mr. Chairman, what has been the inducement for the continuation of this policy? The inducement has been found in the philanthropic organizations of the East. I do not impugn their intentions, which are good; but, sir, the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] hit the nail on the head the other day when he suggested that nothing was quite so dangerous as ignorant well-intentioned people. And that is the trouble with this proposition.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. COFFEEN. Mr. Chairman, we can not, in the limited time allowed, enter into a full consideration of this Indian question; but just at this point, in the line of the few remarks that have been made by Western Representatives, who know something of what they are talking about, I wish to say that I indorse many of the ideas which these gentlemen have put forward, and I also wish to take up, for a moment's consideration, the question presented, whether the best method of civilizing these Indians may not be by interspersing white settlers among them, so that the white settlers may be an example to them of proper farming and proper methods of earning a living. The Indians must live as white men must, by eating and by being clothed and sheltered.

Mr. PICKLER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. COFFEEN. I fear my time is limited, but I will attempt to answer the gentleman's question.

Mr. PICKLER. How would it be possible to do as the gentleman suggests, when the allotment laws always give the Indian the choice of the lands, and he goes and takes the best lands.

Mr. COFFEEN. It would take thirty minutes instead of five to consider this question, and so I must leave some things unsaid. But living out on the borders of these reservations, as the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] and the gentleman from Montana [Mr. HARTMAN], and the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FLYNN], and these other Western men do, we have learned some things that other members on this floor ought to learn from the Western Representatives, and which we would be glad to tell you if time permitted it.

There is much more land given to the Indians in reservations than is proper. They have too much. I join in the sentiment that we must, by treaty, by purchase, and relinquishment, or by some other methods, cut down this vast territory in reservations that often blocks the settlement of great tracts of Western country. That is one of the things that must be done.

In the next place, you must realize that men who are trained in military occupations can not properly introduce the spirit of civilization among the Indians. We must civilize them through civilizing influences, through men and officers from civil life, and not through the military arm of the Government. Most of the Western Representatives on this floor will indorse that statement also.

Then I want to say again that Indians, like white people, learn more by example than by precept. Therefore I shall favor, as soon as the time shall be found opportune—and with me it is opportune now—the interspersing of white settlements all through these Indian reservations, right alongside of the Indians; not to deprive them of any rights which they have, and not in any manner to endanger the rights of the Indians in their allotments. I would increase their allotments to double or triple the amount which they are now allowed in that arid region, and I would still secure their lands to them by inalienable rights for a term of years, so that their lands can not be taken from them by white speculators before they learn the use and value of farming lands.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. COFFEEN. Yes, with pleasure.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. How would you provide for watering these arid lands which belong to the Indians?

Mr. COFFEEN. I will take that up as the next thought, if time permits. I would provide for the watering of these lands, for the interspersing of white settlers, just as we provide for the watering of the lands of the Indians. And you who are not familiar with these arid lands may begin to realize now, if never before, that neither white men nor Indians can make a living on these lands without irrigation.

The construction of irrigation canals is a question too broad and too expensive for private and local and small ownerships to consider. It is therefore a State or national question, and this Congress will do a wise and proper thing if it allows two or three days for the discussion of the irrigation question in the immediate future; and when that time is allowed this question can come up, and it will be shown that irrigation works should be constructed by State or National Government.

I would provide for the irrigation of the lands under national or governmental control for the white settlers, whom I would intersperse among the Indians, just as the Government now does for the Indians on some of the reservations, building these canals under proper surveys and utilizing the water to fertilize and reclaim these lands. Then, instead of a large allotment being necessary, 40 acres, when well irrigated, will furnish a better living for an Indian, or a white man either, than 500 acres can now.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time allowed for debate on this amendment is exhausted.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. I ask unanimous consent that we may continue this debate for ten minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. WILSON] asks unanimous consent that the debate may be continued for ten minutes.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I hope that much time will not be taken, unless it is absolutely necessary.

Mr. BLAIR. I wish to speak for three or four minutes.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the time will be extended not to exceed five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. WILSON] wishes five minutes.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will not object to the request.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request that the debate on this amendment be allowed to continue for ten minutes longer?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR].

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. Chairman, I simply rise to resent the idea that there is any undue or improper stimulus, in the nature of philanthropic efforts, among the people of the East. We had the Indian question once and we applied the necessary rules and regulations to settle it.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. You did, indeed.

Mr. BLAIR. And I do not think the gentleman should make the suggestion that there is any inclination on the part of Eastern people to deal with this question upon any other than practical business principles, influenced as they ought to be by moral considerations.

Mr. PENDLETON of West Virginia. Will the gentleman allow an interruption?

Mr. BLAIR. My time is limited. Here are 250,000 people, most of them savages, or on an ascending scale toward civilization, occupying an amount of territory which would well yield support to at least ten millions of civilized people. I do not consider that a savage race, or a civilized race for that matter, has that absolute and indefeasible title to any particular location of land, if the land is so misappropriated as to do essential mischief to the balance of human kind.

You may recollect that Gladstone, in his proposed legislation with reference to the Irish question, laid down the principle that a nation has the right to so control the soil upon which it lives as to promote the general good, and if it be necessary to extinguish individual or private rights by general contribution, that method of procedure should be resorted to, it being a leading fundamental principle that in the end justice shall be done to the whole, and to the several individuals who compose the community.

Now, this Indian question must inevitably very soon be resolved upon different principles than those under which it is now being conducted. These 250,000 people must be brought under civilized conditions. We can not have among us this uncivilized, savage, barbarous element. Abraham Lincoln well said that this country could not continue permanently half free and half slave, and it is equally true that it can not continue half civilized and half savage. The Indian must become civilized, or he must become extinct, or else his reflex influence upon our civilization will be such as to do infinite mischief unto it.

Now, I am ready at any time to apply those general principles which our Western people so often advocate upon the floor of Congress. I believe the Indian Bureau should itself be wiped out gradually, but very soon, and upon principles which will lead to the merging of the Indian into our civilization or to the extinction of the Indian and his savagery altogether.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WILSON of Washington. One or two observations have been made by various gentlemen from the West in relation to the solution of what has been said upon the Indian problem.

Mr. Chairman, I will draw one or two illustrations.

Of course, if we are never to commence with a reduction of the reservations and of the appropriations, the Indian problem will not be settled in fifty or one hundred years, and if we continue on in the same manner and same way we are now going it will cost the Government of the United States not less than $200,000,000.

There are places, Mr. Chairman, and there are Indian reservations, that if Congress would do its duty could be closed up and disposed of forever. If we would ratify the agreements or remove the restrictions contained in the patent of the Puyallup Indians, they would have sufficient money to support and educate them for all time. If they permit the Indian agent to dispose of the land above 165 acres, you would have sufficient money to support these Indians for all time. If you would take the Yakima Reservation, and permit a company to run irrigation ditches through there and make that land valuable, and permit the Indians to sell that land and take whatever it is worth, you will have enough money to support the Yakima Indians for all time, and we could dispose of that reservation.

Now, the gentleman speaks about placing a white man on 160 acres and an Indian on another 160 acres. That is an iridescent dream; it is impossible. In my State I remember, away back, that an Indian named Quinamozee came to me and made final proof upon his land. He was then 75 years of age. He had taken up an Indian homestead. White settlers surrounded him and he wanted to go over to the Cœur d'Alene Indian Reservation in order to educate his children; and I went before the Secretary of the Interior and asked for his favorable recommendation for removal of the restrictions; and he recommended that it be not allowed. That Indian could have gotten $3,000, 4,000, or $5,000 for his land. He was old, and wanted to educate his children; but he was not permitted to do so.

The great fault in all this business is that we are educating the Indians off the reservations. The Government of the United States ought to continue its appropriation for the education of children upon the reservations. Teach them to be clean, to be thrifty, to labor, to have one wife, then give them a primary education and tell them they must take care of themselves the same as anybody else. But if we go on giving to the 250,000 Indians that are in the United States to-day, who own, outside of any treaties that have been made with them, 90,000,000 acres of land to roam over, it is an iridescent dream to talk about civilizing them or to teach them anything.

Now, you may send some to Carlisle or to Hampton, and there, perhaps, they will be taught to be harness-makers or tinners, or any other kind of industrial trade. Then, when they go back to the reservation, what use have they for a tinner or for a saddler? In a little while the coat disappears and the blanket is worn; in a little further time the trousers disappear and then the leggings are worn; and in a little while the moccasin, and then the young Indian is back to idleness and filth, and nothing has been accomplished by this education you have given them away from the reservation.

Let us give the Indian a primary education; teach him to plow, to sow, and to reap, and then let us tell him, "You must take care of yourself." Do not give him a large body of land. The Indian is not capable of cultivating over 80 acres of land. Now, there are over 320 acres in the United States for each Indian, one-hundredth part of which receives no cultivation. The Indians on the Cœur d'Alene Reservation are taught to work. I went there a few years ago with an inspector, and we wanted to go to take a steamboat, and we asked old Chief Saltee to let a man go with us, and he told us they were all at work and none of them could go.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question will be taken on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois to make the appropriation $115,000.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 41, noes 50.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered in behalf of the committee, increasing the appropriation from $90,000 to $100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For support and civilization of the Arapahoes and Cheyennes who have been collected on the reservations set apart for their use and occupation, $90,000.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I move to reduce this amount to $75,000, by striking out $90,000 and inserting $75,000.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out "ninety" and insert "seventy-five;" so as to read: "For support and civilization of the Arapahoes and Cheyennes who have been collected on the reservations set apart for their use and occupation, $75,000."

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I do it for this purpose, and I do not know that I want the amendment adopted. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOLMAN. I know you do not.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. But I do it for the purpose of finding out whether I do or not. For the current year the amount appropriated for this purpose was $75,000. The estimate for the fiscal year, made by the Interior Department, is $75,000. Now, for some reason or other, without any estimate, so far as I know, the Committee on Indian Affairs recommends an increase of $15,000. Now, I would be very glad to know why, because there must be a good reason for cutting down that item we have just passed and increasing this item; and I would like to know what it is.

Mr. HOLMAN. If the gentleman will allow me, I do not think my friend would have called attention to that increase if I had not mentioned a moment ago the fact that I did. Wherever an increase is made the gentleman seems to think it is good, and where a decrease is made that it is not good.

Where we improve certain buildings the gentleman overlooks the increase. The difference is this: A Committee on Indian Affairs that does not understand something about the Indian interest would clearly be incompetent to report a measure to the House. That is all there is about it.

Now, the committee in the consideration of these items have taken into account that there has been an enormous shrinkage in values in this country, a shrinkage in the price of employment and the value of all the products, of clothing and of food, and we therefore thought that there could be a fair reduction made in the appropriations carried in this bill. But as to these Arapahoes, the case is this: The Apaches, the Kiowas, the Commanches, and the Wichitas who occupy the southwestern portion of Oklahoma still hold all their lands. They lease them out, and they receive $92,000 on the leases for the present current year, which is an important item to be considered.

The Araphoes and the Cheyennes, on the other hand, have taken their lands in severalty, and no benefit can accrue to them by any lease of their lands now. After a careful examination of the subject, we are of the opinion that the estimates were hardly sufficient, and accordingly recommended an increase from $75,000 to $90,000. Nobody is more helpless than an Indian who is compelled to take his land in severalty, unless he has reached that point of progress and of civilization that enables him to understand something of the value of separate property.

Now, these Arapahoes have taken their lands in advance of the time when they should have taken them. They have not taken them themselves, but the allotments have been made. The same is true of the Cheyennes. It is only nine years since my friend was around among these Indians, and he knows what their condition was then and can well understand their condition now. While they continued as a tribe they were supported; but as soon as their allotments are made, they are thrown on their own responsibility; and the committee reached the conclusion, after a careful consideration, that the item should be increased.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I should like to make an observation just along that line, if I may withdraw the amendment and renew it, for the purpose of securing recognition for five minutes, and I think I shall not take that time. Does the Interior Department recommend this?

Mr. HOLMAN. Well, not directly. My friend, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LYNCH], insists that the Indian Bureau recommends it, but the gentleman will understand very well that a committee acts after careful consideration, and they have concluded, as an act of justice to the Indians, who are compelled to take their lands, that it should be done. I am not acting in this matter upon the recommendation of any executive department, because if the Committee on Indian Affairs brings into this House a bill which they recommend to be passed without knowing something about it, the committee ought to be dismissed.

Mr. FLYNN: I desire to say to the gentleman from Illinois that these Indians are located in my Territory, and last year it was necessary to issue them additional rations. I think the Committee on Indian Affairs not only should be supported in this, but that they are entitled to the thanks of the people who live in that section.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. As I understand, these Indians live in Oklahoma; and they have had their allotments?

Mr. FLYNN. Yes, sir.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. They are citizens?

Mr. FLYNN. Yes, sir.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Do they vote?

Mr. FLYNN. Well, we tried to vote them.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Well, they have just as much right of citizenship and the right to vote belonging to citizenship as fully as any other citizen of the United States.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does my friend know how long they have had their lands in severalty?

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. A very short time.

Mr. HOLMAN. Inside of two years. You have destroyed their tribal relationship, and given them their lands in severalty, and you must bolster them up in it. You can not do an act of injustice to them for the benefit of the white race. We have compelled these Indians to take their lands in severalty before they were in condition to take them, not for their benefit, but for the benefit of our race.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Let me say here, along the line of the allotment of land to Indians, when the law for the allotment is made, after the Indian, by allotment and acceptance, becomes a citizen of the United States, he is clothed with citizenship and with all the rights, responsibilities, and duties of citizenship. It may be that it was a mistake; but I want to say now, and I will withdraw this amendment in order that the gentleman may tell me the result, that if we are to enter upon and continue a policy of appropriating from the national Treasury for the support of citizens of the United States, we begin a trick that will last indefinitely.

Mr. HOLMAN. We ought to have thought of that long ago.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. And while I have been willing and somewhat slow to act, giving place to others who wished the allotment to be made to the Indians and to have citizenship conferred upon them, knowing and believing that at least with that citizenship and its responsibility we would clothe them with the weapons of defense whereby they might defend themselves, I believe that policy should be pursued that would enable the counties and States in which they live to deal with them as they deal with the balance of their own citizens. If they be poor, give them such relief as they are entitled to.

If they be educated, let them be educated along in the same schools with the white brother and white citizen that lives side by side with the Indians; and when this is done you will begin to plant them on the true basis of civilization, namely, first, on that manhood that relies and enables and compels them to rely upon their efforts for support; second, that change in the minds of the children that comes from association with white children and other citizens and education in the same schools. If it can not be worked out this way, it can not be worked out at all except with the destruction of the Indian, and that, too, inside of a generation.

So that I view with alarm a class of appropriations giving gratuities out of the national Treasury to a whole block of citizens of the United States in some State or some Territory.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois to reduce the appropriation from ninety thousand to seventy-five thousand dollars.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For support and civilization of the Chippewas of Lake Superior, Wisconsin, to be expended for agricultural and educational purposes, pay of employés, including pay of physician, purchase of goods and provisions, and for such other purposes as may be deemed to the best interest of the Indians, $6,125.

Mr. LINTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend that paragraph by striking out, in line 14, "six thousand one hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars."

Mr. HOLMAN. Does the gentleman propose to strike out the entire appropriation?

The CHAIRMAN. That is the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to amend the paragraph by striking out "six" and inserting "seven," so as to increase the appropriation $1,000.

Mr. LINTON. Mr. Chairman, following the remarks of my colleague [Mr. WEADOCK] on Friday last there appeared in the Post of this city, and I presume in the press dispatches throughout the country, quotations in substance as follows: That the speech which I delivered here on Thursday last had been prepared for me, that the delivery of it was dictated by a certain organization, that I am the mouthpiece on this floor of a secret society, and that I purposely withheld my remarks from the RECORD of the following day. I wish to say, sir, that each and every one of these statements, in whole and in part, is an absolute falsehood and an untruth.

The gentleman stated also in effect that had I used ordinary diligence I would have found on page 626 of the report of the Secretary of the Interior the information that I had asked for and which I appeared to have had some difficulty in obtaining from the Indian Bureau. That statement also is false, as the information for which I asked is not contained in the report as cited. The gentleman saw fit also to go into the oath-publishing business. I have received a telegram from the supreme secretary of the American Protective Association, saying that he has prepared an affidavit and forwarded it, declaring that the oath as read here is not any portion of the oath of that association.

I believe the gentleman's statement, and think he is entitled to credence from the majority on the other side of the House, as Mr. Beatty claims allegiance to the Democratic party, and in fact was a good enough Democrat during the last campaign to be one of the vice-presidents of a political meeting in my city which was addressed either by Speaker CRISP or Vice-President STEVENSON, I do not now remember which.

As to all that was stated here by my colleague, I shall take a more favorable opportunity to reply in detail. I made a special effort, sir, to have my remarks inserted in the RECORD on the day following their delivery, and I was promised that they would be so printed, but a gentleman from the Government Printing Office came to my house in the evening and stated that owing to the tables contained therein it would be simply impossible to perform the work in time to have the speech appear next day, and therefore, through no fault of mine, it was omitted from that day's RECORD.

I was aware at the time, Mr. Chairman, that sectarian appropriations and privileges were delicate subjects to speak upon. I knew that I might be the subject of ridicule, and undoubtedly would be the subject of vituperation and abuse, as I have been; but I care nothing for those things. I believe and know that I am in the right, and such attacks are not considered argument by the American people, but simply show the desperate straits of the opposition. We will see, sir, at the close of this controversy in connection with the Indian appropriation bill whether certain church influences are stronger than the platforms of parties, greater than the laws of our country, and superior to the Constitution of the United States. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. WEADOCK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I am resolved, sir, that so far as I am concerned the question to which I addressed myself the other day shall in no event descend to be a personal controversy. I said that the gentleman [Mr. LINTON] spoke as the mouthpiece of a certain organization, because the language which he used was their language, and the sentiments he expressed were their sentiments. It was a matter of legitimate argument. I am not in the councils of the A. P. A., and I do not know whether or not he is their chosen mouthpiece; but I do know, as a matter of fact, that he expressed upon the floor of this House simply what they could not express here, and that this speech was addressed to them and to their sympathizers rather than to the judgment of the House. The report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs speaks for itself and contradicts the gentleman.

So far as regards his speech not appearing in the RECORD the day after it was delivered, I stated that matter exactly as it was. Before my remarks were printed I gave the gentleman the benefit of the correction which he makes here to-day, and stated (on page 5999 of the RECORD) that it was not his fault that his speech did not appear the morning after it was delivered.

It will be observed that as to the other matters referred to in my remarks the gentleman makes no explanation, and any member of the House who desires to examine the manuscript of the gentleman's speech in the hands of the Official Reporters will find in it a complete verification of all that I said about that matter. I desire now to ask the gentleman whether he is a member of the A. P. A., or the American Protective Association, and I will allow him to reply?

Mr. LINTON. I do not propose to be catechised at this time. [Laughter.]

Mr. WEADOCK. Mr. Chairman, that statement, in connection with what we have already heard from the gentleman, is, I submit, ample authority of all that I have said upon this floor, none of which I retract, and all of which I am satisfied with the proof of. I shall not enter into any bandying of words or charges. So far as the gentleman's proposition is concerned, and so far as regards the question whether or not it was offered to please the members of certain organizations, I want to call his attention and the attention of the House and of the country to a publication in the Detroit Tribune of the 9th day of June, 1894. That is the leading Republican paper in the State of Michigan, and it is the gentleman's faithful supporter. In it I find this:

LINTON IS PRAISED—PATRIOTIC SONS OF AMERICA PROFUSELY THANKED MR. LINTON FOR THE EFFORT, AND INFORMS HIM THAT THE ORDER STANDS SQUARELY WITH HIM.

[Special telegram.]

WASHINGTON, June 8.

F. E. Steel, national secretary of the Patriotic Order Sons of America, of Philadelphia, sent the following message to Representative LINTON to-day: "Accept hearty congratulations from the Patriotic Order Sons of America for your noble defense of our American public-school system and vigorous protest against union of church and state and appropriations of public moneys for sectarian purposes. Our order, numbering many thousands, stands squarely with you.

No indorsement from the American people; no indorsement from the enlightened citizens of Michigan whom he misrepresents upon this floor; no indorsement from the enlightened public sentiment of this country; but a resolution from a secret oath-bound organization, that they indorse all his sentiments and stand squarely with him. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn. The question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] on behalf of the committee, to strike out "six" and insert "seven."

The amendment was adopted.

The Clerk read as follows, and also the succeeding paragraph:

For support and civilization of the Apache and other Indians in Arizona and New Mexico who have been or may be collected on reservations in New Mexico and Arizona, $185,000: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, under such rules and regulations as he may deem proper and necessary to protect the interests of the Indians and of the United States, to sell or otherwise dispose of a quantity of timber from time to time on the Jicarilla Apache Indian Reservation, the proceeds to be used by him in the purchase of such stock or other articles for the benefit of the Indians belonging thereto as will best tend to promote their welfare and advance them in civilization.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois (during the reading). Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk has not concluded the reading of the paragraph.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I desire to offer an amendment to the paragraph just preceding. On page 38, line 21, I move to strike out "one hundred and eighty-five" and insert "two hundred," so as to make the amount $200,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is a little late to go back to that paragraph.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Why?

Mr. HOLMAN. More than half of the succeeding paragraph was read by the Clerk.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. All of the succeeding paragraph was read by the Clerk.

Mr. HOLMAN. But I mean that more than half of it had been read before my friend from Illinois rose.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Oh, no; I beg the gentleman's pardon.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not hear the gentleman from Illinois until the Clerk had entered upon the next paragraph.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I know. The Clerk has a good strong voice, and I was unable to make myself heard.

The CHAIRMAN. The trouble is that the gentleman from Illinois is in the habit of offering his amendments and making his remarks without addressing the Chair.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Well, I did not do it this time. [Laughter.] I said "Mr. Chairman" at least a half dozen times, so that my amendment is in.

Mr. MADDOX. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman, that the amendment comes too late.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am willing that the gentleman from Illinois shall proceed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] appeals from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. And I want to be heard on that appeal. As soon as the Clerk's voice left "civilization," in line 5 [laughter], page 39, which was the close of the paragraph, I was upon my feet, and addressed the Chair, saying "Mr. Chairman" at least a half-dozen times, and I continued to address the Chair until the Clerk had read from line 6 to line 9, inclusive. Then when he caught his breath the Chair heard me. I do not think the Chair heard me before, but I was trying to make myself heard.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was looking at the gentleman from Illinois, who had been on his feet while the whole of page 38 was being read, and the Chair was listening to hear the gentleman, but was unable to hear him until the Clerk had reached the middle of the paragraph on page 39. The moment the Chair heard the gentleman from Illinois he rapped the Clerk to order and recognized the gentleman.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. On the contrary, Mr. Chairman, if there is to be any question about the fact——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman must not put it in that way. The Chair merely states that he did not hear the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I do not believe that the Chair did hear me; but that does not alter my right as a member, if I was in time in offering this amendment, or was in time in seeking recognition from the Chair. I was on my feet.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will yield five minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I will take nothing by grace in this matter. I am standing on my rights.

Mr. MADDOX. If the gentleman takes nothing by grace, then I insist on the point of order.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Then we will fight it out, if it takes all day.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. I wish to say that I was sitting here and I saw the gentleman arise, and heard him address the Chair at the proper time. He not only addressed the Chair once, but upon three different occasions. I do not believe, of course, that the Chair heard him. The gentleman who was reading the bill has a most magnificent voice, and he was reading in a very loud tone. It is well known that the Reading Clerk is a most magnificent reader, and that he has a very valuable voice, and the Chair did not hear the gentleman from Illinois. Nevertheless I distinctly heard him address the Chair upon three different occasions.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Now, Mr. Chairman, a word and I have done. It is not a question that is personal to me so much as it is a question of the rights of the committee. This is the Committee of the Whole House, presided over by a member of the House, the Chairman of the committee, the Clerk being an employé or servant of the House. Under the rule, when the reading of a paragraph is concluded, it is then in order for any member of the committee to address the Chairman and to be recognized.

In compliance with my right as a member of the committee, and in conformity to the rule, I state, measuring my words, that I addressed the Chair in apt time. I failed to be recognized, and I addressed the Chair many times while the Clerk was reading.

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Hold on a minute. I addressed the Chair many times while the Clerk was reading the first three lines in the next paragraph.

Mr. MADDOX. If the gentleman will yield just for a minute——

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I will not yield for a minute. It frequently happens, in the confusion in the committee, that the Chairman fails to hear a member who addresses him, and if a member had to make himself heard his right would be lost. I have yet to recall any instance during my service in this House where a member arose in his place and said he addressed the Chair in apt time, where his word was not taken, and he recognized. That is all I have to say.

The CHAIRMAN. In view of the statement made by the gentleman from Illinois——

Mr. MADDOX. Now, Mr. Chairman, just a word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. MADDOX. My colleagues on the committee are of the opinion that the gentleman rose in time. That being true, I withdraw the point of order. I wanted to do that some time ago, but the gentleman would not allow me.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that of course when a member says he arose and addressed the Chair in time, his word must be taken, and the Chair has not any doubt when the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] says it is true, that it is true. The Chair will now recognize the gentleman from Illinois to offer his amendment, which is to strike out 185 and insert 200.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Now, Mr. Chairman, I move to increase this sum recommended by the committee by $15,000, to make it the same sum that was appropriated for this service for the current year, and I should be glad to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill why it is that the committee recommend the reduction of this $15,000?

Mr. HOLMAN. The committee will be very glad to furnish that information. Before doing so I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from Illinois to the fact that these two Territories are very ably represented on this floor, and, of course, both of those Delegates are as familiar as the gentleman from Illinois or myself with the interests of those Indians; and one of those Delegates, the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. SMITH], is a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. JOSEPH] is well aware of this provision, and has been before the committee. Now, I submit in all kindness and fairness to the gentleman from Illinois that there are some other persons as well acquainted with these matters as he or myself, and the views of gentlemen representing Territories or States where there are Indians are certainly to be first consulted. They are best informed. But if the gentleman will permit me, I will say that in the northern portion of New Mexico, within the limits of the Indians who occupy that region, and who are provided for by this paragraph, there are extensive forests of pine timber, through which a railroad runs, and in the proviso to this paragraph the gentleman will find the following:

Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, under such rules and regulations as he may deem proper and necessary to protect the interests of the Indians and of the United States, to sell or otherwise dispose of a quantity of timber from time to time on the Jicarilla Apache Indian Reservation, the proceeds to be used by him in the purchase of such stock or other articles for the benefit of the Indians belonging thereto as will best tend to promote their welfare and advance them in civilization.

Now, in the judgment of the committee the benefits of that provision greatly exceed the difference between the $185,000 appropriated for next year and the $200,000 appropriated for the current year.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the amendment, and renew it for the purpose of having five minutes upon it, if I need it.

Mr. HOLMAN. Well, Mr. Chairman, perhaps it will save time to let the gentleman go on, but I do not believe it is according to the rule of the House or the committee.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I guess it is in order.

Mr. HOLMAN. Go ahead.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I yielded to the gentleman a part of my time for the purpose of trying to get some information. The gentleman took most of my time in delivering a lecture to me. What is his lecture? Because I, as a member of this committee, asked him in a courteous way why it is that he decreases this appropriation $15,000 for next year, the gentleman proceeds to inform me that Arizona and New Mexico are represented by two very able Delegates. I confess it. And still I was entitled to that information, because my constituents and the constituents of every other gentleman on this floor help to pay these appropriations, and this is a part and parcel of the public service.

Mr. HOLMAN. But the gentleman wants to increase the amount.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. One would have thought, to hear the gentleman make his rebuke, that this Indian service was run, in the light of the gentleman's discretion and wisdom, for the benefit of the honorable gentlemen who represent Arizona and New Mexico.

Having said this much with reference to the gentleman's lecture, I want to say that I have not received, in my judgment, a satisfactory answer to my question. What is this appropriation? Is it to take care of Indians who have received their allotments in severalty? No. Take the Apaches in the Territory of the honorable gentleman from Arizona [Mr. SMITH].

Everybody understands the kind of Indians who are there, and everybody knows that they have cost this Government a great deal to feed and to fight. They are not very popular out in Arizona. They are on a reservation, and this appropriation for their support is reduced in spite of the fact that everybody knows what difficulty we have had to keep them at peace, and to subjugate them from time to time. And while I apprehend I have as much respect for the honorable gentleman from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] as the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] has—and that is great respect—and while I have equal respect for the gentleman's ability, yet with all due deference to the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. SMITH], if I was going to hunt out the best guardian on the face of the earth for these Apaches who have given us so much trouble, and who reside in the gentleman's Territory, I should not choose the honorable gentleman from Arizona [Mr. SMITH]. [Laughter.]

Now, I suppose this cut will be made. I supposed that there was some good reason for it. I supposed that the Indian Bureau had suggested that it be made, or that somebody had recommended it, and that the gentleman had investigated it. I have failed to hear any such statement. I will not say that the main reason is that their lands have not yet been allotted to them, and that they can not vote, and therefore that their appropriations may be cut. That criticism might be made by a malicious man, as long as the appropriation was increased for the Indians over in Oklahoma, whose lands have been allotted and who can vote. But I do not think that is the case. Some badly disposed, malicious person might make that criticism, and therefore, out of tender regard for the eminent gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], I modestly asked for the reason. I asked for bread and I have received a stone. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOLMAN. Now, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman asks for more than the Apaches do. [Laughter.] They ask for no bread, and for no relief. On the contrary, a portion of them voluntarily abandoned the relief and went to the White Mountains, and nine years ago the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] was informed by Gen. Crook that those Indians had prospered from the moment they left San Carlos and went up into the White Mountains. The gentleman is forgetful about some things.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. But those Indians broke out from the White Mountains, and terror and death followed in their footsteps as they went into Arizona and crossed over into New Mexico. You got them there. You are dealing with them, and I am perfectly willing to decrease the appropriation for their support if that is the proper thing to do, but I simply wanted to know about it.

Mr. BOWERS of California. All that trouble proved that we did not have inspectors enough!

Mr. HOLMAN. All that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] knows upon this subject is what he has learned by observation, for I can see he has not been studying up the Indian literature lately. The experience of the gentleman from Illinois is this: Some years ago he went to a little village called Willcox, on the Southern Pacific road. He had some friends with him. That place was about 140 miles from the Apaches. He was told by a friend of his that it was worth his life to go 15 miles from that village, because the Apaches were out on the war path, and his life would be imperiled, and the country would be in danger of losing a valuable public servant. While that touched him for a moment, yet he straightened up very bravely and continued his journey. He went northward to the Gila River, which he reached at the end of the next day. And what warlike object do you think he encountered in that whole trip down the Gila to San Carlos, the Apache Agency?

He encountered just five wagons, full of barley, driven by Indians. They were a stalwart body of Indians, and they told us that they were hauling this barley, that they had raised on the Gila and San Carlos, up to Camp Thomas, where they were to sell it. That is the whole of the warlike exhibition he saw in the whole of that trip [laughter]; and yet if he had been a timid man he would not have left Willcox, for he was informed that there might be trouble. I will bring him some of the spoils that gentleman brought from that Indian region to show the advances that these Indians have already made. I call for a vote.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. A word, and a word only. I recollect the trip that the gentleman refers to. When we went from the Southern Pacific up to the San Carlos Agency I was scared [laughter]; wonderfully frightened; and never would have started out had it not been for the renowned warrior from Indiana in charge of this bill, who said: "I take my life in my hand and am ready to sacrifice it in defense of the public duty." [Laughter.] And when he put his body into the ambulance, between the door and where I sat, being courageous, I said: "I will squeeze and slide behind the elegant and courageous gentleman from Indiana;" and I did it. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOLMAN. You could do it safely. [Renewed laughter.]

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I think we had the experience that he speaks of. Nevertheless, to speak earnestly and honestly about it—within twelve months of that time, as soon as the Indians ascertained that the gentleman had made his trip and was not going back, they went upon the warpath and we had a war in which Gen. Crook, I believe, figured.

Mr. HOLMAN. Will my friend allow me. Geronimo was then on the warpath. Gen. Crook said that he had 37 men, 7 boys, and 92 women in his army on the warpath. [Laughter.]

Mr. WILSON of Washington. I ask that this debate be continued for twenty minutes, until we can get all these reminiscences.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For support and civilization of the Kickapoo Indians, Indian Territory, $5,000.

Mr. COOMBS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the words "five thousand dollars."

Mr. COOMBS. Mr. Chairman, I have offered this formal amendment for the purpose of affording me an opportunity to make a few remarks upon the Indian question. It is not an inappropriate place, for the reason that the paragraph is one of thirty-four, each one of which contains an appropriation for the support and civilization of some tribe or group of Indians.

We have as a nation been dealing with this question for generations, and it is very discouraging after so long a time spent in efforts to ameliorate the condition of the aborigines that the work of civilization has made such slight progress and that so large a portion of them should still require the support of the Government.

It is undoubtedly a very difficult question to deal with; but the above fact should cause us to reëxamine our methods and see if they are the wisest that can be adopted, and with the light of such dearly bought and often painful experiences devise some comprehensive plan looking toward a final settlement of the whole question, even though it takes a generation to do it.

There are, of course, a variety of views in relation to the Indian. The Western man, he who lives upon the frontiers and has often suffered from the outbreaks of barbarism, is apt to think "that no Indian is a good one except a dead Indian," and he can not be blamed for entertaining that idea.

We in the East are inclined to take a more sentimental view of his case and possibly lose sight of his natural characteristics in dealing with him, or, in other words, we may commit the error of trying to elevate him by the use of the same methods employed in our efforts to improve the condition of the poor and degraded of our home communities.

The word "support" that appears in these appropriations is very suggestive to my mind.

It is a natural characteristic of the Indian that he considers work as degrading. With rich soil given him for cultivation, endowed with good health and strength, he is still an object for support and charity. I am certain that whatever we may do will be unavailing until he is brought to the condition of mind to feel that it is more degrading to receive charity than to work to supply his own necessities.

It is possible that what we are doing every year in the way of support may to a very great extent neutralize our effort to educate and Christianize him. Education and Christianity can not thrive in company with the degradation of character inseparable from a condition of voluntary pauperism. They should be forced to work to supply their own necessities; they should be taught self-reliance; they should not be encouraged to believe that their lack of providence will be always remedied by our bounty.

The question of tribal relations should receive our earnest attention. Is it not possible that living under the same conditions that existed before the advent of civilization into this country may prevent the reception of new ideas? It is probably an easier matter for us to deal with them as tribes than as individuals; but I am convinced that until we deal with them as individuals we shall make no positive advances in preparing them to become citizens. The members of the same tribe differ in character and capacity, and it is an incongruity that can not be tolerated that there should be divided fealty.

I can not do more than hint at the various points in the five minutes given to me. I believe in giving them good, practical education adapted to their condition. While I do not discourage the methods now employed, I would give greater attention to their education at home. They should have the advantage of religious instruction to counteract their native barbarism. They should, however, first of all be taught to work—not as an experiment, but as a duty and necessity of life. They should not in this respect be exempted from the lot of common humanity; any wavering in this matter will be a concession to their barbarian ideas—unwarranted, and hurtful to them.

No nation has ever treated its aborigines as kindly as has our nation. We can not, even though we resort to stern measures, be accused of heartlessness or cruelty. Our action will stand comparison with that of any nation on the earth.

It is intolerable to suppose that their present condition shall be permanently the same. They should be taught, sternly if necessary, that it is their duty to prepare themselves for citizenship. Those who become sufficiently enlightened should be forced to assume its duties and responsibilities, not as tribes, but as individuals. Those who can not be redeemed from barbarism should be separated from their fellows and be kept as prisoners within prescribed boundaries.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I hope the gentleman's time will be extended three minutes.

Mr. COOMBS. I am aware that what I have so hurriedly said is incomplete, and I may lead to a wrong understanding of my attitude toward the Indian. I can not look upon this question in a sentimental way. I insist that however difficult it may be, some definite line of policy must soon be adopted whereby this troublesome question may be settled or put in the way of settlement. If what I have said will suggest some such plan, or create a discussion that will lead to an examination of the question I shall be more than satisfied.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. COOMBS. I withdraw the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For support and civilization of Shoshone Indians in Wyoming, $10,000.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I move to strike out the word "ten" in line 23 and insert the word "fifteen."

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 40, line 23, strike out the word "ten," and insert "fifteen."

Mr. HOLMAN. I have no objection to that.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. But I want to have my five minutes. [Laughter.]

Mr. LYNCH. That is all right.

Mr. HOLMAN. That amendment was instructed to be reported by the committee.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Then why did not the gentleman offer it?

Mr. HOLMAN. You sprung up so promptly.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Ah! Promptly! I did not get up to address the Chair until the Clerk had spoken the word "for." I watched the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. COFFEEN], who represents the State where these Indians are situated, and I supposed that he would make this motion. I also had my eye in the general direction of the gentleman from Indiana. I did not see any indication of either gentleman rising in their places.

Mr. HOLMAN. I was just looking for a little paper.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. In my time I would like the gentleman to state if he is satisfied with this, that this ought to be $15,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let it go.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Is the gentleman satisfied that it should be put on?

Mr. HOLMAN. I am satisfied.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Have these Indians had their lands allotted to them?

Mr. HOLMAN. No; the Shoshones have not had their lands allotted them, or if at all, only very partially.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I will ask the gentleman from Wyoming if they have received their lands in allotment?

Mr. COFFEEN. They have not; but while on the floor I want to say that later an amendment will be offered that I hope will be accepted, providing for the relinquishment of a vast body of land belonging to these Indians for which they have no use whatever; but I will also state that I am in favor of the amendment the gentleman has offered.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I will be glad to hear from the gentleman from Indiana why it was that the committee which now recommends this increase, decreased the appropriation $5,000, and now so readily assent to the increase?

Mr. HOLMAN. The committee afterwards considered the matter; that is all.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Was it arbitrary, or was it placed on after a contest?

Mr. HOLMAN. It was not arbitrary first or last.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I am very glad to be able to offer an amendment which the gentleman will accept.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Will you yield to me to offer an amendment to your amendment?

The amendment offered by Mr. CANNON of Illinois was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For support and civilization of Shoshone Indians in Nevada, including pay of employés, $10,000.

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

After the word "dollars" in line 25, page 40, insert the following:
"For support, civilization, and instruction of the Seminoles in Florida, $6,000."

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. Chairman, that amendment is intended merely to restore an appropriation that was included in the appropriation bill of the Fifty-second Congress, allowing $6,000 for the instruction and civilization of the Seminole Indians in Florida. I do not understand why the committee saw fit to drop that item.

The Seminole Indians in Florida stand in a relation to the United States Government different from that of any other Indians in the country. They are, in fact, hostile Indians. They are occupying a vast territory in the southern portion of the State known as the Everglades, contrary to the wishes of the Government. They are really there only by sufferance. The lines of civilization are tightening around them. A railroad has gone far down on the east coast of the State, and on the west coast the people are flocking in and filling up the country. These Indians are to-day in a state of barbarism.

The report of the individual who has had charge of the school of instruction down there shows their condition, and shows that if there are any Indians in this country whom the United States Government should undertake to help to climb upto civilization, these are the ones. Some three years ago this amount of $6,000 was appropriated, and the disbursement of it was placed under the superintendence of the Woman's National Indian Association. They entered with much zeal on an effort to improve these Indians. The $6,000 was utilized in building a sawmill and establishing a plant at a point 45 miles southeast of the most southern town in Florida. Unfortunately, at a comparatively recent period, those buildings were destroyed, but the association was making a recognized effort to bring the Indians into a line of action that would induce them to fraternize with our people.

Now, I can say to this committee that unless something is done for the civilization of these Indians, or unless they are removed, they will ultimately prove to be a festering sore in the midst of that section of the country.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Are they on a reservation?

Mr. MALLORY. No, sir; there is no reservation.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Are they citizens of the United States?

Mr. MALLORY. No, sir; they are not citizens of the United States, or of the State of Florida.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. What are they; just tramps?

Mr. MALLORY. They stand alone among the Indians of this country.

Mr. COOMBS. How many of them are there?

Mr. MALLORY. Between 400 and 600, as estimated; probably about 500, all told.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. They have land?

Mr. MALLORY. They have no land, but the State of Florida within a few years has granted to them 5,000 acres of State lands, which, however, I think have not been located. Those lands are to be used in conjunction with the efforts on the part of the General Government to civilize these Indians.

Mr. HOLMAN. These are an absentee band of the Seminoles. The main body of the tribe removed many years ago to the Indian Territory, and these Indians would be entitled to the same rights as the others as soon as they joined their brethren across the Mississippi, but they have never gone there.

Mr. MALLORY. That is correct; and the gentleman might add that they will not go. The United States Government has exerted all its power to compel them to go, and has failed. They are in Florida contrary to the wishes and in defiance of the Government of the United States. It is true that the contact which they have had with the white people of late years has to some extent changed them from the condition in which they were in 1857, when the great body of the tribe were removed, but they are still savages. They live by hunting and furnishing bird plumage and alligator skins to the traders who deal with them. I trust the committee will not oppose this amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. The only object the committee had in dropping this item, which has been in the bill for a number of years, was this: These Indians have not occupied tribal relations for generations, and under the Constitution and laws of the United States they are citizens, though I do not know how that may affect their relation to the State of Florida. However, Mr. Chairman, as this subject has not been very carefully examined, for one I shall not object to the amendment.

The amendment was adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

For support and civilization of the Yakamas and other Indians at said agency, including pay of employés, $10,000.

Mr. GEARY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

For the construction of a wagon road on the Hoopa Valley Indian Reservation, in the State of California, in accordance with the recommendation of Capt. W. E. Dougherty, United States Army, acting Indian agent in charge of said reservation, to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, dated November 21, 1893, $3,509; the work on said road to be performed as far as practicable by Indians.

Mr. GEARY. Mr. Chairman, this appropriation was recommended by the Department, but the estimate was sent in after the committee had prepared this bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. There is no objection to the amendment on the part of the committee, with the distinct understanding that the work is to be done by the Indians themselves.

Mr. GEARY. That I agree to.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. GEARY. I ask that the letter of the Secretary on this subject be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The letter was read, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, February 13, 1894.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith copy of a communication of 10th instant from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and accompanying draft of a bill authorizing the construction of a wagon road on the Hoopa Valley Indian Reservation, in the State of California, and making appropriation therefor.

The letters of the Commissioner and the acting agent, Capt. Wm. E.

Dougherty, United States Army, show the necessity for the construction of this road, and the matter is respectfully submitted for the early and favorable consideration of Congress.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully,

HOKE SMITH, Secretary.

The PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES SENATE.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, February 10, 1894.

SIR: I am in receipt of a communication from Capt. W. E. Dougherty, United States Army, acting Indian agent in charge of the Hoopa Valley Agency, Cal., dated November 21, 1893, in which he states that the superficial area of Hoopa Valley proper is about 4,500 acres; that of this area the high-water flood plain of the Trinity River takes in fully one-third, leaving at low water extensive benches and bars shorn of vegetation and soil; that of the remaining 1,500 acres about 900 are cultivated, and possibly 500 can not be reclaimed for some years, if at all; that a further extension of cultivation is therefore impossible in the valley; that some years ago, when serving there, he prevailed upon the people to abandon the villages, and by furnishing them with lumber and aiding them in the construction of frame houses, and by dividing the land among them in small lots, induced them to live apart and independently, and depend chiefly on agriculture for subsistence instead of upon acorns and salmon; that the response to the requirement was much more prompt and general than he anticipated; that he found it was impossible to supply the people according to their ability and means with the amount of arable land necessary to subsist themselves and their stock, which in a couple of years increased materially; that he now finds himself confronted with the same necessity that existed when he left the reservation; that the population of the valley must be thinned out and part of it placed on the new land, thereby giving more room and enlarging the holdings of those who remain; that many of the most industrious and capable are now anxious to move; that several of them have already taken up locations on the new land, and two families are living there permanently in greatly advanced comfort and abundance; that he is familiar with the locality referred to, having been over it many times, and estimates roughly that 2,000 acres of it can be brought under cultivation without any labor in clearing it; that water is abundant, the springs being numerous, and the oak and fir timber is the finest on the reservation, the soil being fertile and adapted to the growth of grain; that to make this tract available for occupancy and cultivation it must be made accessible over a wagon road, about 10 miles of which should be opened, and that the greater part of the labor would be on the first 3 miles. He estimates the cost of the labor and materials necessary to construct this work at $3,509, and recommends that a bill be prepared to appropriate that amount for the purpose. He submits a rough map of the reservation, showing the locality referred to and the route of the proposed road.

I do not deem it necessary, however, to submit copies of this map.

Agent Dougherty is thoroughly familiar with the Hoopa Valley Reservation and of the needs and requirements of the Indians thereon. From his statements there is no doubt but that the construction of the proposed road would be of great advantage to the Indians and enable them to utilize this body of agricultural land which it is necessary that they should have.

I have therefore prepared a draft of a bill authorizing the construction of this road and appropriating the sum of $3,509 therefor, and have the honor to recommend that it be transmitted to Congress with request for favorable consideration.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

D. M. BROWNING, Commissioner.

The SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

UNITED STATES INDIAN SERVICE,
Hoopa Valley Agency, Cal., November 21, 1893.

SIR: I have the honor to inclose a roughly made plat of this reservation, which shows, approximately, the location and extent of the arable land on the northern part of it, which is not available to the Indians on account of the difficulty of reaching it with the means to bring it under cultivation and of getting to it from the valley, the only routes being difficult trails for pack or riding animals.

The superficial area of Hoopa Valley proper is about 4,500 acres. Of this area, the high-water flood plain of the Trinity River takes in fully one-third, leaving at low water extensive benches and bars shorn of vegetation and soil. Of the remaining 1,500 acres, about 900 are cultivated, and possibly 500 can not be reclaimed for some years, if at all; 60 to 70 acres are covered with orchards, and the residue of 30 to 40 acres will be brought under cultivation this year. A further extension of cultivation is therefore impossible in the valley.

Some years ago, when serving here, I prevailed upon the people to abandon the villages (rancheries), and by furnishing them with lumber and aiding them in the construction of frame houses and by dividing the land among them in small lots, induced them to live apart and independently and depend chiefly on agriculture for subsistence, instead of upon acorns and salmon. The response to this requirement was much more prompt and general than I anticipated, and I found that it was impossible to supply the people according to their ability and means with the amount of arable land necessary to subsist themselves and their stock, which in a couple of years increased materially.

Soon afterwards I was relieved. Meantime no change has occurred, and I find myself confronted with the same necessity that existed when I left here. The population of the valley must be thinned out and part of it placed on the new land, thereby giving more room here and enlarging the holdings of those who remain. Many of the most industrious and capable are now anxious to move (which they were not before). Several have already taken up locations on the new land, and two families are living there permanently in greatly enhanced comfort and abundance.

I am familiar with the locality referred to, having been over it many times, and I estimate roughly that 2,000 acres of it can be brought under cultivation without any labor in clearing it. Water is abundant, springs being very numerous, and the oak and fir timber is the finest in the reservation. The soil is fertile and adapted to the growth of grain.

To make this tract available for occupancy and cultivation it must be made accessible over a wagon road. About 10 miles of road should be opened. The greater part of the labor would be on the first 3 miles. I went over this section yesterday with a hand level, and estimate that about 3,400 cubic yards of earth would have to be moved, and over the whole distance about 7,000. The remainder of the survey is over ground so easily worked that a valuation is difficult and scarcely necessary, being open ground on easy grade. Very little blasting would be necessary, and no bridging on any part of the route.

The work should be done by day labor by Indians. The following is my estimate of the cost:

One span work mules		$300.00
One pair double harness		25.00
One sidehill plow		18.00
One dozen shovels, L. H., B. & H.		12.00
One-half dozen spades, L. H., B. & H		6.00
One dozen picks and handles		18.00
One-half dozen axes, handled		9.00
One cross-cut saw, handled		8.00
Two crowbars, solid steel, 20-inch		6.00
Drills and tool steel		5.00
Explosives		12.00
Labor		419.00
2 overseers (Indians) 60 days, at $1.50 per day	$180.00
Labor, 30 Indians 60 days, at $1	1,800.00
Subsistence of 32 Indians 60 days, at 50 cents per day	960.00
Contingencies	150.00
		3,090.00
Total		3,509.00

I recommend that a bill be prepared, embracing the above-described subject, to appropriate the amount shown above for the purpose, and that it be submitted to the House of Representatives as early as possible in the next regular session.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WM. E. DOUGHERTY,
Captain United States Army, Acting Indian Agent.

The COMMISSIONER OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, D. C.

Insert after line 18, page 42:

"For the construction of a wagon road on the Hoopa Valley Indian Reservation, in the State of California, in accordance with the recommendation of Capt. W. E. Dougherty, United States Army, acting Indian agent in charge of said reservation, to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, dated November 21, 1893, $3,509; the work on said road to be performed, as far as practicable, by Indians."

The Clerk read as follows:

Arizona: For general incidental expenses of Indian service, including traveling expenses of agents in Arizona, and for the support and civilization of Indians at the Colorado River, Pima, and Maricopa and Moquis Pueblo Agencies, $12,000; and pay of employés at same agencies, $6,000; in all, $18,000.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I move to strike out the last word, in order to ask the gentleman why it is that the committee recommend $6,000 here instead of $8,000, the amount carried in the current appropriation bill?

Mr. HOLMAN. The committee were of the opinion that, considering the situation of these agencies, the total amount of $12,000 in the bill was ample, and they thought that not more than $6,000, or half of the appropriation, should go to white men.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. But there is a reduction of $2,000 here. Does the Indian Bureau recommend it?

Mr. HOLMAN. No, sir. The gentleman will observe that this does not embrace the Navajos, that portion of them living west of the boundary between Arizona and New Mexico. It merely embraces the Indians down on the Colorado River. It does not embrace the Apaches. It embraces only those named in the bill, who are all peaceable Indians, and the opinion of the committee was that an appropriation of $6,000 for white people and $6,000 for the Indians was doing pretty well for the whites.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. In which opinion, however, the Indian Bureau does not concur.

Mr. HOLMAN. The Bureau does not recommend it.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. My friend says that the committee cut down the appropriation from $8,000 to $6,000, because they thought $6,000 was enough for pensioning white people. From that point of view, why not cut it all out? Why give any pension to white people?

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not think myself that that proportion ought to exist. I do not think that more than a small percentage of the whole sum appropriated should go to the benefit of the agents, but there have to be blacksmiths and physicians and such employés, and they are covered by this $6,000.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Now, my friend gives the real reason. In giving the other reason it seems to me, with all due respect to the gentleman from Indiana, that he did not do himself justice.

Mr. HOLMAN. I did not enter into the details; that is all.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. The gentleman spoke of this as a gratuity or gift to white people, and said he thought $8,000 was too much to give them. From that point of view I agree with him. Eight thousand dollars is too much; $6,000 is too much; anything is too much. But now the gentleman says he believes there ought to be a certain number of employés at these agencies, and that this appropriation will furnish a sufficient amount to compensate the necessary employés. I understand, however, that the Secretary of the Interior and the Indian Bureau do not agree with him.

Mr. HOLMAN. I say they have not recommended any reduction. That is all.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment, upon which, in view of what has occurred on the floor, I trust there will be no point of order made. I wish to offer it before we leave the Arizona part of this bill.

The amendment was read, as follows:

That the names of Hon. W. S. HOLMAN and Hon. J. G. CANNON be placed on the pension roll, subject to the limitations and restrictions of the pension laws, in modest recognition of the gallant and valuable services rendered the United States in the late war with the Apache Indians in Arizona. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOLMAN. I make the point of order on that amendment. [Laughter and cries of "Vote."]

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard on the point of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. I insist upon a ruling on the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair holds the point of order to be well taken.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I would like to say a word on this amendment not entirely in levity. I want to call attention to one thing which I wish to impress upon the members of this House. There is no man who admires either of the gentlemen named in this amendment more than I do; no man, probably, who has a higher respect for them both, and I believe that when they have done so much more than the balance of this Congress which is legislating upon the Indian question, in actually going out to the Wilcox and San Carlos Reservations—a tract that I have seen made absolutely desolate, the ranches destroyed and the people murdered by these Indians—they ought to receive some special consideration.

I believe that every Congressman who will take the trouble to go out and even locate a reservation is entitled to a pension or some special reward; because through such action on the part of our legislators we may finally get some sort of reasonable legislation on this Indian question. Before we leave the Apache Indian I want to say to this committee that he is a dangerous gentleman to deal with. We have him among us in my Territory, and it is a question with us day and night how to solve that problem, and, in view of the remarks of the gentleman from New York [Mr. COOMBS], I do not know but I should be willing to have his name added to this list. [Laughter.] These gentlemen know how to handle the Indian, though some of them, I think, would not know him if they saw him on Pennsylvania avenue; certainly they would not know him on his native heath, for they would never get close enough to the Apache to recognize him. [Laughter.]

In my opinion those Apache Indians must be treated by this Government differently than any other Indian in the world. They are absolutely the Ishmaelites of God's creation. That is their record, going back farther than our history goes and taking their traditions. From the most ancient times until now there never has been a day that the hand of the Apache has not been against all the world, and the hand of all the world against him in self-defense. The Chinaman, the African, the Mexican—even the Eastern Indian agent—are not free from the Apache when he has a fair chance.

Nothing but fear will rule him. His civilization is at present absolutely impossible, and yet he holds a domain larger than the State of Massachusetts, and with five times its natural resources. I suppose this will be attributed to a desire to get that land away from him, but these few thousand Indians, dangerous to the peace and life of every inhabitant within a hundred miles of them, are maintained on this great reservation instead of being held down close under a guard that can be maintained at less expense, and where the Indians themselves can be maintained at less expense than we are now paying to support them. The hope of civilizing that Indian is just as bright as the hope of civilizing his food, the rattlesnake.

You can not conceive of the Apache until you see him. He is absolutely incapable of the emotions that we feel. He is savage in every instinct. Yet he is left there to roam through those hills, getting hundreds of miles away from his reservation whenever he pleases. And so he stands a menace to the community. Even to-day there are six or seven of them who for three years have been at large, pillaging and murdering in old Mexico and Arizona, and occasionally I believe crossing the line into the magnificent domain of my friend from New Mexico [Mr. JOSEPH].

That reservation should be cut down and limited to a small reservation composed of the best lands on the river. These Indians could be maintained there. They should be made to work and they should suffer, as you and I must suffer, under the law of God, that if a man does not work neither shall he eat, and that in the sweat of his face shall he eat his bread all the days of his life. [Applause.] Until they are taught that, they can not be civilized, and I do not hope to see it in this generation or probably in the next.

Mr. BOWERS of California. Do you believe it is an exhibition of a Christian spirit to insist that an Indian should work? [Laughter.]

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Well, in discussing that question, I do not think any more of that than the Indian does after you preach to him about seven years. It is a purely practical question.

Mr. BOWERS of California. If I understand, the claim is that it is not Christian to compel the Indian to work, but that he must be supported by the Government. The white man must work, of course!

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. The mistake made is in the hope of doing anything, for the present, in the education of that Indian, until you teach him first that he must go hungry next winter if he does not work this summer. As long as you load him with all that he wants to eat and clothe him with all that he wants to wear—clothe him in fact better, if he will take care of his clothes, than many of the constituents I represent here, and feed him better—he will continue to live in absolute dirt and vermin, and degradation inconceivable to you. And then talk about sending preachers to preach the gospel and sing psalms! That is the civilization of the Apache Indian.

Mr. BOWERS of California. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question? I wish to know if it is not the gentleman's observation that the Indians have been taught, or at least that they believe, that this Government must and will support them; that that is the one thing that the Indian Bureau has taught the Indians in Arizona and everywhere else?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. There is no doubt about it. Another thing, the Government is not fair in the way it does. You take these Colorado Indians, the Pueblo Indians, who have been there for hundreds of years, trying to plow and make a living, and succeeding in raising crops; they will be left to be mightily pinched by hunger before the Government steps in to help them, and there has not been a time for years when they have not been working to help themselves, and the Government has no trouble with them; but while the Government lets them go on and take care of themselves, it has given to Geronimo in his day, and to the Apaches that are on that reservation now, a reward to keep them from going on the warpath.

Every one of those Indians that goes off the reservation on the warpath ought to be hanged. They know it as well as we do. Yet they are not made to suffer the penalty of their crime. They are caught by the soldiers and brought back and locked up, and in a little while are in a fair way to escape and go out again into Mexico, as a few of them now are, murdering people and robbing them, and coming back into the United States when they are pressed.

This has been going on there for fifty years, and yet we are leaving these Indians to roam in a domain larger than some of our Eastern States. We are still talking about spending money to educate and preach to them, instead of teaching them, as I said before, to work. Instead of taking your hymn book to the Apache, teach him the song of the anvil, the sound of the drill in the mine. Teach him to raise fruit; teach him that the land he lives on can be made productive, and through that means, and that alone, will we ever succeed in doing anything with him.

Mr. PICKLER. I should like to ask the gentleman if he ever knew a preacher or teacher to go to an Indian tribe, but what the first thing he did was to clean up the Indians and get them into shape?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I have known people to "clean them up," just as people did in the East, in early days.

Mr. PICKLER. I am talking about preachers and teachers. They always do clean the Indians up the first thing.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I do not think that anyone who knows me, or who knows the influences under which I was raised, would think they would need come to the defense of the Christian religion, or of any meek and lowly follower of our Saviour; but I say that by that means alone they can no more get that Indian into a state of civilization than they can get a house painted by singing to it. There are other means. The preacher is not ready for the Indian, and the Indian is not ready for the preacher. They have got a deal to learn yet. The Indians must learn to work, and to make their way in this world as everyone does, through toil, and trouble, and tribulation.

Mr. COOMBS. I understand the gentleman, in the remarks he is making about the Indians, to refer to the Apaches.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Yes.

Mr. LACEY. About how many Apaches are still there?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. About six or eight thousand.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. What will the gentleman say about the preacher who went to the Cœur d'Alene Reservation seventy years ago, walked there, and who gradually taught those people by his piety and Christian influence to work to support themselves?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Who was taxed to pay that good soul?

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Nobody.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Ah, those are the men who educate the Indian.

Mr. PICKLER. The same story might be told of many other Indian reservations, too.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. That is Christianity. Those are the kind of men who first went into Arizona and established those old missions all through Southern California and all that region; who went among the Indians, teaching them to plow and to work, and they have been doing it since. But that was not done by taxing the people to send out agents, or to pay for preachers and schools. It is very well to preach, if they want to——

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Do we tax the people for preachers for the Indians?

Mr. PICKLER. Preachers are not supported by any tax on the Government.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. If the gentleman from South Dakota has any preachers up there who are not needed, why we are perfectly willing to have them come down and preach all they want to. I am not making any assault on religion in any shape in the world.

Mr. PICKLER. I do not know that the gentleman is, but I do not know a preacher in the Indian service who is paid out of the public Treasury. The preachers are sent by the churches.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I can not hear the gentleman when I am talking. One or the other of us must quit.

Mr. PICKLER. Well, I will quit.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arizona is speaking to a point of order. The Chair wishes to remind him of that.

Mr. COOMBS. I hope the gentleman from Arizona will be allowed to proceed. We are learning something from him.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think there is a general wish that the gentleman from Arizona be allowed to proceed, and I hope there will be no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was simply reminding the gentleman that he was speaking to a point of order.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. In order to avoid the conclusion that might be reached from the interruption made by my friend from South Dakota, I will say that it is hardly necessary for me to state, in this presence or anywhere else, that for the man whose life is spent in an effort to save somebody, I have as much respect, and I contribute as liberally of my means, probably, without boasting, as any other gentleman present. But I am simply trying to impress this one thing on the minds of this committee, and that is that you are going backward all the time in the present manner of teaching the Indian children.

There never was a nation, in my opinion, and I think my reading justifies the assertion, even contracted as it has been, as far as christianity goes, in which its real influences have ever been felt until the people have become civilized enough to understand and to accept it. You will never get the Indian a bit better than he is to-day; but in my opinion, gentlemen, you are making him worse by educating him simply to read and write; simply to read what the newspaper says, and to write your name to somebody else's check.

The records of these Eastern schools show that when a man goes back he can not associate with those he left on the reservation. He can not go back and maintain the habits he acquires in the East, for the moment he does so they say to him, "You are putting on the airs of a white man." He immediately becomes either the worst Indian of the whole lot, and becomes a great deal more dangerous on account of the education you have given him, or else he starts out into a career of crime. And it is not worth while for me to say here what becomes of those girls turned out of these schools when they go back. Instead of it being humanity towards those Indians you are teaching and supporting at these schools in the East, why in many instances it is making the Indians worse; and I do not know how it may be with other sections, but any gentleman who thinks that by educating the Indian he is better, is simply deluding himself by a beautiful dream, for him to laugh at.

I saw one not long ago who had received an education at an Eastern institution. He could read the same as I. He wrote a good hand. I asked him how many feet there were in a yard. He did not know; and how many pecks in a bushel. He did not know. He knew not one of the simplest things which our children learn at 5 or 6 years of age, but he could read and write. I soon found out that he knew nothing of any of these things; but if you asked him if "he knew who died that he might live," he could answer you that categorically and very correctly. Now, do you mean to tell me that such education is going to affect him any more than any Chinaman coming to this country is going to change his idea of religion to ours.

That is a slow process, my friend. And if we let the religious question alone in this case and educate these Indians in practical things, on the ground where they were born, and where their fathers and mothers can keep them, and let their father and mother see the process of their education, it will have an influence on the older ones as they become accustomed to it from time to time; but so long as you keep them here it will be of no advantage to them.

There is not one of those who have been educated at Hampton, I have been told, who will not go back worse than he came; and I believe that every dollar you spend in that way is worse than thrown away. In my judgment the best and the most profitable way to spend it is on the Indian reservations, teaching the Indian how to plow corn and how to preserve fruit as they are now doing in the school at Phœnix, Ariz. The great lesson taught there is how to preserve fruit, and it has led to an improvement in the education of these Indians greater than any in the United States.

Mr. HOLMAN. There is a point of order pending.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be recognized on the question of order, so as to reply to the charge made as to the bad effects of teaching Indians in the Eastern schools. I think it nothing more than fair that a reply should be made to that charge. What the gentleman from Arizona has said may be true in respect to the Indians in Arizona, and I know that there are warlike tribes in that Territory; but the Apaches are not the only Indians in this country.

I live within a few miles of an Eastern Indian school. I refer to the school at Carlisle, Pa., that contains from 700 to 800 Indian children. I want to say to the gentleman from Arizona that in that institution you will find as apt scholars, you will find almost as high training as in any college in the East. I find, sir, from the report as to that college that 95 per cent of the graduates of the Carlisle School do not go back and become blanket Indians, but become useful citizens of the United States.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. From what tribes?

Mr. MAHON. From all tribes.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. There is not one from Arizona who has not gone back.

Mr. MAHON. When the gentleman makes the charge that they go back and become robbers and thieves, and that the young maidens go back and lose their virtue, he is making a charge that he can not substantiate.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Where do they go? I want to learn.

Mr. MAHON. They would prefer to stay in the East, with the people who have civilized them. We ought to educate these people and allow them to assimilate with our people. You go with me into the Cumberland Valley, and I will show you hundreds of Indian children, boys and girls, being educated in that school. I will show you during the summer vacation how they associate with our farmers, and thus make the very best citizens. You say that you can not civilize or Christianize them. I have heard an Indian preach the gospel of salvation in the pulpits of the Cumberland Valley and tell the story of the Cross with as much feeling and effect upon the people as many of our white pastors.

Now, this charge that the gentleman has made has been denied over and over again; this story about these Indians going back into degradation and villainy has been proven false time after time. The facts will not justify the charge he has made against this Eastern school. If the gentleman will take the report of Bishop Hare, who was among the Indians, he will find that 95 per cent of them do not go back to the habits of their people, but conduct themselves well.

I will admit that a few Indians will go back and become degraded, but that is no argument against educating them, and if there is any truth in this charge that the educating of these Indians in the Eastern schools does not civilize them, if it does not lead these people out of degradation and savagery, then pray tell me what will be the effect of educating them upon the reservations, surrounded by all the vicious influences of their tribal relations. If you propose to strike down the Eastern schools, you must admit that the idea of civilizing the Indian by education is a failure, and every dollar in this bill for the education of children in the reservation schools ought to be stricken out, and give up the whole matter as a bad job.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. The only contention between you and myself is simply this. I do not contend that there are not certain tribes in the United States far enough educated, but when they are far enough advanced by education you can not take one man to a tribe and elevate the tribe, nor can you take four and elevate the tribe. The whole tribe is against him. But you can in time by process of education on the reservation improve them by developing them and teaching them the rudiments, allowing those living on the reservation to see the benefit that it is to them; and in that way you will gradually bring them to a higher plane.

Mr. MAHON. The gentleman may represent a Territory in which tribes of Indians are very savage, but if he will go with me to the Cumberland Valley I will show him Indians amongst the best musicians in this country. They have a band there that I think is not equalled by the band of any other school. It is a band that will favorably compare with the Marine Band. You can go with me to that school, and I will show you mechanics that can not be excelled outside of the school. I will show you in all branches of learning that these children are educated to a high grade. Schools of that kind educate and civilize them.

Mr. PICKLER. In the Carlisle school do they do anything in the way of a practical education? I understand they have shops there to give them practical education. What does the gentleman say about that?

Mr. MAHON. They have.

Mr. PICKLER. Will the gentleman tell us something about the practical education they receive?

Mr. MAHON. What do you mean by "practical education"?

Mr. PICKLER. The education they get in the industrial schools.

Mr. MAHON. In the Carlisle school they teach an Indian any trade he may desire to learn. They teach him to become a cabinet-maker, a harness-maker, a tinner, or a blacksmith. These people make the best of mechanics.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Will the gentleman tell us where they come from?

Mr. MAHON. From all the Indian tribes.

Mr. BAILEY. I understood the gentleman to state that they became useful citizens. My information is that those who are educated in the East and settle there do not become citizens at all. They do not become naturalized. Is that true?

Mr. MAHON. Become voters?

Mr. BAILEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. MAHON. They do not require to become naturalized. If they sever their tribal relations they become citizens.

Mr. BAILEY. Of course they do to become citizens of the United States.

Mr. MAHON. Not in my State.

Mr. BAILEY. The Supreme Court has expressly held that if an Indian belonging to a tribe separates himself from his tribe, he must still be naturalized before he becomes a citizen of the United States.

Mr. MAHON. But they must first separate themselves from their tribes. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY]——

Mr. BAILEY. I understand that, but they do not become naturalized.

Mr. MAHON. They do.

Mr. BAILEY. My information is different.

Mr. MAHON. The gentleman from Texas may be right. I have not examined the decisions of the court as he has done, and am not as well posted on the subject as he is.

Mr. HERMANN. Under the present system of allotting lands to the Indians in severalty, the decision is that they do become citizens of the United States.

Mr. BAILEY. No; the decision is that the mere breaking up of the tribal relation, or the mere separation of an Indian from his tribe, does not make him a citizen; that, having been born a member of the tribe, he can only become a citizen by naturalization.

Mr. HERMANN. He becomes ipso facto a citizen of the United States when he severs himself from his tribe, and under the practice of allotting lands to the Indians in severalty it has been decided that they do become citizens of the United States, and they are entitled to vote in every State in this Union, and are now voting under that condition of affairs.

Mr. BAILEY. In a bill severing the tribal relations and allotting lands to Indians in severalty, the United States could of course make them citizens, but unless there is a provision to that effect they do not by mere allotment become citizens.

In the case of Elk vs. Wilkins an Indian attempted to vote and alleged that he had separated himself from the tribe and was no longer a part of it. He claimed that he was a citizen of Nebraska, and attempted to vote in the city of Omaha, but the register refused to permit him to register. The Indian sued him, and the case came to the Supreme Court of the United States, and is reported in the 112th volume of reports. The court held that he could not be a citizen of the United States without having been naturalized, because he had been born a member of an Indian tribe.

Mr. HERMANN. That was a condition of affairs in which there were no allotments.

Mr. BAILEY. If the alloting statute provides for citizenship, of course the Indian becomes a citizen, but not otherwise.

Mr. HERMANN. But the statute does provide that they shall become citizens of the United States upon the happening of that condition.

Mr. BAILEY. That is upon allotment.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a question of order. There is nothing before the committee.

Mr. MAHON. One word more, Mr. Chairman. It is beyond all controversy that the education of the Indian children in the Eastern schools has been for the betterment of those people. This House wastes a great deal of time in discussing that question over and over and over again. The Indians educated in our Eastern schools make good citizens. We bid them welcome to the State of Pennsylvania. We would not be sorry if every one of them remained in that State. They are a great deal better citizens than many that we have there.

Pennsylvania to-day is cursed with a lot of anarchists, socialists, bomb-throwers, men who destroy property with dynamite; a lot of Hungarians, Italians, and criminals from foreign countries, who are far worse citizens, worse enemies of this country to-day, and far more likely to destroy its liberties and peace than the poor Indian who travels the plains in all his savagery and debasement, and if this Congress should devote more attention to eliminating that curse and less to the Indian, it would be better employed. I would like to trade off 300,000 of the Hungarian, Italian, and other foreign criminals and scalawags that we have in the State of Pennsylvania for the Indians that belong to the gentleman from Arizona. [Laughter.] We could educate and elevate the Indian to the plane of good citizenship——

Mr. COFFEEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask unanimous consent that debate on this subject be limited to five minutes.

Mr. REED. I object to that, because I want to say a few words upon this if I can have time.

Mr. HOLMAN. How much time does the gentleman from Maine want?

Mr. REED. Five or ten minutes.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then I ask unanimous consent that debate be limited to fifteen minutes.

Mr. REED. I object to any limitation. Let the debate go on. We have a "tribe" here that needs some education on this subject.

Mr. HOLMAN. The subject of Indian education is not really before the committee at all at this time. It will come up in its regular order.

Mr. REED. Well, we have got into it, and we might as well talk it out.

Mr. COFFEEN. Mr. Chairman, if I can have the attention of the committee I desire to make a few remarks. I observe that the Western people, who, from practical experience with these Indians, are showing that they understand something of the Indian question, and the Representatives of the Eastern portions of this country are manifesting a spirit of inquiry and of kindness in this discussion which is very encouraging and which I think makes it desirable that the discussion should be continued for a few minutes, because good is being accomplished by it.

In reference to the education of the Indians at the Carlisle school, I wish to say that I attended an exhibition by the Indian pupils from that school at Metzerott's Hall not long ago, and I was very much interested and impressed as I beheld those dark-eyed Indian young people peering out, as it were, trying to comprehend the future of themselves and of their race. I have nothing to say against the education of the Indians at the existing schools, or against the benevolent efforts of our people in connection with the Carlisle and other Indian schools.

But, coming from the West, where I have had opportunity to observe the reservation Indians, their needs and their habits, I desire to say, in harmony with what has been said by the gentleman from Arizona, that a much better use of the funds that are now expended for Indian schools would be secured by establishing the schools in the West right beside the Indian. When you move your schools, your educational appliances, mechanical, scientific, and economical to the very home of the Indian, then you will secure results far beyond any that you attain now.

Imagine, if you please, the influence that would be exerted on the Crow Indians in Montana, or on the Shoshone Indians in the State that I have the honor to represent, by bringing them into contact with those educating and civilizing influences.

You would thus be educating or lifting the whole tribe to a higher level, especially if you taught such branches and exercised them in such simple arts as would be properly adapted to the conditions in which they live and out of which they must emerge by slow degrees.

Again, you bring at once into the minds of all the Indian parents, who still must remain the natural guardians of their children, an idea of the advantages that there are in the education of the intellect and hearts of the children while you wisely train them also in the art of making a living. Secondly, you have another valuable reciprocal influence, which acts upon the teachers and educators themselves, by which they learn and appreciate the difficulties and problems connected with the elevation of the Indians, and which your teachers can never acquire by handling pupils in Pennsylvania or anywhere else in the East far distant from the actual homes of the Indians.

These are among the results to be attained by schools among the Indians. Therefore, in harmony with the general Western sentiment, I say, move your schools and your institutions for the education of the Indian out where the Indians are, so that the Indian parent, as well as the children, may catch the spirit and atmosphere surrounding your schools. That will benefit thousands of Indians and gradually blend them into harmony who are now left to antagonize these young bright pupils whom you educate in the East when they go back to their tribes in the West.

When these children graduate and go West again, the change is so great that they feel it most keenly, and it results disastrously to them and does not accomplish the high and noble purpose you have in view. Instead of wasting $100,000 per year in training Indians at the Carlisle school in Pennsylvania in the higher branches and classical music, for which their parents and tribes at home have no use or appreciation, spend this sum in schools on the edges of the Western reservations and change the curriculum of studies into more practical channels.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Along the line of the gentleman's argument, which I have listened to with great pleasure and considerable profit to myself, I desire to ask him if he does not think he can educate the Indians more successfully if the administration of affairs is put under the control of our own Indian agents and our own teachers and farmers? [Laughter.]

Mr. COFFEEN. Yes; and I indorse the general sentiment of the gentleman from Washington, indicated by his question, and say that both agents and farmers to teach the Indians should come from civil life and have experience in the methods of farming and living in the regions where these reservations exist.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. REED. Mr. Chairman, the path toward truth is said to be along a line of approximate inaccuracy, and possibly that may be our pathway to the truth with regard to Indian education. I desire to contribute some of the views which I entertain upon the subject, which I think may possibly be of use, though I decline to warrant it. I have listened to the remarks of the Delegate from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] and of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MAHON], and although they seem to be at sword's points, yet I venture to say that there is very little real difference between them. They are talking of different subjects and of different effects, produced by different courses of action.

Unquestionably the education of the Indian may be carried to a point which, in individual cases, will fit him for association with the citizens of Pennsylvania or of Maine or of Massachusetts, and if he stays with the citizens of those States he will undoubtedly be very much improved in his status, and the country will have the benefit of a new citizen. On the other hand, if he is educated beyond the reach of the tribe to which he belongs, and goes back to that tribe, he meets a great principle, not of Indian nature but of human nature, which is exemplified among us at all times and on all occasions; that is, the demand for uniformity of thought and action. The human race has a sort of instinct which obliges it to keep together, and it will not let any of us stray very far beyond the general sentiment.

The man is a very bold man who to-day wears a very bright red necktie, and the man who twenty years ago had worn one would have been in great danger of personal assault. [Laughter.] The world will not stand anything except general uniformity. A savage tribe is in precisely the same condition. It does not appreciate a graduate of the Carlisle school, and it does not appreciate anybody who is much more elevated in social life than it is. Hence the problem, so far as the education of the tribe is concerned, is the raising of the whole tribe somewhat, rather than the raising of a single member of it a good deal. I do not care how high a man is raised above his community, if he goes back to it he will soon be brought downt o its level of thought and action. This is a principle of human nature so widespread and so inherent in the race that it must be respected, and the more you respect it, the more sensible will be your course of action.

Now, our newspapers are the palladiums of our liberties. We all understand that. But our newspapers would lose their force at once if they undertook to be too far elevated above the people. They have to be within reaching distance. It is the same with all other educational means employed in this world. We have got to get people up, little by little, and in order to get them up at all we have got to get them all up. We have got to stop very often, for instance, in politics, in order to get our Democratic party up to the point for a new departure [Laughter.] And it would be impossible for an advanced Republican to go amongst a very backward Democratic community without being very much lowered in his moral tone before he got out of it, if he continued to live with them any length of time. [Laughter.]

Now, that is an illustration which you will all understand [laughter], and which, if you will apply it to the subject under discussion will, I think, reconcile in very many ways the apparently opposing views of the Delegate from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MAHON.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Maine has expired.

Mr. REED. I should like to have a few minutes longer.

The CHAIRMAN. In the absence of objection, the time of the gentleman from Maine will be extended five minutes.

Mr. REED. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is arguing about the fitness of the education which is bestowed upon the Indians at Carlisle for certain purposes. Unquestionably he is right about that, and we should all be glad to see the aborigines of this country assimilate themselves with us. But when you come to take a tribe, which can not be separated and distributed, and the question is about the education of that tribe, it is the same with those people as it is with us. They must pass over the same road that we passed over. We did not arrive at our present condition of civilization by leaps and bounds. On the contrary, we went at a snail's pace, because we had to lift everybody all the time.

Why, you are having that identical problem in the education of the colored people of the South. When a Southern colored boy spends three or four or five or six hours in school, and then goes home to his parents who have not had the advantages of that education, they are very likely to feel that he is a little bit uppish in his ways, and unconsciously they try to push him down. So it is with regard to the Indians. Why, I recollect how it was when we were boys, how we used to criticise our companions who undertook to be a little more educated than ourselves, or to wear their clothes a little more in the style of grown people. It is a fact and a principle that runs through human nature.

Now, it seems to me that the inevitable deduction from this is that while it may be proper to take individuals and educate them to be distributed among the community, it is also equally true that the best method of reaching the Indian question is to have those schools which commence with matters nearest to their present thought and gradually lift them up through industrial means, until they all begin to realize and understand the advantages of the change, and when they all of them come to this understanding, which is necessary for progress, each one supported by all the rest, then they will all come up gradually together, and very soon we will find them fit to be citizens of the United States, for that is not necessarily a very high standing. It only requires that men comprehend what is necessary for laws to govern themselves.

Now, it seems to me that these are sound principles, and that it is worth while for us to apply them to this question which is before us. For my part, I should be willing to spend a good deal of money for an education like that, for while they have got to go over the same road we went over, while they have got to pass from their present condition, which was ours centuries ago, they can, thanks to their surroundings, go over the road in a much shorter time than we went over it, and by taking them all together we shall get them there much more quickly than if we undertake a sporadic education. [Applause.]

Mr. COOMBS. What does the gentlemen think of the education of teachers in Eastern schools to send back to teach their own tribes?

Mr. REED. My experience about teachers has been that there may be such a thing as the overeducation of teachers. My impression is that the very best scholars are by no means the best teachers. Some time ago, in discussing another question, apologizing somewhat for my inability to discuss it as fully as might be, I ventured to say that I would discuss it, because I had noticed that a 5-year-old boy could teach a 4-year-old boy more than Noah Webster could, with all the facilities of his dictionary. So it may be that we may educate teachers too much. What we want to do is to get within easy reach of the whole tribe, and lift the whole of it, thereby making our education complete.

The generation which has got beyond school days is to a certain extent hopeless, but you get the whole of the younger generation educated up to a certain point and you have reached that point permanently, and then the next generation has got a better chance; and so they will go on, and when the whole tribe gets permeated with the idea that education is a good thing, progress will be rapid. By education I mean the very broadest kind of lifting up. I do not believe that education is book knowledge. Book knowledge is the very least part of education.

I think one of the brightest men I knew, when I first came out of college, was a man whose reports I had to write for him. But he was bright enough, and he gave me the idea that there may be an education which can make a man, which does not necessarily come under the head of reading and writing. But applying the term education in its fullest and broadest sense, what we want to do is to educate them all, because—and I think it is a providential arrangement—you can not leave any large portion of the human race outside of progress. Your progress is stopped until you get them up to a fair level.

You can not go ahead. You can not live with an ignorant majority within your borders. You have got to raise them before you can raise yourselves. You are subjected to that unconscious but unfailing influence of the majority of sentiment, and until that majority of sentiment is lifted higher you who stand on the heights can climb no higher. [Loud applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

New Mexico: For general incidental expenses of the Indian service, including traveling expenses of agents in New Mexico and support and civilization of Indians at Pueblo Agency, $3,500, and pay of employés at said agency, $1,200: in all, $4,700.

Mr. SICKLES. Mr. Chairman, I offer a pro forma amendment to enable me to make a statement. I move to strike out the last five words in the section just read. This morning, while my attention was otherwise occupied by two of my colleagues, an amendment relating to the Seneca Indian lands in New York was offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin on my left [Mr. LYNCH] and accepted by the chairman of the Indian Affairs Committee. It was my intention to raise a point of order against that amendment, at the request of my colleague [Mr. DANIELS], who is absent. I now ask permission of the gentleman from Indiana, chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, and the gentleman from Wisconsin, that I may be allowed to raise that point of order, and let it be disposed of by the Chair, without prejudice from its not being raised and disposed of when the amendment was offered, when I was otherwise occupied.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will please state where the amendment was offered.

Mr. HOOKER of New York. It was at the end of page 36.

Mr. SICKLES. It is a provision to pay the Ogden Land Company for certain claims which it says it has over this 50,000 acres of Seneca Indian lands in Western New York. Whether or not they have a good claim I do not know; but this is new legislation, and it ought to be brought before the House in a separate bill. I ask permission to raise the point of order, as I promised my colleague [Judge DANIELS] I would, and as I should have done if my attention had not been occupied by two of my colleagues at the time the amendment was offered.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that the gentleman from Wisconsin offered an amendment at the end of line 7, page 35, and that the committee accepted it.

Mr. SICKLES. Yes, it was accepted by the chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to return to that part of the bill and that he may have permission to raise the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. HOOKER of New York. It is too late. I object.

Mr. SICKLES. I am sorry that my colleague objects, and I give notice that I will demand a separate vote on that amendment, or will move to recommit the bill with instructions to strike out that amendment. I do not think it was fairly introduced.

Mr. HOLMAN. Just one word in this connection. I do not think it is fair to take advantage of the mere circumstance that the gentleman was not able to make the point of order as he has said he intended. I think that under the circumstances the gentleman from New York [Mr. SICKLES] should have permission to raise the point of order.

Mr. SICKLES. My colleague, who objects, was one of those who engaged my attention at the moment the amendment was offered. He knew that it was to be introduced, and I had no opportunity to raise the point. Therefore my colleague is the last one who should object.

Mr. HOOKER of New York. This is a committee amendment, which was unanimously agreed to by the committee.

Mr. LYNCH. I desire to say, Mr. Chairman, that this matter was perfectly understood by the Committee on Indian Affairs. It happened to be omitted from the draft of the bill, when it was last printed. It came from the whole committee as a committee amendment, and it was introduced by me this morning at the proper time and place.

Mr. SICKLES. I find no fault with the committee. I will appeal to the House at the proper time to correct the irregularity of which I complain.

The Clerk read as follows:

Utah: For general incidental expenses of the Indian service, including traveling expenses of agents in Utah, support and civilization of Indians at Uintah Valley and Ouray Agencies, $6,500, and pay of employés at said agencies, $1,500; in all, $8,000.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. I desire to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to this item, which relates to Utah, and I wish to offer an amendment. As it now reads it is $6,500 for incidental expenses, and for pay of employés at said agencies $1,500; in all, $8,000. In the bill for the fiscal year ending 1894 the incidental expenses and pay of employés were appropriated for together. If this $5,000 was used in pay for employés, $3,000 was for incidental expenses, making only $8,000 in all. As it stands now it is not sufficient for the service. I will offer an amendment for incidental expenses, etc., $3,000, and pay of employés $5,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the Clerk will report the amendment again.

The Clerk read as follows:

For general incidental expenses of the Indian service, including traveling expenses of agents in Utah, support and civilization of Indians at Uintah Valley and Ouray Agencies, $3,000, and pay of employés, $5,000.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. I want to change that so as to make it for pay of employés, $5,000; a total of $8,000. I do not change the total, and it does not increase the appropriation.

Mr. HOLMAN. It increases the appropriation $1,600.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. It gives $3,000 for the incidental expenses, and leaves $5,000 for the employés.

Mr. HOLMAN. It only leaves $1,500 for the Indian employés.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. It was considered with reference to Utah, and agreed to at the time. The same thing occurs with the State of Washington. As it now stands it is practically of no value whatever to the Department.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the amendment will again be read.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think the provision of $1,500 for the pay of the Indian employés ought to be retained. If my friend will just modify his amendment that way so that $1,500 shall be retained for Indian employés, I think his amendment will be more acceptable.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. I have no objection to that, if the chairman of the committee desires to have it divided up into Indian employés or anything else. As it now stands it is of no value to the Department, because we have only got $1,500 and $6,500 for incidental expenses. The Department wants $3,000 for incidental expenses and $5,000 for the pay of employés.

Mr. HOLMAN. If the gentleman will say $1,500, and $1,500 for the pay of Indian employés, I think there is no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington will please present his amendment in writing.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Chairman, while the gentleman is preparing his amendment I can say all I desire to say.

A moment ago, in a colloquy with the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MAHON], I stated that an Indian leaving his tribe could not become a citizen of the United States without being naturalized. My assertion was contradicted, and while it is not a matter of special importance it is just as well to be accurate as we go along. I have before me the case in which the Supreme Court has expressly decided what I stated, and the language of the court is:

Indians born within the territorial limits of the United States, members of, and owing immediate allegiance to, one of the Indian tribes (an alien though dependent power) although in a geographical sense born in the United States are no more "born in the United States and subject to the jurisdiction thereof" within the meaning of the first section of the fourteenth amendment, than the children of subjects of any part of government born within the domain of that government or the children born within the United States of ambassadors or other public ministers of foreign nations.

The court continues and holds that the Indian is not born subject to the jurisdiction of the United States within the meaning of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution, and therefore can become a citizen of the United States only by naturalization.

In reply to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HERMANN], who said that they became citizens when their lands are allotted, I beg to say that the act which provided for the apportionment of the land permitted them to become citizens, and therefore that act pro hac vice, is a naturalization, and when they had taken the land in allotment it made them citizens.

Mr. HERMANN. In reply to that, permit me to say on the last proposition of the gentleman, that in accordance with the terms of the act passed in 1891 an Indian whose lands are set apart in severalty becomes a citizen of the United States upon that act. As to the gentleman's first proposition, I wish to state that the Supreme Court, possibly as far back as a quarter of a century ago, distinctly held that when an Indian subject to the tribe separates himself from the tribe, absolves himself from allegiance to that tribe, and takes part of the duties imposed upon him by citizenship, he thereby becomes ipse facto a citizen of the United States; that is to say, where he takes the dress and manners of the citizens of the country.

Mr. BAILEY. I will give the gentleman the facts on which this complaint is based:

That more than one year prior to the grievances herein complained of he had severed his tribal relation to the Indian tribes, had fully and completely surrendered himself to the jurisdiction of the United States, and still so continues subject to the jurisdiction of the United States.

This case was decided in 1884.

Mr. HERMANN. I will agree with the gentleman about that, but he may not have adopted the dress and customs of civilized life.

Mr. BAILEY. He was living in the city of Omaha, Nebr.

Mr. HERMANN. I will examine that, and refer to the decision originally made by the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Line 25, strike out "six thousand five hundred," and insert "five thousand." Line 1, page 44, strike out "fifteen hundred" and insert "three thousand; in all, $8,000; of which at least one-half shall be expended for Indian employés."

Mr. WILSON of Washington. That means that one-half of the $3,000 shall be expended for Indian employés.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Washington: For general incidental expenses of the Indian service, including traveling expenses of agents at seven agencies and the support and civilization of Indians at Colville and Puyallup Agencies, $14,000, and pay of employés, $2,000; in all, $16,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Page 44, line 6, after the word "agencies" strike out "fourteen thousand dollars;" and in line 7, after the word "employés" strike out "two thousand" and insert "sixteen thousand." Also in line 7 strike out "in all sixteen thousand dollars."

Mr. HOLMAN. This does not change the amounts but only the arrangement.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. I understand that if the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana prevails the appropriation will be for general and incidental expenses $9,500, and to pay employés $6,500; in all $16,000. That is the way it ought to be. That is the way the Department wishes it, and if we are to change this at all it ought to be in that way.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that that is not the amendment which has been proposed by the gentleman from Indiana, but the Chair will suspend action on the amendment and will recognize the gentleman from Washington [Mr. DOOLITTLE], who, by unanimous consent, has been allowed thirty minutes.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

After line 8, page 44, add the following:

"Provided, That all lands heretofore constituting a part of the Puyallup Indian Reservation situate near the city of Tacoma, Pierce County, State of Washington, now held in severalty by the Puyallup Indians, patents to which have heretofore been issued by the United States to said Indians, said patents containing certain restrictions upon the sale and conveyance of said lands, are hereby declared to be the property and estate of each of said allottees or their heirs in fee simple, free and clear of each and every restriction as to the sale, conveyance, or other disposition of the same heretofore imposed by the Government of the United States: Provided, however, That no sale of said lands shall be valid until the parties shall appear before the United States district judge of the district in which said lands are situate, and thereupon submit to him all the terms and conditions of such proposed sale for his approval, and if approved by such judge he shall indorse his approval on the contract or other instrument evidencing such sale; thereupon such sale may be executed and completed in accordance with the terms and conditions so approved by said judge.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, having reserved the point of order on a very similar amendment submitted by the gentleman from Oklahoma, I shall feel in duty bound to reserve the point of order on this also. This subject, however, has not been very carefully considered by the Committee on Indian Affairs, and I will call a meeting of the committee to-morrow morning to consider both propositions. In the meantime the gentleman from Washington can proceed with his remarks.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is in the interests of justice and right to every person concerned, both whites and Indians, living in the vicinity of these allotted lands. These Puyallup Indians who have taken their lands in severalty are civilized Indians. These allotted lands cover about 17,000 acres in the valley of the Puyallup River, in Pierce County, in the State of Washington. The westerly boundary of this reservation joins the city of Tacoma, my home town, in that State, and it stretches up the valley easterly for a distance of about 9 miles, to the thrifty town of Puyallup, a place which to-day has about fourteen or fifteen hundred people.

That valley is naturally one of the most beautiful in the State of Washington, and if it was cleared up so as to admit of being cultivated, it would be one of the most productive valleys in the entire Union. There are about six hundred Puyallup Indians occupying these 17,000 acres of land. Intelligent as they are, those Indians are desirous, and have been desirous for years past, of selling a portion of their lands in order to raise money to enable them to clear off the portion that they retain and make it productive.

I venture the assertion that any gentleman in this House, or any white man anywhere who understands anything about the cultivation of the soil in our State, can take 7 acres of that land when it is cleared and ready for cultivation, and support a family of half a dozen people royally and well. The land is naturally wonderfully productive in grasses, in vegetables, in hay, and in fruit. No finer fruit country lies out of doors to-day than the valley of the Puyallup River. These Indians have taken their lands in severalty. They are citizens of the United States. They are voters. They have all the rights that any white citizen of this country enjoys. They are asking Congress that the restriction upon the sale of their lands be removed.

What is the restriction they desire to have removed? Within eight years time, under the law which was passed by the Fifty-second Congress, the restriction will be removed and the Indians will come into full enjoyment of this property as they now have dominion and control over it. Under the existing law they have the right to lease these lands for a period not exceeding two years; but that is not sufficient for them. They desire to handle their lands as other citizens of the United States—white people—handle property, real and personal, and it is only the simplest kind of broad daylight justice to permit them to do so and let them dispose of their lands as their own judgment shall dictate.

It is a wrong to these people, who have become citizens and who attend our county conventions and our State conventions and sit upon the juries that try the causes that are tried in our courts, to longer withhold from them this right; especially when they have reached the condition of education and intelligence which they now enjoy. When the Commission was out there, more than two years since, it reported that it was wrong to continue these restrictions any further than the necessity for them existed, and that in a short time they should be absolutely removed.

These Indians decided years ago that the time had come when they were qualified to handle their property like other people, and the white people of that section of the State are unanimously in favor of the amendment I have offered. I have had within the few past days telegrams and letters asking me to present this amendment to the Indian appropriation bill and to urge upon Congress to finally put an end to the difficulties which these people are laboring under in this respect. Now, I desire to state to this committee that these allotted lands are as a rule heavily timbered. It will require an expenditure of from $75 to $125 an acre to remove the timber from them.

From this it will be seen how important it is that these Indians shall have the right to sell a portion of these lands in order to improve the remainder. Like intelligent white people, these Indians do not want any commission to go out there and say what portion of their lands they shall dispose of. When you are about to sell your farm or other property you make up your own mind about it; and they desire to follow the same course with regard to their lands; and I submit to the committee, with all due respect, that these Indians never will consent, so far as these allotted lands are concerned, to any other method of disposing of them than by themselves in an independent way, and as any American citizen is entitled to dispose of his property. Within the limits of this reservation there is a body of land, somewhere in the neighborhood of 5,000 acres, which was reserved for school, church, and cemetery purposes when the allotments were made. This 5,000 acres which was not allotted has been spoken of always since the allotments were made as the reservation land proper.

Now, during the last Congress a law was enacted relative to this entire subject, providing for the appointment of a commission of three gentlemen to go into that country, upon the reservation, providing also for an appraisal of these lands and the sale of them, and that the proceeds so far as allotted lands were concerned should be turned into the Treasury of the United States, and that the sale should be subject to the approval of this commission.

Well, now, Mr. Chairman, when the Indians became aware that if they consented to the sale of these allotted lands, the money which was paid for them was to be turned into the Treasury of the United States, and then was to be paid out under the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, they became dissatisfied, because they did not wish the money that was paid for property in that locality to be taken away from that country and brought clear back here, nearly 4,000 miles from where it belonged, in that way depriving the people of that country of its use. Neither did they want to be required to have their lands appraised and sold off in this way, or to have some commission select what portion of the land should be sold; and so these Indian citizens have refused to consent to the sale of these lands as each man before me would have done.

They consented to the sale of the 5,000 acres which had been reserved when the allotment was made for school, church, and cemetery purposes. They consented to the sale of that land, and the commission is going on about its business in disposal of the reservation land proper. Now, I do not wish to be understood here as passing any criticism upon the commission. I am entirely content to have them proceed with their business, and I do not care what length of time is covered, but I know from the commissioners themselves that they will not be able to get the consent of any of the allottees for the sale of the allotted lands belonging to these Puyallup Indians, and, in my humble judgment, they should not.

Not knowing this to be the case, I have submitted to those Indians and to the white people of that section of the country this amendment, requiring that before a sale is made the parties to the proposed sale shall go before the judge of the United States district court, holding terms within and for that district, and submit to him the contracts, to have the terms and conditions of the sale approved by him. These Indians have confidence in this judge. He was brought up in their midst. He read law in one of the cities adjoining this reservation.

Every one of those Indians knows this man intimately and well, and they are satisfied and contented to have him overlook their business concerns and transactions with reference to this land. It is a fair and open proposition and nothing else. I would as soon imperil my own existence as to do anything that I had any reason to believe would inflict wrong on a single individual of the Puyallups. On the contrary, I want to preserve and protect their rights in all things. But I tell you, gentlemen of this committee, that this amendment is in the interest of these Indians, that if adopted, as I believe it will be adopted by this House, it will result in bettering the condition of every individual upon those lands. They are an educated, self-reliant, self-respecting people, and fill the bill completely when you come to require an educated, cultured red man. They are everything that education and culture will make of those people during the life of the present generation.

Now, I desire to call your attention, lest it be forgotten, again to the fact that these restrictions, under the law as it now exists, will be removed in eight years' time. If there has ever been any question as to their ability to protect themselves in their relations to each other or in their relations to the white people surrounding them, I wish to say they are just as well qualified and prepared for the removal of this restriction to-day as they will be at the expiration of eight years.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that this obstacle to the growth of one of the cities of my State should be removed. It has long seemed to me that these Indians were entitled to the removal of these restrictions, and I know that if you adopt this amendment, as it seems to me you will, in the interest of justice and right to all concerned, there will be a happy crowd of Indians upon those allotted lands within the limits of my State, and I know that the white people surrounding them will be happy, because they desire to have these lands cut up into small pieces and made fertile and productive. The obstacle to the growth of our city will be removed, and the interests of all parties will be advanced. What I want you to do here to-day is to "let my people go." Let them have their rights, as white people enjoy their rights, and as these red men are entitled to enjoy theirs. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that this paragraph and amendments are to go over until to-morrow.

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. What further time have I, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has five minutes left.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to ask the gentleman from Washington to let the matter go over.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I desire to reserve the remainder of my time, with the exception of such time as my colleague [Mr. WILSON] desires to consume.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, it is hardly necessary, nor would I be able, to add anything to what my colleague, the gentleman from Washington [Mr. DOOLITTLE] has already said, relative to the removal of the restrictions upon the Puyallup Indians. A single word in this connection, however, may be of some benefit to the committee in determining its action upon this question, which is of so great importance to a portion of the State that I in part represent.

In the Fifty-first Congress, at its first session, I secured an appropriation to send a commission to see what was for the best interest of the Indians on the Puyallup Indian Reservation. The commission made a report and submitted a map, of which I wish every member of this committee might have a copy. Could we have had action on the part of Congress at that time, we would have been able to dispose of these lands for at least a million dollars more than we would now be able to dispose of them. The appraisement of the Puyallup Indian lands by this commission was $3,322,184.50. The great body of those lands could have been sold at that time.

While there were some differences of opinion as to the manner in which the money should be controlled, if we could have had this restriction removed we would have placed sufficient money somewhere, either in the hands of the Indians themselves or in the Treasury of the United States, to have supported them and their offspring for all time to come. We could have dispensed entirely with the appropriations made in this bill for the education of the Puyallup Indians and for incidental expenses and for that agency there, in all amounting to some $16,000.

Now, you must understand that it is not the intention to dispose of all of the lands. The Indians will still have a sufficient amount. It will push them farther back, but they will still have sufficient land. Gentlemen will see by examining this map that there is a very narrow place here for the railroads to come around into the city of Tacoma. Every railroad that comes in there has to cross this reservation. The location of this reservation has stopped the growth, progress, and development of a city of 40,000 inhabitants.

It will be observed that in 1886 patents were issued to the Puyallup Indians under authority of the sixth article of the treaty with them, and that the title was vested in the patentees with certain restrictions upon its sale, which restrictions a State in which these lands might be situated could remove, but not without the consent of Congress. These restrictions were removed March 22, 1890, and it now remains for Congress to give its consent or modify those restrictions as it shall see fit.

Certain conditions make these lands of great value. They are two or more miles fronting on the water and adjoining the limits of Tacoma City. That city lies on the southwestern shores of Commencement Bay, and the reservation on the northeastern shore. The bay in front of a large portion of the city, being from 2 to 2½ miles wide, furnishes a harbor of unusual commodiousness and safety. These few Indians are the owners in fee simple of this valuable land, which is of immense value to the growth and future of the city of Tacoma. The great body of it is absolutely unused by them, and most of it is in a state of nature and covered with a growth of timber.

That it is a great drawback to the growth of Tacoma to have such a large area of unoccupied land hindering its commercial, manufacturing, and social development needs no argument from me. Not only is this state of affairs extremely detrimental to the city of Tacoma, but it is also seriously affecting the growth and prosperity of the entire Puyallup Valley. This valley lies east of the reservation, and in productive capacity is unexcelled by any equal area in the United States. These lands are in a large measure devoted to the raising of hops, a very important industry.

To allow the Puyallup Indians to sell their lands would not be forcing them to sell them. It would only be giving them a right to sell, and they could by disposing of portions of their lands develop other portions. As it stands the lands are not doing themselves or anybody else any good. They are not able to improve the property, and are simply "land poor." If an Indian could sell half or any other portion of the land which he holds, he could obtain capital sufficient to clear and otherwise improve the other half. To allow him to sell, I repeat, is not to force him to sell all or even a part. To hinder him from selling keeps his lands tied and hinders him from doing anything to ease his way through life.

With a pretense of kindness to the Indians they who stand in the way of the opening of the reservation are doing the Indians great injury. They are hindering them from the common enjoyment of the common necessaries of life and sending them to their graves in poverty, and yet rich in something which they can not enjoy. Many a poor old Indian would die suffering for food and clothes, if the obstructionists could have their way, who might otherwise spend the balance of his days in comfort. Indians can not eat nor can they clothe themselves with fir trees, water frontage, or land, so long as these stand as they were placed by nature.

More than all, it is important to the city of Tacoma, in the broad and public sense, that this reservation shall be opened to occupancy and improvement without delay.

In fact, I might say in passing that all the tribes of Indians in the State of Washington are in a much better condition than those in other parts of the West. The white citizens of our State have treated them with uniform kindness and justice, and none of their reservations have been reduced or lands taken away from them without compensation and treaty agreements, and only one reservation has been reduced, and this by agreement between the United States and the Indians. The Neah Bay, the Nisqually, the Quillayute, the Puyallup, the Yakima, and the Colville Reservations all remain the same as guaranteed to them by treaty.

But while this is true, Mr. Chairman, that the State has treated the Indians with great justice, so rapidly has the increase and development of the great State of Washington been that something must be done and done immediately to reduce these reservations and throw them open to white homestead settlers; and this is notoriously so in case of the Puyallup, Colville, and Yakima Reservations. As these reservations now stand, they are a blot upon the State, blocking progress, benefiting no one, retarding the prosperity of the Indians themselves. It is not only right, but it is the duty of the Government with determination and firmness to relieve the people of these barriers in the way of their future prosperity and development.

I admit, Mr. Chairman, that the lands of the Puyallup Reservation are valuable, but what has made them so? Certainly not the Indian, but the energy, enterprise, and industry of the people of Tacoma, who have built a great city upon its borders, and whose further progress and development is greatly imperilled by the failure of Congress to act upon the removal of the restrictions placed upon these lands; lands, too, unoccupied for any purpose and absolutely of no benefit to the Indian. It smacks very strangely, sir, of the dog in the manger policy.

By the removal of the restrictions placed upon them by the United States the sale of these lands would average something like $270 per acre, which would give the Indians a large amount of money, with which they would be able to cultivate the portion not sold; building homes for themselves and families, educating their children, and preparing themselves and children for the citizenship now conferred upon them by the Government of the United States. It remains for Congress to say whether they will proceed upon this line, or will continue to permit these Indians to exist in poverty and ignorance, although rich in lands that the paternal Government will not permit them to utilize for their own benefit.

I do not believe, Mr. Chairman, that these lands will ever be more valuable to the Indian than they are now, and I do believe that the sale of them is to his interest, both now and in the future; if I did not believe it I would not ask the adoption of the amendment offered by my colleague, Mr. DOOLITTLE.

The adoption of this amendment will not affect the section of land owned by the Indians as tribal property. It is known as the school section. It is not intended by the proposition of my colleague [Mr. DOOLITTLE] to disturb that in the slighest degree. That is already being disposed of in the way provided in the act of the Fifty-second Congress, at its second session, to wit, by platting it into lots and streets, the same as the city of Tacoma is platted and surveyed, and the money derived from the sale of that land will go into a common school fund, for the education of the Puyallup Indian children. So much for that.

Mr. CANNON of California. Is any portion of this land within the corporate limits of the city of Tacoma?

Mr. WILSON of Washington. No, sir; the corporate limits of the city of Tacoma come up to and join the Indian reservation. The limits of the city can not of course be extended any further. Now, at the time of the passage of this act to which I have referred, as has been said by my colleague [Mr. DOOLITTLE], we cut down the restrictions from twenty-five years to ten years. Two years of that time have already elapsed, and in about eight years more all restrictions will be removed.

Now, under that act a commission was appointed, composed of three gentlemen from Illinois, Ohio, and Georgia. I made some reference to the members of that commission on Saturday last.

It was our wish and hope that we might have an Indian Commissioner from our own State, who thoroughly understood the situation relative to these lands. These lands, some of them, border upon tide water, and are of immense value, some of them estimated to be worth a thousand dollars an acre for the purposes of commerce and trade, for the accommodation of railroads and steamboats. Yet they lie there the same as they did a thousand years ago, absolutely of no use either to the Indians or to the people of Tacoma, retarding the growth and commercial advancement of the city. Now, if we can remove these restrictions and have these lands, or such portions of them as the Indians may desire, put upon the market and sold, it will give them sufficient means to go forward and educate their children, and to take care of themselves.

Mr. NORTHWAY. What is the objection to this proposition? I do not see anybody urging any objection to it.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. The objection has been the same objection that is always heard on the opening of Indian reservations, to wit, that these lands are valuable—and we do not deny that. They are extremely valuable, and the objection is that the white people are seeking to take some commercial advantage of these Indians.

Mr. NORTHWAY. But I understand that these Indians are all asking this?

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Mr. Grover Cleveland, President of the United States, in 1886 issued patents to these lands, but put in a restriction clause that we could not alienate them for twenty-five years, or could not lease them for a period of more than two years. There was a petition praying for the removal of restriction passed by the Legislature and sent to Congress. They came to Congress asking consent to the removal of the restriction. This Congress denied. Then we obtained an appropriation for another commission to go out there. They went out, and we gave them $20,000 to enable them to make another report, and they are now there, enjoying the most magnificent climate in the United States and getting the sea breezes, while we are here sweltering and trying to get something done.

Now, what ought we to do? Say an Indian has 40 acres and wants to sell it; he can not do it. He can get nothing for it. He wants to dispose of part of it for $20,000 and improve the remaining acres, and he would be able thereby to get something very greatly to his advantage. What objection can there be to that. Here are 40,000 Anglo-Saxons, flesh of your flesh and bone of your bone, your own kin and kindred, who are seeking opportunity to develop their property and develop their interests and increase their commerce upon the public highways and navigation of the seas, and for the building of railroads; none of which they can do owing to the restriction imposed in this trade, and they are compelled to come to Congress asking some consideration at your hands. The present condition is unjust to all of these people——

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. I desire to ask the gentleman if it is not the case that the facts existed when other appropriation bills were being passed by former Congresses?

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Oh, yes; they existed in the Fifty-first Congress, and in the Fifty-second Congress, and in the Forty-ninth Congress, and in the Forty-eighth Congress. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. And do I understand the gentleman to say that this is the first effort that has been made?

Mr. WILSON of Washington. No, no. We made an effort in the Fifty-first Congress, and in the Fifty-second Congress; and we are here still fighting along to get something in order that we may take away these restrictions.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. I merely asked the gentleman for information. I am inclined to favor his proposition.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I desire to say to the gentleman from South Carolina there was a case tried by the district court in the State of Washington, the facts in which are that a corporation was trying to get a right of way through this reservation, and the troops were brought upon these lands in order to prevent the grading of the tracks that had been ceded to this company by these so-called Indians. Judge Hanford, of the United States district court, decided that the troops had no authority to prevent them; and we have the opinion of a judge of the United States court, which states that Indians holding these allotted lands have the right and authority to grant this right of way.

Now, then, an appeal has been taken to the United States circuit court of appeals from the decision rendered by Judge Hanford and has been tried recently in the city of San Francisco. This decision I undertake to say to this committee will have its effect upon all these reservations where the allotments have been made; and I have no doubt that the opinion of Judge Hanford will be sustained.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. You are asking for the privilege.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. We are not asking for a dollar, and I desire to say here, further, that this will lessen the expense of this bill and lessen the amount for this commission.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. I see you are only asking for the privilege.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Yes, sir.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Now, Mr. Chairman, in the limited time left to me I will state there is nobody asking for any land. We are only asking that the restrictions may be removed, and that if the Indian desires to sell his property the sale shall be subject to the approval of the United States district court; that the price per acre shall be approved by that court; and if the court thinks it not sufficient in price, of course he will not approve of the trade. It is all to be subject to the approval of the United States district court; and in this connection I wish to say that in all my State there is not a white man that desires in the slightest degree to take any advantage of these Indians.

The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HUDSON] shakes his head. I will give him a little history that he perhaps is not acquainted with. I desire to tell him that in every trade concluded with Indians, Puyallup, Tulalip, Yakima, Colville, and all the Indian reservations in my State they were treated fairly by the State of Washington. There is not a single acre of land that has ever been taken from an Indian by a citizen of that State unless by due process of treaty under which he has paid him dollar for dollar of its value. The Indian has not been cheated of a single dollar. I will conclude my remarks by adding the memorial from the city council of Puyallup on that subject.

APPENDIX.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America:

Your petitioner, the city council of Puyallup, Pierce County, State of Washington, respectfully represent:

That the city of Puyallup is situate about 9 miles southeasterly from the city of Tacoma, in the Puyallup Valley, on the line of the Northern Pacific Railroad.

That the Puyallup Indian Reservation abuts upon the western limits of our city and lies between us and Tacoma; that this vast extent of the finest land in the State of Washington lies almost wholly dormant, without cultivation, and is a menace to the growth of both our city and Tacoma, for the reason that neither can extend its limits beyond the bounds of the reservation in its present condition of bondage.

The reason for this condition of things exists in the fact that the Congress of the United States has not yet acted upon the petition and memorial of the Legislature of the State of Washington to remove the restrictions imposed upon said reservation; and the object of this petition now is to bring to the notice of your honorable bodies the necessity for immediate action in this matter, at this your present session.

The Indians upon this reservation are civilized and fairly educated, and are capable of managing their own affairs and, in our judgment, making a respectable living; but they are unable to do so at present for the reason that they are restricted from selling their lands or any portion thereof, or in any way incumbering them, and the communities surrounding them knowing this, and knowing that no indebtedness incurred by the Indians can be enforced against them, refuse to extend to them that aid and credit which would enable them to improve their farms that they might be able to maintain themselves in a respectable manner. They are practically homeless and without food or shelter, for the reason that they can not obtain credit for the necessaries of life on account of their lands being thus tied up.

Our State Legislature knowing these unfortunate conditions, and the absolute necessity for the prosperity of that portion of the State in which this Reservation is situated, promptly and in accord with the wishes of the people of the State and the Indians themselves, all of whom petitioned the Legislature to take action, removed the restrictions, subject only to the further action of Congress ratifying their act; and at the same time memorializing Congress to have the restrictions unconditionally removed.

It seems very unreasonable and unjust, not only to the Indians themselves, who are thus left in abject poverty, but to the State of Washington, and especially the counties in which this reservation is situated, that these Indians should be made citizens of the United States, subject to all its laws, with full right of the elective franchise, and yet that they should not have the right to sell their lands or in any way encumber them when necessary; and upon the other hand, that the State should be deprived of the revenues to be derived from these lands, whereas all other classes of citizens and their property are subject to taxation. These are crying necessities, which demand prompt action on the part of Congress in removing these restrictions.

We, who are here among the Indians and who are their neighbors on each side, can see the absolute necessity for the prompt action of Congress more plainly and certainly than anyone else, and we are better qualified to judge of the necessities than those who live away from us; and it is for these reasons, herein set forth, that we earnestly petition your honorable bodies to take early and immediate action in unconditionally removing these restrictions, for the benefit of the Indian, the people, and the State.

And we will ever pray.

Adopted by the city council, January 18, 1892.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks that this paragraph with the amendments offered by himself and by the gentleman from Washington go over until to-morrow, with the point of order reserved.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Wyoming: For general incidental expenses of the Indian service, including traveling expenses of agents, $800.

Mr. COFFEEN. I see that in Wyoming, instead of giving $1,000, the committee gives $800 for incidental expenses. I do not wish to make any improper amendment; but I think that $1,000 would be nearer the proper amount than $800 for our expenses, and therefore I move to strike out the word "eight" and insert "ten."

Mr. LYNCH. The estimate is only $1,000.

Mr. COFFEEN. That is a pretty small sum for taking care of the Indians of Wyoming.

Mr. LYNCH. It is for the incidental expenses of the Indian service, including traveling expenses of agents. A thousand dollars is all they asked for.

Mr. COFFEEN. Let us make it $1,000. If they want $1,000 and ask for it, I think they ought to have it.

Mr. LYNCH. The Commissioner's estimate is $1,000 for this purpose.

Mr. COFFEEN. Then we better give it to them.

Mr. LYNCH. I do not know any reason why we should not.

Mr. COFFEEN. Then I move to strike out the words "eight hundred" and insert "one thousand," so as to make it conform to the estimate.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 10, line 44, strike out the words "eight hundred" and insert "one thousand."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

To enable the President to cause, under the provisions of the act of February 8, 1887, entitled "An act to provide for the allotment of lands in severalty to Indians," such Indian reservations as in his judgment are advantageous for agricultural and grazing purposes to be surveyed, or resurveyed, for the purposes of said act, and to complete allotment of the same, including the necessary clerical work incident thereto in the field and in the office of Indian Affairs, and delivery of trust patents, so far as allotments shall have been selected under said act, $30,000.

Mr. COFFEEN. I move to insert after line 4 the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting after the word "dollars," in line 4, page 45:

"For the purpose of conducting negotiations with the Shoshones and Arapaho Indians for the sale and relinquishment of certain portions of their reservations in the State of Wyoming to the United States under charge of a commissioner to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior, or he may detail an Indian inspector to conduct such negotiation, and there shall be appropriated the sum of $3,500, to be immediately available: Provided, That any agreement entered into for said land shall be ratified by Congress before it becomes binding."

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, for the present I will have to reserve the question of order upon that proposition. There will be a meeting of the committee to-morrow morning. It has not been considered by the committee, and after it has been considered by the committee, why we will determine whether to press the point of order or not.

The CHAIRMAN. The chairman of the committee asks unanimous consent that the matter may go over until to-morrow with the point of order pending against the amendment.

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I move to strike out "thirty" in line 4.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that by unanimous consent that goes over until to-morrow.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. And will be subject to amendment then?

The CHAIRMAN. It will.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the construction, purchase, and use of irrigating machinery and appliances on Indian reservations, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior and subject to his control, $30,000.

Mr. PICKLER. I offer an amendment that I send up.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting at the end of line 8, page 45, the following:

"Provided, That a sum not to exceed $5,000 may be used in completing three artesian wells at Pine Ridge, Rosebud, and Standing Rock Agencies, this amount in addition to the sum appropriated for that purpose by act of March 3, 1893."

Mr. PICKLER. It will only take a moment.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I desire to offer an amendment to perfect the text. I will say to the gentleman from Indiana that this is liable to lead to some debate; and it seems to me that he had better move that the committee rise.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let us hear the amendment first.

Mr. PICKLER. I think there will be no objection to the amendment that I have offered. Under the act of March 3, 1893, $15,000 was appropriated to put down three artesian wells at three different agencies. That amount has been found insufficient, and I only ask that $5,000 of the amount appropriated in this paragraph be used in addition to that to complete those wells.

Mr. HOLMAN. Not in addition to it, but out of this sum.

Mr. PICKLER. Yes; out of this sum.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to suggest to the gentleman from South Dakota that there will be a meeting of the Committee on Indian Affairs, of which he is a member, to-morrow morning, when we shall consider this subject. I have no objection to this.

Mr. PICKLER. I spoke to the members of the committee informally about it, and I do not think there will be any objection to it. The $15,000 is not sufficient.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Does not that amendment mean that you propose to take one-sixth of this appropriation and apply it in your particular district?

Mr. PICKLER. No, sir; it means that we shall take, if necessary, $5,000 more to complete these wells. Two of them are in my district and one in North Dakota.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Has the fund been exhausted?

Mr. PICKLER. No, but they can not make the contracts satisfactorily without an additional appropriation.

Mr. HOLMAN. I suggest to the gentleman from South Dakota that there is another fund which is owned by the Sioux Indians from which this money can come. I have no objection to the appropriation myself.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. If my friend would make an additional appropriation of $5,000 for this purpose I would not feel inclined to object, but I do feel slightly like objecting when he proposes to take one-sixth of this $30,000, although he has not more than one-twentieth of the Indians, and to apply it to this particular work.

Mr. PICKLER. Certainly the gentleman would not say that when we have appropriated $15,000 for this work it should be left unfinished for want of a few thousand dollars more.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I agree with the gentleman as to the amount of the appropriation, but he knows that this kind of work is just as necessary for the people in my part of the country and probably more so than it is in his, and it seems to me that to take one-sixth of this $30,000 and put it at one or two agencies is hardly fair.

Mr. LUCAS. This would not be more than the proportion that the State would be entitled to, at any rate.

Mr. LYNCH. I understood the gentleman from South Dakota to say that if an appropriation was made for this purpose it should be taken out of the Sioux fund, and I understood him to express the opinion that the Indians would not object, but would be rather glad to have a chance to use the money in this way.

Mr. PICKLER. It was taken out of this fund the last time, and I thought there would be no objection to this proposition now.

Mr. HOLMAN. These wells are located at the schools, I understand?

Mr. PICKLER. Yes, sir; at the three schools.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think there will be no trouble about it.

Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. O'NEIL of Massachusetts reported that the Committee of the Whole having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 6913)—the Indian appropriation bill—had come to no resolution thereon.

CORRECTION.

Mr. COFFEEN. Mr. Speaker, I wish to correct the RECORD. In the list of public bills introduced I find a bill (H. R. 7438) reported as introduced by me. That bill was introduced by request, and that statement was plainly written on the document.

I ask that the RECORD be corrected so as to show that the bill was introduced by me by request without any indorsement on my part of its provisions.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

REPRINT OF A BILL.

Mr. OATES, by unanimous consent, obtained an order for a reprint of the bill (H. R. 4617), the edition being exhausted.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.
